Epiphany

N everything that reveals the greatness of God in lowly lives, in every act of devotion which brings our riches and our privileges to serve the poor, in every great self-giving which takes all that we have received and holds it in trust for the disadvantaged peoples in our own lands and in the non-Christian lands, in every place and in every circumstance where we can bow down and worship God's presence in the midst of seeming lowliness---there we have followed the gleam which God has kindled in our hearts for greater revelation of His truth."

— Thoughts —
For the Thoughtful

Many a supposed giant has turned out to be only a shadow.

All love asks is the privilege of doing its best.

A "green old age" is generally the proof that man has lived well.

When this new star appeared, these, the Magi, were already gazing skyward. They were star-wise long before. The revealing Light came to those who had eyes to see!—Rev. E. M. Cross.

We must remember that the earth itself is every now and then among the stars. Everything about us should partake of this upward tendency.—H. Macmillan.

"Are we limiting God by asking for only what our small vision sees to be possible, or are we remembering that with God all things are possible—things that we can not even think of?"

"Would we hear the message we must at least be still; would we see the angel host we must at least turn our eyes heavenward; would we find the Redeemer we must at least seek the Child."

The inner man expresses itself through words and actions. Without many exceptions the rule holds true that what one praises in another is evidence of its possession by himself. Goodness sees goodness, badness discerns badness.—J. L. Moneton.

Men have ever talked of peace, dreamed about it, worked for it and prayed for it. Earth's brightest records are those which are concerned with the making and bringing of peace to mankind, peace in the home, in the workshop, in the state, and among nations.

That glorious Form, that Light Unsuperable,
And that far-beaming blaze of Majesty,
Wherein he wont at Heaven's high Council Table
To sit the midst of Trinal Unity;
He laid aside, and here with us to be Forsook the Courts of everlasting Day,
And chose with us a darksome House of mortal Clay.

God's leading is none the less real because it comes to us in quiet ways, and seems just the natural activity of our minds. His work in nature is through its operations, not over them, and in our lives He works within our spirits. We are constantly erring in our search for some external leading of God.—R. E. Spear.

The Christ-child unto the stable came "Twixt the midnight and the morn;
His mother laid Him softly down
By the beasts of hoof and horn.
And, little Brother of all the poor,
The friendly kine a-near Him stood
He slept in the fragrant hay.
In the frost of the early day.

THE CASTING OUT OF FEAR

In the Christmas season through which we have so lately passed we have been listening to the message which bade men long ago—and bids them still today—"fear not," but receive instead "good tidings of great joy."

When the pressure of our crowding life is close upon us, so that the world seems a hard and hostile thing, let us go back and picture the central meaning of the Incarnation. What does it mean for us to believe that the very

Spirit of God Himself came and dwelt in Jesus of Nazareth and lived our human life in Him? Does it not mean that there is some essential relationship between the glory of God and the concerns of the common day? The sweetest beauty of the story of Jesus as the Gospels tell it, is His intimate appropriation of all the fulness of human life and His power to find and make it good. For that abounding spirit of His, His Father's world was full of beauty and of friendliness. We fail to understand Him unless we think of Him as one with unbounded capacity for joy, the joy of a brave and eager and imaginative expectation. Nor was it only the Galilean lillies, the flight of the birds, and the glint of the blue waters of the lake, that He rejoiced in. He must have rejoiced also in the storm, through which His presence came serene and tranquilizing to the frightened disciples in the boat. He rejoiced at the marriage feast in Cana, and rejoiced as He rode into Jerusalem amongst the multitudes on Palm Sunday. But the time when He spoke most definitely of joy was in that last evening in the upper room, and even through Gethsemane and on to His Cross, His spirit went with that triumphant sense that nothing ultimately could defeat Him in the world which belonged to His Father's love.

We cannot imagine the Spirit of Jesus ever possessed by fear. No matter what conditions came, He was prepared to meet them unafraid. Have men and women, and fathers and mothers of little children, forgotten Him today? Must they go, shrinking and timid, through this great world of sunlight and stars, of human comradeship, and growth, and gallantry of struggle? Must they treat life itself as Browning disdained even to treat death? Would they "bid it forbear and bandage their eyes and bid them creep past?" Would they lose all the bigness and boldness of living through some pitiful little calculation by which they plot and scheme to escape the dangers of which they seem to think it is all made up? Surely in the lingering atmosphere of Christmas we may rise to a truer and a braver consciousness. This world into which the Lord Jesus came is full of beauty and nobility, and of glad challenge to the exercise of everything that is outgoing and strong in us. Our fears can treat this as though it were a devil's world. Our faith can glorify it as that world in which Jesus found, and can teach us to find the unfailing providence of His Father.

Fear begets fear; but love and the knowledge of Jesus' love can cast it out. Many have read in his book, and some may have heard from his own lips, the story of the life of the Indian poet and mystic, Mukerji. Listening to him, one can feel the deep and holy capacity of the human soul to deliver itself from needless fear, once its consciousness has widened to feel its fellowship with the great heart of life everywhere. The ferocity of animals towards man, he says, comes from the fear which is excited in them by the fear which men have in their presence; but let a

SOME NOTABLE CONTRIBUTORS FOR 1924.

It is a great privilege to be able to announce to our Southern Churchman readers that in forthcoming issues of the paper there will appear a series of articles by men and women whose names are widely known in the literary world of America. We have asked them to tell what seems to them—The Meaning of Christianity for Our Time.

Among those who have already graciously agreed to write for the Southern Churchman are:

Basil King.
Gamaliel Bradfird.
Channing Pollock.
Richard C. Cabot.
Margaret Prescott Montague.

We shall not expect that all our readers will agree with what all these writers may say. Probably they will not wholly agree with one another. But we are confident that their messages will stimulate fine, true thinking.

The first in this series of articles, written by Basil King and entitled "My Ideal of the Church," will appear next week.

man conquer his own fear, and they will pass by him undisturbed and undisturbing. He tells how he himself once went out into the jungle in the night, achieving once at least what holy men of India not infrequently do, and standing there under the shadow of the great trees, while the inaudible padding of numberless feet went by, he saw the jungle darkness filled with eyes—watching eyes that glittered down the jungle paths. But because he was able not to be afraid, the red flicker of fear and danger never crept into them. In the same way, one reads the stories of St. Francis calling the birds to him, and taming the wolf, and beholds there again the power of love that casts out fear. Are not these things symbols in God's visible creation of that which may be true of those invisible terrors before which men shrink? It is the fear of life's dangers that rouses those dangers and makes us vulnerable before them, and these modern spirits of ours, so often cowed, limited, enfeebled, can gain the full stature of their diviner manhood when the Gospel comes to tell us, through the Spirit of Jesus, of the friendliness of the world into which men and women go with confidence, because of the good tidings of the love of God.

For the fears which pervade our economic and international order also, there is needed the Gospel of great joy. The peril of our world today comes, not from any material cause, but from its state of mind. All the material wreckage of the war, dreadful as it was, can be made up if only the courage and elasticity of the human spirit endure. It is true that in that very fact there is a difficulty before which many people are ready to sit down in hopeless surrender. Men say, "if only the difficulty was material, then we could set to work to remedy it; but how can we grapple with a state of mind?" What can be looked for in the case of all these unfettered fears and hatreds but that they should take their inevitable course toward another war? Such a mood as that grows out of the habit of dealing so much with the tangible and concrete, and imagining so constantly that reality is bound up with things, that men have no competent skill any more in grappling with great forces of the spirit, yet profound alterations of the mind and heart of a people can and do take place. Benjamin Kidd, in his book on The Science of Power, dwelt on what he called "the emotion of the ideal." What Christianity must do is to bring to our society the emotion of the supreme ideal, the old ideal, forever new, of the reconciling love of God in Jesus. Men speak of it sometimes as though it were some vague matter of theology. It is instead the nearest and most intimate breath for daily life. What the Church must do is to help her men and women think life through in terms of those values which it finds in Jesus, and our imagination can teach us what those values are. It is possible more sensitively to think of every man or woman or little child as clothed with the dignity of a new concern for us, because we think of them in relation to Christ Whom henceforth we must find in even the least of these His brethren, and if that imagination which is awakened at the Christmas time can more and more be carried out by the deliberate purpose of Christian men into industry and business and the affairs of every-day, it will do what no laws, nor prison sentence, nor any machinery of repression can ever do;—it will still the discontent men feel, because it will take away the cause of it; it will remove the bitterness from the hearts of the unprivileged, because it will reveal to them a new purpose working through society, not first of all for money, but for the values of human life. Surely the one thing we need for our redemption is that men should think of others, not first of all as competitors, nor as economic rivals, nor as anonymous and impersonal members of some group which they have learned to hate because of the collision of its interests with theirs, but rather as human personalities seen through the softening light of the sympathy of Jesus. It is the Christian's business to make plain that, wherever he touches life, there the spirit is at work which is trying to build the actual good-will of human brotherhood which the Christmas angels sang. Christ came to save the world from hardness, from its human indifference, from its calculated and its unconscious cruelties, out of which rise such agonies of suffering and fear. And when men go out in His spirit to try to deal with business and their privileges in it as those who are keeping human welfare uppermost in their minds, then He will be the Saviour Whose new birth into our modern world is the desperately needed tidings of great joy.

And what of the fears between the nations? Is there any influence which can conquer these except the influence of Jesus? Treaties between diplomats will not do it. No imagined machinery of conciliation will do it unless there be the heart of reconciliation throbbing through what would else be the mere dead form. There must come the new spirit into our world, and it can come if Christians so appropriate the meaning of Jesus that rulers of the nations shall be compelled by the will of a Christian citizenship to act toward other peoples as men who see the sacredness of all humanity in the light of an indwelling Christ.

To our religious fears also the Christian Gospel comes. Why should men be so afraid that somehow the Gospel will come to naught because others do not see truth as they do? Taking the story in St. Luke as it stands, what was it that counted for the Shepherds, and what was it that counted for the Wise Men? They did not know anything of those beliefs concerning the miraculous birth of Jesus which are enshrined in the Creed. They did not know anything of men's theology about the Incarnation. They only heard a voice from God, speaking within their hearts the simple and profound conviction that One had come Who somehow should be the Saviour from our fears and sins. That is the same message which counts also in this present day. Let all preaching of the Gospel, all teaching and interpretation, be measured by this. Does it bring the Gospel of Jesus as the saving fact to life? Does it make Him actually the Redeemer through Whom men may be delivered today from the slavery of the world, from the bondage of their own inner inferiorities, from sins of the flesh, and from those worse sins of social cruelty which destroy the brotherhood into which Christ came and for which He died? No teaching, whether new or old, no complacency of orthodoxy nor pride of liberalism has any worth unless it does proclaim with power this eternal Gospel of the Saviour born to men. And if from any quarter of the Church, whatever be its name or title, this Gospel does come forth with power, then in that fact all Christian people can be delivered from their fears.

We must apologize to The Living Church for the fact that in an editorial quotation from that paper last week a printer's error changed the word "unconvinced" into the meaningless "unconceived." We ardently hope that our friends, the printers, have it among their New Year resolutions to stop making the needless blunders which they sometimes do make, since by that reformation both their reputation and ours will be bettered.

WHAT IS THE TRUE SPIRIT OF THE CHURCH?

A Discussion of the Tendencies Running Through the Present Controversy in Theological Thought

By the Reverend James Sheerin

PERHAPS the writer may pause in his work of looking at a few motes in other parts of the country and note in this letter the decided beam that is in his own home town, a duty that he has nevertheless performed on former occasions more fully than for the West or South. Some one has facetiously said, with reference to the recent theological excitement in New York, "Where does the Episcopal Church get its press agent? He is certainly getting it considerable front page space in the newspapers!" But it is of doubtful value to have attention that reveals us as almost hopelessly sundered by party views. In the past three years, we have had in New York tempest after tempest in the way of public notice, for the most part based on beliefs and practices that had gone so far from traditional Christian ways as to suggest either freakish tendencies or downright disbelief. The argument in favor of extreme actions and sensational words seems to run chiefly along the line of a laudable desire to reach the man outside the Church. That a few of his tribe had begun to attend meetings or services was taken as proof that the methods used were right. Some of the men using these newer ways and means have been called "Broad Church" or "Modernists." The chances are that neither Frederick W. Robertson, nor Dean Stanley, nor Phillips Brooks, nor Dr. William Reed Huntington would have recognized the breadth as legitimate, or even in some cases, as Christian. Nevertheless new times do require new means, and all allowance must be made downtown historic churches which were dying for want of people, and that have gained a degree of popular success by trying something else than the stereotyped and traditional. A good many of us would have favored the new and sensational ways more if we had felt that back of them lay an enthusiasm for the Founder of the Christian Church, on Whom we still feel that future success depends, but that desirable enthusiasm seems secondary to other things.

It is a mistake to take strong individualists like Drs. Grant and Guthrie as Modernist leaders even though their works are modern enough. Over and over the issue has been confused by the newspapers picturing Dr. Grant as "the leader of the Modernists." He himself denies this, and intimates, what is the decided truth, that he does not agree with Modernist theology. It would be hard to say where he belongs, but it is a fact that he can only be made to fit into any kind of Christian philosophy by clever manipulation of sentences, such as is said to have been used for him by Prof. Tyson in the famous Grant reply to Manning.

In all this momentary heat of debate it should not be forgotten that New York is a headquarters of Episcopalian strength, unequalled by any other city, unless it be Philadelphia, and altogether apart from the mere lodging for the time of the National Council offices. Part of this is due to the money and influence of Trinity Parish, which has nearly one dozen chapels, as big as most parish churches, and has about thirty clergymen on its staff, a larger list than the average Western or some Southern dioceses. That Trinity's standard of Churchmanship has been distinctly "high" since the days of Morgan Dix is deemed a drawback by a majority in New York, and it undoubtedly does make elections to the office of Bishop rather one sided. The opponent of Trinity's rector begins with a handicap of something like thirty votes against him. It has also been a fact that Trinity's help has enabled High Churchmanship to become the standard of Saint Stephen's College, where a large percentage of clergy in New York's neighborhood have been trained. Little parish after parish has been enabled by similar subsidies to keep up a type of ritual that a majority of the people possible to reach could not or would not endure.

But, besides Trinity, with its system of big parishes within a big parish, there have been extraordinarily powerful single Church parishes, where the norm of Christian work has been more decidedly Protestant or Evangelical. At one time St. Mark's was in this category. The present rector tells me he is not interested in making Episcopalians one thing or another, and his deeds do not belie him. St. George's was also in the group, and to a good degree, is still there, though its former and present rectors are Modernists in the sense of opposing all Biblical miracles. The three that have stood strongest for a fairly "old-fashioned" and very successful Christian and Protestant practice are Grace Church, St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas'. There is, of course, a difference. For example, at St. Thomas' the Eastward position is used, and the clergy use academic hoods, with a few other accessories of what used to be called High Churchmanship. The rectors since the War Between the States have been "higher" in theory than in Grace or St. Bartholomew's, largely because of a conservative tendency in theology and a stronger liking for external dignity. When his name was up for election to the New York Bishopric, newspapers referred to Dr. Stires, the present rector of St. Thomas', as "the Low Church candidate." The probable truth is that he is a High Churchman with a heart. He adds to this Churchmanship an extraordinary ability to brother everybody in the Evangelical fashion, and to make an extemporaneous prayer in beauty of language that no High Churchman could accomplish. In preaching he emphasizes Christian practice rather than theory and he does it well.

Grace and St. Bartholomew's have been somewhat alike in having rectors who were up-to-date in the sense of freely accepting reasonable Higher criticism and scientific applications of Christian truth; therefore, they could be called Broad Church parishes. Along with this there always went a loyalty to evangelical ideas of Christian doctrine and worship.

There were other important churches somewhat like these, such as Heavenly Rest, St. James', Calvary and the Incarnation, in varying degrees. One could say truthfully that it was mainly from these leading, well organized, Churches that missionaries in the West, as well as in foreign fields, were supported. Their rectors exercised an extraordinary influence. Dr. Rainsford boasted that he had successfully named more men to rectorship than any Bishop in the Church. Dr. Huntington never boasted, but every one knew how completely he influenced affairs in the whole Church. Between these powerful men, backed by loyal and wealthy parishes, with a background of numerous endowed institutions, few, if any, cities in the world could show the Episcopal Church at its best as well as New York could and can.

In judging of things in New York one has to take what I have here described briefly into consideration. The chief rectors in New York are visited all the time by perplexed clergy from all parts of the country, and by no means are these limited to troubled Episcopalians. Naturally such a rector does not stand in the same awe of a Bishop that the average poor fellow whose shifts of parishes are so sadly frequent. The heretical excitement of the hour in New York found its immediate cause in the doings of two Texas cities. In Dallas some Bishops met, enough to call it a "House of Bishops," and they issued a pronouncement on doctrine meant to regulate the teachings of Episcopal clergy all over the United States. Soon after, there came the news that a clergyman from Fort Worth, Texas, was to be tried for heresy because he had implied that there is room in the Episcopal Church for those who believed in the Incarnation as a valid truth apart from the additional doctrine of the Virgin Birth.

Dr. Park's appearance on the scene, in such dramatic fashion, was a rather noble thing for him. He was secure in his own field. He did not have to fight. When in Boston in the eighties, even under the nose, as it were, of the phenomenal Phillips Brooks, he drew a large congregation to hear him. In New York he has the united support of people who fill an unusually large church every Sunday, which they had built at a cost of millions. His eye-sight is failing him, and he could well afford to enjoy his great honors and keep out of ecclesiastical trouble. But, stirred by what he regarded as an unnecessary Episcopal fulmination, and by the threat to make a practically defenseless young clergyman an example of a duly punished heretic for what he regarded as a commonplace of liberty in teaching, he came out and challenged the Bishops to "take a bigger man," Bishop Lawrence, Dr. Worcester, or himself! The Times next morning had a large front page heading, "Dr. Parks flouts the Virgin Birth." This popular newspaper has several times of late presented its Church news in an ultra sensational way. There are those who suspect it of a desire to ridicule the Christian Church, the owner being a very wealthy Jew, but it seems to me that its faults are chiefly owing to a poor maker of headings, for a careful reading of the words of Dr. Parks do not bear out such an unworthy word as "flouting" anything. Having heard the address myself I can vouch for its having been a fair presentation of the various ways of taking the subjects of Virgin Birth and Resurrection. He took no sides, but added that for years he had taught the same as the Texas man was reported to have said, that one could believe in the Incarnation as well without as with the fact of Virgin Birth.

Since this sermon, which was the longest I ever listened to, having exceeded an hour in delivery, numerous Modernists have appeared in the press as going the good Doctor one better, and at this writing no official action has been taken for or against the varying views. Some of our "Catholic" brethren are quite positive that all Modernists should forthwith get out of the Church, just as others have at times invited them to make the same exodus. Dr. Delaney, acting rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, wastes no words in expressing himself. He simply says, "If they believe what they say, why don't they get out of the Episcopal Church?" It is interesting to note in that connection that Dr. Delaney himself only came to the Episcopal Church from the Presbyterians, after he had attained manhood. He told me once that he came into the Episcopal Church through the very ritualistic church of the Advent, Boston, and did not at the time know that we had any other views or practices than he found there. It seems rather a pity that, as a Church, we are largely "run" just now by extreme "Catholics" of this sort. The various women's organizations who want to know the truth about the Church almost invariably seek a Mrs. Romanes, now a Roman Catholic, or "Fathers," like Hughson, Huntington, Delaney or Officer, some of whom have not left us yet. The result is that there is growing up a generation who do not know the beauty and strength of Protestant Churchmanship. This is often the work of new Churchmen whose aesthetic or monastic views have dominated all about them, and who are hostile to all liberal views, or to the scholarship and ways of Christians of other names than Anglo-Catholic.

The real Broad Churchman, not the mere mingler of esoteric and non-Christian views of religious life, is apt to be a man of life-long membership in the Episcopal Church, whose ancestors were also of it. An inference can be made from this that there is deep down under all finer Episcopalianism an attitude towards religion and life that the new-comer does not always grasp, a something that makes an essential Episcopalian loyally broader than the average Protestant, not only in amusements but in human ways of thinking and acting. This is a bit of ecclesiastic theorizing of my own that I am only able to hint at. Conservative by nature, so that loudness and dogmatism are alike revolting, the typical Episcopalian of the last century is apt to have included in his breadth an unshakable feeling of respect for history and acceptance of a faith that leaves out no earnest inquiry after truth. His faith tends to an aloofness to the autocracy of Romanism, the emotionalism of Methodism, or the cocksureness of the mere theologian. There is also something in him, not always definable, that makes him more open to a social gospel. Perhaps this is a result of what is sometimes called his wordliness. This sort of Episcopalian is not overinclined, either, to accept the dictum of Dr. Tyson in the recent controversy, wherein he proclaims that "the Modernist has come to the realization that the abnormal events called miracles are not in any sense religious, but purely scientific, and should be set aside for scientific investigation, ultimately to pass on them."

The Episcopalian I am speaking of would rather resent this shunting of responsibility. The religious man has the right, and he is in peril if he does not use it, to reserve to himself the great privilege of making certain assumptions from facts or feelings other than those recognized by mere scientific investigators. It is this demand for himself that has set intelligent Episcopalians free and made them less likely to be stampeded by flurries of contemporaneous thought. It has also made them love their Church as a teaching Church, an educational authority inherent in the body, and not to be monopolized by one order of the clergy, nor indeed by the clergy themselves as such.

CHRIST'S PROMISE TO THOSE WHO SEEK THE BEST

A New Year's Sermon

By the Reverend Charles Wood, D. D.

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

Life appears so complicated and perplexing—there are in the sea over which we sail so many uncharted channels, so many cross currents—that there can be no certainty, whatever course we take, as to where we shall arrive. All are foredoomed to failure, except those who have extraordinary luck, is the feeling of all who have already failed, or who fear that failure is imminent. "All we can do is to shut our eyes and sail ahead with the resolve to take what comes without a whimper."

When Theseus landed on the Island of Crete his fate, according to the tradition in Greek mythology, was sealed. He was one of seven youths and seven maidens sent that year as usual as an offering to the pride of the Cretan King Minos. In the centre of the island there was a vast labyrinth in which was concealed a man-eating monster—the Minotaur. On the road leading to the labyrinth, all footsteps entered, but none returned. The Princess Ariadne, the daughter of Minos, pitied the young hero and thought it a shame that one so strong and brave should have so short a life. She put into his hand a sword with which he might slay the monster, and a silken thread with which, if he were victorious, he might find his way back. So equipped, Theseus conquered the devourer and returned in safety. Here in this sentence, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God," a sword is given us for protection, and a thread for guidance in the labyrinthine mazes of life. A sword of steel may snap, and a thread of silk may break, but the protection and the guidance embedded in the heart of this sentence can never fail. "Remember the profound and beautiful words of Jesus which would put an end to all our troubles and discords if listened to," said the French Lavaleye: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

This imperative, which is at the same time an exhortation and a promise, is also a principle which President Mark Hopkins, of Williams College, loved to elaborate to his classes and in his books, with a convincing array of illustrations. It is the principle or law that seeking the best, we secure also the good as a kind of by-product. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, as well as that which is to come."

We offer in illustration of this principle, and of proof of its universality, all the members of the Pan-American Scientific Congress, and all the archaeologists, historians and philanthropists who have made this city a world center for the serious-minded. Men supposedly of rare gifts and indomitable purpose, many of them, have made obstacles into opportunities. They are keen on the scent of undiscovered substances and forces. They have pried into mysteries; and scanned monuments; they have studied nature's methods and ways. The most successful of them are possessed by the same scientific spirit which made our own Professor Agassiz say, "I have no time to make money." The lover of truth and knowledge for their own sake never has. They think of money only incidentally. There are many other things which bulk more largely in their eyes, and which they appraise at a much higher value. They are on the lookout for things no one has yet found; for an antitoxin for grippe; for a cure for cancer; for some method of extracting energy directly from the air. Let them find what they seek, and wealth "beyond the dreams of avarice" will be poured into their hands. They are seeking the best, and securing it, they will secure also the good of which they have thought but little.

We may offer as evidence all artists, painters and musicians; all poets and specialists of every sort, as well as scientists. They are all alike seekers—so far as they deserve their titles—not of pelf, but of perfection—in color, in harmony and in a thousand unspecified ways. The greatest of these "dead but sceptered sovereigns whose spirits still rule ours from out their urns" cared nothing whatever for money or fame. They painted pictures; they composed symphonies; they carved statues; they wrote poetry; and not one of them was a multi-millionaire or a popular favorite in the day in which he lived—it may be. But who has added so much to the wealth of Italy as Raphael and Dante? Who has enriched Austria and Holland like Handel, Beethoven and Reubens, or Germany like Wagner, or England like Shakespeare and Milton? They might have had, if they had insisted upon it, the revenues of provinces, the perpetual praises of admiring multitudes; but of all this they thought little.

While we may see that there is at least a semblance of truth that both money and fame may come as by-products to those who have sought for nobler and better things; yet when we come to power, which all men desire, must we not confess that the principle, which was supposedly in this text, no longer works? To get power, men are now convinced we must have "the will for it," and make all else subservient to it. The popular school of Nietzsche raises the cry when it is suggested that "the will to serve" is a sign of a higher civilization than "the will to power"—"Remember Jesus Christ and where His will to serve brought Him, and where it will bring every one who accepts His theories of life." "We frankly confess we want a throne, not a cross; we want crowns of gold, not crowns of thorns." But for power, splendid, enduring and wide-sweeping, has any throne yet raised upon the earth anything to show in comparison with the power of the cross? What pygmies all the conquerors and kings the world has seen are when measured against the King whose throne was a cross, and whose crown was of thorns! Though men may rob Him of His divinity, they cannot succeed in robbing Him of world-wide sovereignty. The American sculptor, W. W. Story, may have thought of Christ as a mere man; but his indignant protest rings in the ears of those who would minify Christ's power and triumph compared with the victories of the world's heroes:

"Speak, History, who are life's victors? Unroll thy long annals and say:
Are they those whom the world called it victors—who won the success of a day?
The martyrs or Nero? The Spartans who fell at Thermopylae's trust?
Or the Persians and Xerxes, His judges, or Socrates, Pilate or Christ?"

A man may have the strength of many giants, and the subtlety of countless serpents, but he can neither crush this law under his feet nor wriggle out from its minute meshes.

What life has made clear to us on the lower planes where money and fame and power stands out so clearly against the sky line, Christ explains, is equally true everywhere. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness"—make this Kingdom of God the kingdom in which God's rule is joyously accepted by loyal hearts, the kingdom in which righteousness is primary and all success separated from righteousness is but a shadow without substance, your first object and aim—"and all things shall be added." "An ultimate end is that which we seek for its own sake, as good in itself." This kingdom is to be, Christ says, such an end. "A supreme end is an ultimate end made by us paramount to all others." Christ tells us that this kingdom is to be, not only an ultimate, but a supreme end. He does not say that we are never to concern ourselves with any secondary end. The disciples He taught taught their disciples that though a man insist upon it, he is seeking this kingdom and nothing but this kingdom, yet "if he will not work, neither shall he eat." Make this kingdom the primary and fundamental purpose, object and aim of life, and all those things which we are accustomed to classify as necessary will be added.

Some of our friends smile as we assert a principle of this sort, but they do not hesitate to acknowledge that if any one can be so simple or so credulous as to accept it unreservedly, the results will be inevitable. "You must understand," they say, "that there is nothing mysterious about it." "It is the result of cause and effect. If you walk in the spring in a forest or a garden you will come back with sweet odors in your garments." "If you live in close contact with spiritual things you will carry a spiritual atmosphere with you—unconsciously, without any direct effort on your part whatever." "If you believe that there is a city which hath foundations, which is infinitely more glorious than any of the cities of earth—if you seek for that city, even though it has no existence in reality, you must become the unconscious possessor of qualities such as veracity, integrity, industry, sobriety, self-control." These are the qualities without which no one need apply for employment, even to men who think the kingdom of which Christ talks is altogether Utopian and Arcadian. "But such a faith as that of yours, groundless as it may be, and as we think it is, will, of course, save you if you honestly accept it, from servility and covetousness, from subserviency, pride and envy, from appetite, animalism and anxiety. "Dependence upon a God who may be only imaginary, and upon His will, of which in point of fact we are entirely ignorant, must make any man what the Puritans in Cromwell's Ironsides were."

"Such a man, so far as he is logical, will put religion in what religious people call 'the right place.'" "We of the world have a place for religion. It is the place to keep it in cold storage, to be brought out on special occasions like funerals and weddings, Thanksgivings, and opening of Congress. We arrange a few of the best specimens of it in the shop window where they present a brave appearance in the eyes of the passers-by. Religion, as we think of it, is an article much too rare and fine for the rough and tumble of daily life. But if a man starts out to be a Christian, he must put his religion where Christ wants it, not in the most prominent place, but in the most significant place. It must be like the rudder of a ship, though out of sight, giving direction to the whole mass, whether it be a light and graceful yacht or a majestic dreadnaught." Such a man will win the involuntary approval even of irreligious men. When they are looking around for a trustee for their estate, or for a guardian for their children, or for a position of extreme importance in either private or public life, that's just the kind of a man they want. But all this, my unbelieving friend says, "is not an evidence that Christ was divine." "It merely shows us how very human He was, and how clearly He saw into the real philosophy of life, which is nine parts common sense." Everything that Christ said seems simple when we try it out and find how true it is—all his statements are universal, infallible and eternal principles.

Seeming exceptions to this promise to those who seek the best are only apparent. They are rather what some one has called "withheld completions." Our range of vision may be too narrow for us to detect final results. "In the long run," says Mr. Froude, "it is well with the good, and ill with the bad." It is true that every one of the charter members of the society called the Church; every subject in the kingdom Christ established probably met a violent death. Was not this promise an absurdity read in the light of flaming torches on the Vatican hill, every torch a Christian ensnared in burning garments? This, at least, must be said. Martyrs facing martyrdom had no sense of failure, and expressed no regret that they had trusted Christ unreservedly. Paul is their most eloquent spokesman. "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth then is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Ah, yes; in the future, but in the present—only the Mamertine prison and the headsman's axe at the Three Fountains! But he speaks again, and he is talking now only about the present. "I have all things and abound." We must accept such testimony at its face value. They believed that all things were added; that they had what they wanted. We might not agree with them, but on the other hand it is quite possible that if we saw as clearly as they did we should no longer want many things that we now desire.

Considering the cases of those who at the present time feel that they have not been fairly treated—that while they have sought first the kingdom and righteousness, they have been woefully disappointed in the results—something may be said. In all such cases there must always be an element of doubt as to just how far the seeming exception had fulfilled the conditions. This particular saint has failed in everything! Nothing has been added; nothing has succeeded. But was he a saint? Did he actually seek first the kingdom, or did he make a brave attempt to work the kingdom for his own interests, and was he found out? They who sought Christ merely for the excitement of being with Him, or for the purpose of getting bread without buying it, or working for it, had only a temporary and unsatisfying success—and they had their reward. Christ knew what was in man. He said, "You seek me for the loaves and fishes." Who serves God simply because he gets paid for it, or expects to get paid for it, does not serve Him at all. Whenever we hear the mournful complaint, "Lo, these many years do I serve Thee, and thou never gavest me a kid," we know that the service that has been rendered was not the service which is dearest to a father's heart. The man who says, "I have been a Christian from my youth up, see what God has done for me," may have cause for complaint, but the burden of proof is on his side.

Whenever we find ourselves in a mathematical mood, thinking of so many years of service on account of which so much surely must have been placed to our credit, we are apt to discover in some unexpected way that our account has been overdrawn. Our first supposition may be that we have committed a colossal error somewhere, but the error we have really committed may have been in our own eyes a very diminutive one. In spite of all our professions and protestations, we have had our eye on our own projects, which we are convinced are of more value to us than the Kingdom of God, its progress, development and extension. In our sub-consciousness we were thinking all the time of our personal aggrandisement, and yet expecting self-seeking to garner the rewards reserved only for self-surrender and self-sacrifice. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." This command, exhortation, promise, is once more impressed upon us, as many times in the past, heartily accepted now, on this first Sunday of the New Year, we shall have a sword for protection, and a thread for guidance whatever monsters may be waiting in the maze-like labyrinth of the future. "This clue familiar to our hand will lengthen as we go, and never break."

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF SOCIAL SERVICE WORKERS.

Mr. Editor:

The Fourth National Conference of the Social Service workers of the Episcopal Church will be held this year in Toronto, Canada, from June 21 to June 25.

Many people have an idea that Toronto is as far away as Point Hope. They do not think that about Buffalo, yet Buffalo is thirty miles farther from Chicago than is Toronto. From Buffalo to Toronto is one hundred miles.

I am stressing the accessibility of Toronto because I want the whole Church to be interested in Toronto. The greatest Social Service Conference in the world is to be held there next summer and we plan our own Fourth National Conference—this time the First International Conference, because the Anglican Church in Canada is planning to come in with us—to precede it.

At our Third Conference held at Washington last May, we had an attendance of two hundred and three, a representation from fifty-four dioceses. Every year increases the value and importance of this conference.

I ask your cooperation in getting the attention of the Church at this time because the diocesan conventions are beginning to meet and we hope that the budgets will provide for sending at least one representative to Toronto from the Department of Social Service of the Diocese.

I want also to invite social workers planning to attend the great conference, to come four days earlier and take part in the discussion of our own social service problems.

THE VERDICT OF THE MARKET PLACE.

Mr. Editor:

The following editorial paragraph from the Wall Street Journal of December 18 is representative of the views of some business men who are also Churchmen, and who believe that very simple matters of faith are made to appear involved just as we fail to think straight:

Ministers who don't believe what they professed to believe when they were ordained would resign their jobs if they had the self-respect of the business men they are only too ready to lecture.

It is not considered good business ethics today to retain a salaried connection with an organization with whose business principles and practice we are not in accord.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Editor:

As total contributions for the year 1922—the year whose leads its publishers to ask your assistance in overtaking and correcting the error as far as possible.

As the total contributions for the 1922—the year whose statistics are reported in the new Annual—amounted to $36,752,520.58 (page 496), and the receipts of the National Council from churches for the same year were $2,636,145.27 (page 108), the ratio which the latter bears to the former is not .027 as stated (page 12) but .072. The error occurred originally from the transposition of figures, but it was afterward carried into the editorial discussion, where it was stated that only two and seven-tenths per cent of the contributions of the Church were given to its general work through the National Council, whereas the true proportion is seven and two-tenths per cent—a much more creditable ratio.

The publishers especially regret this error because we recognize the impossibility of entirely catching up with it and correcting it. We suggest, however, that every reader make the correction in pen and ink in the Annual, page 12, where the error is twice made; altering "two and seven-tenths" on the second line to "seven and two-tenths"; and "a ratio of .027 to .973" on the sixth line to "a ratio of .072 to .928." Perhaps some will desire also to clip this correction and slip it between pages 12 and 13 for permanent preservation.

PUBLISHERS OF THE LIVING CHURCH ANNUAL.
December 27, 1923.

A PLEA FOR THE AMAZONIAN INDIANS.

Mr. Editor:

I left New York this afternoon en route for the Amazon, intending to go to Manaus, Amazonas, Brazil. From Manaus I go on to the tributaries of the Amazon, with the object of finding the various Indian tribes, and planting the Church among them.

Probably I shall go first to the river "Duvedo," discovered by President Roosevelt, where, by permission, a station will be settled and named "The President Roosevelt Memorial Station."

My intention is to go over the territory between longitude 48 and 75 West, and latitude 5 North and 12 South.

You will see this is a very extensive itinerary. I hope to found six stations and return to the United States for the Church to appoint the necessary Bishops, one for each center, which will be in the midst of and at a point conveniently situated to work a Diocese of about 1,000 miles, by from five hundred to three hundred miles in extent.

This effort of mine is a challenge to the whole Church. I believe it will do our beloved Church much good spiritually to take up this work with vigor. That the people want to do it, I have no manner of doubt. My extensive journeys among the home churches convince me of that. But some think it will be difficult to get the money. My own opinion is it will be harder to get the necessary men and women, who must be Christians of such a vigorous life as to enable them to impress the tribes who await our arrival with the Gospel.

The Church has the men and the money—query—Will both be forthcoming?

That the "heart" of the Church is right, we have no doubt. There remains the necessity of putting the operations of the Mission clearly before them. This I hope you will do, and help me to do. I am convinced if we speak well of Christ, His friends will rally round us.

Out yonder the men need the knowledge of the Redeeming Blood, and if the old, old story is but given them, I am not doubtful of the result.

It is dreadful to know that a territory much larger than all the United States of America is practically unknown to our folk, and quite neglected of all.

I shall rely on you to help me in my endeavor to undo the terrible effects of the past idleness of the Church in that place. These poor, wandering souls, in those immense forests, and on those large rivers, must be rescued and made a part of the great fold of God.

I can only do one man's work, but as pioneer, I am going through danger and suffering, that all have not the physique or the desire to court. Those who follow will not have such experiences, but can settle down to regular work on their stations, and so win millions of souls for Christ. Will our Church, the historical Episcopal, and the one true Church of God, lag behind and let others have the honor and the reward of the laborer during the heat of the day? Perish the thought! No! The American Episcopal Churchman will be true to type, and the Apostolic succession will be continued among those, at present, wild men, and we shall live to see them gathering themselves together in their churches and synods—Bishops, Priests and Laity, an earnest, eager body of witnesses of His power to save.

It is to be hoped many friends will be raised up for the Mission. I am going out, trusting in God alone for daily needs. But I am really rich, for my Father has promised never to leave or forsake me.

Letters can be sent me to Manaos, Amazonas, Brazil, and will receive careful attention. My secretary, the Rev. D. W. Curran, 1417 K Street, Washington, D. C., is always at your service.

Pray with and for us. Then God will send showers of blessing.

With affectionate greeting to every member of the Church, and praying that God will give us all a larger vision of our work and opportunities in His harvest field, permit me to remain,

Your fellow servant and witness in the Kingdom of God,

(REV.) F. A. JEFFERD,

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

LACK OF INTEREST.

AT every conference of Young People's Leagues or Fellowships, where the discussion introduces an analysis of failure the one question that is sure to be asked is this: "How can we correct a lack of interest?" Then follows a rather pathetic confession of those interested and eager: "We started out with fine enthusiasm and every one was vitally interested, but, now that the novelty has worn off, we find that a number of our members have 'lost their first love'. What can we do to restore the vital, throbbing interest which possessed us in the early days?"

It is a comforting assurance to know that the effervescence of youth is sure to simmer down and that the emotion of the first days must grow into a conviction in the latter days before any secure and vital work can be done. No organization was ever originated which did not suffer a similar experience, and yet it is a counsel of despair to feel that this is inevitable in the sense that interest cannot be reclaimed. Mistakes have been made and will be made, but one need not make the same mistake twice.

"Lack of interest" as a general rule is caused by a lack of program and a lack of preparation. Some programs diligently prepared fail to perform their function because they are not infiltrated with dynamic personality. The leader for the evening may be prosy, awkward, embarrassed, uninterested and thus precipitate the whole effort. The young people may have come in a spirit not at all conducive to an interested, earnest and helpful session. The physical environment of the hall or meeting room may be uninviting, poorly ventilated, badly lighted, uncomfortable. The rector or counsellors may intrude themselves into the program, destroying its continuity. Readers of papers or leaders of discussions may exceed their time and hurry the program unduly. The hymns selected may be doleful or unfamiliar, or the pianist utterly untrained. One is inviting failure to start out with such obvious handicaps.

Interest is vitalized with a carefully prepared program and this involves the cooperation on the part of every participant in the evening's exercises. No standard less than that of the public school should be tolerated in preparation of papers. One learns instinctively when an address is the result of original research and the consciousness of the responsibility for the task imposed. It is no little embarrassment to young people, if they are true to their age, to express their opinion in cogent and forceful language to one who treats his assignment lightly and who outrages the intelligence and exhausts the patience of the other members of the League with casual or indifferent preparation.

It is true that the younger members are frequently terrified at the prospect of vigorous criticism, but the counsellors can assist this group so that they shall be unembarrassed in performing an assignment within their capability. It is a wise thing to have a critic of the meeting and give him five minutes in which to review what has transpired. If the more mature members were given this office, and if they steer between the extremes of hyper-criticism and fulsomness, giving credit where credit is due and expressing disappointment by the same token, the preparation of programs for a Devotional Meeting will be very much strengthened.

Until morale is developed, the Hospitality Committee or the committee which has the program in charge for the Sunday night in question should see each member personally and if possible obtain his promise to be present at the Sunday night meeting. One way of "delivering the crowd," which never fails, is for a group who have automobiles to call personally for each member and conduct him there bodily.

A definite plan for work in the five fields is quite as essential as an expression of the religious impulse gained through the Devotional Meeting. Social service within the community offers a thrilling field, and definite work in any one of the fields will excite abiding interest.

Too often there is a lack of fellowship, because social distinctions are rigidly pressed. Unless we are a group of snobs, the Master's work will not be impeded by dragging into the societies of the Church the type of artificiality which often makes society life ridiculous and pitiful. Each has the privilege of choosing his own friends and intimate associates and inviting to his home whom he will. But in God's house, among normal young people, this obstacle should easily be overcome.

ANGLICAN YOUNG PEOPLE'S ASSOCIATION OF CANADA.

The leaders in the Young People's Movement will be interested in the following story of the A. Y. P. A. of the Church in Canada told by Mr. T. H. Hollingsworth, its President. This organization has been in existence many years. It is now relating itself to the G. B. R. E. (the General Board of Religious Education of the Church in Canada).

"The Anglican Young People's Association now has three hundred and fifty-seven chartered branches (June 15) throughout the Dominion.

"In an endeavor to keep in touch with the branches the Dominion Executive of the Association proposes to publish in the G. B. R. E. Bible Class Magazine, which will be mailed monthly to the Secretary of each branch; suggestions for each week of the program issued by the Council on Young People's Work. As a result of rendering this assistance we expect to have more cooperation and greater work accomplished by the branches.

"Increasing interest is being taken in Missionary and Social Service Work. One phase of the former has been the 'adoption' of children in the Indian Schools by the branches.

"Bible classes have been organized by many branches and an effort will be made during the coming season to have the number greatly increased.

"Most encouraging has been the ever-growing number of young men of the organization preparing for the sacred ministry and of young women for the work of deaconesses.

"A. Y. P. A. members on the Council on Young People's Work of the G. B. R. E. continue to serve faithfully and the special conference course on Young People's Work at the Summer School at Port Hope this year was conducted by W. R. Sproule, Vice-President of the Dominion Executive of the A. Y. P. A.

"The Dominion Conference at St. Catherine last October was attended by twice the number of delegates present at any previous Conference. This year we celebrate our 'coming-of-age'—our twenty-first birthday—and so for our Dominion Conference at London, October 18, 19, 20 and 21, the Executive has appropriately adopted the keynote of 'Leadership.'

"The existing Local Councils continue to meet with success and new Councils have been organized in London and in the Deanery of Waterloo, bringing the benefits of cooperative effort to the branches.

"An endeavor is being made to have in each diocese a Committee on A. Y. P. A. work, either of the Synod, as at present existing in Huron and Toronto Dioceses, or of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. This would be of great assistance in our work.

"We bespeak from the G. B. R. E. their cooperation in the formation of these committees and in the organization of Local Councils and branches of the Association.

"From the clergy we request their assistance in seeing that the branches observe faithfully and in proper proportion each principle of our Association—Worship, Work, Fellowship and Edification, as this observance insures the continued success of endeavors for Christ and the Church."

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

OUR MOTTO FOR 1924.

"Holly, Alone, Doesn't Make This Day Holy!"

Christmas—the day of heart, home and humanity; the day that all the world celebrates in spirit, regardless of creed or race.

"Who will take up the challenge that in John 3:16 we have the greatest Christmas message ever given to mankind? It means something!"

"Love must rescue the world from the hideous aftermath of war, but men would not know how to love victoriously if it were not for the great God-given message.

"The Christmas Gospel teaches us that every impulse of human love and brotherhood is the re-expression of that love of God which came to earth, new and beautiful, in the birth, life, death and resurrection of Jesus.

"Through our human efforts and desires throbb the pulses of the eternal purpose. The hope that some day there may be 'Peace on earth and good-will among men,' finds its strength in the remembrance of that love of God in Christ that will not be denied.

"Christmas comes but once a year—but its fine sentiment is not lost from one Christmas to another."

The foregoing is not taken from a rector's letter in a parish paper. It is not a newspaper reporter's condensed account of a Christmas sermon. In fact, we don't believe any of our readers could guess the source from which we quote it in a hundred guesses.

It is the advertisement of Miller and Rhoads Department Store, Richmond, Virginia, and it is the whole of that advertisement, except some marginal references to various Christmas customs, and the name and address of the firm. The advertisement appeared in our city daily newspaper, and this firm had to pay good money for the space it took. We are proud to know that this same firm is an advertising patron of the Southern Churchman, and we are also glad to know that their stores face on almost all of four city blocks, and are perhaps the largest in the South.

We do not say all these good words for them just because they patronize the Southern Churchman, but because we feel that in printing such an advertisement as the above on Christmas Day, they are setting a splendid example to the whole business world.

Our New Year's message to our readers is the suggestion that during the coming year our purpose should be to carry religion more and more into our every-day duties. It should be a thing that is with us all the time. In times past there has been too great a distinction between the Church and the home, Sunday and the week-day. People have been too much inclined to think that God lived entirely in the Church, and they met Him at the church door and left him at the office door. And in the same way that a strict observance of the Sabbath gave them leave to practice all sorts of trickery in their business life through the week.

More every-day religion in politics, business and social life, is the need of the world today. Let us make 1924 a banner year for making it more evident everywhere in every way.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY THAT COUNTS.

Among the many exchanges, that come to our desk from month to month, there is none to whose arrival we look forward with greater pleasure than a bright and cheerful little magazine entitled "The Maryland School News."

It comes to us from a manufacturing plant. The article turned out by this factory, however is quite different; not like those that are usually boxed and shipped. Its product is of the most valuable nature, yet when ready for transportation it does not leave by freight, express or registered mail, because when the last touches are put to the material used here, the final result is not a chair, aeroplane or automobile, but a good citizen.

Sometimes the material which comes to this institution is badly damaged before it is taken in hand, but with careful treatment from trained workers it seldom proves to be injured beyond repair, and as we have said above the finished product is of a value that it is impossible to estimate.

In the old days this institution would have been called a reform school, later the word "Industrial" was substituted for reform, but now a better title still is used and that is "The Maryland Training School for Boys." It is situated at Lockraven, about fifteen or twenty miles from Baltimore, and it is well worth the time of any one who is interested in the glorious work of saving souls to pay a visit to this school and see what is being done for the real reclaiming of lives which in the old days would have gone from bad to worse and inevitably have landed in state penitentiaries.

The magazine which they publish is really a gem of the printer's art, with a fancy cover design which varies from month to month, and is usually done in three or four different colors.

The literary composition, too, is as good as the make up. Thus in the Christmas number we quote the following greeting for the boys from our good friend and beloved co-worker, the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, City Missionary of Baltimore:

"I want to wish a Merry Christmas to all my boy friends in the Maryland Training School, and that means all the boys in the school. All the boys are looking forward to an extra good time at Christmas. Some will have earned the privilege of enjoying a trip home and will receive their visit from Santa Claus at the home fireside. Most of the boys will be on the hill, but whether at home or at the School, let us all enjoy the Christmas season and be full of the Christmas spirit. Of course, we should not be celebrating Christmas if it were not for something that happened more than nineteen hundred years ago. We all know the beautiful old story of the manger at Bethlehem. We know the Christmas Babe had to be born in a stable because there was no room for Him in the Inn, or Hotel as we would say today. If Jesus should come among us today, everybody would make room for Him and invite Him in. At least everybody would say that. But just the same a great many people keep Him out of the only room He wants. He wants to come into our hearts, into every boy's heart, to make him good and brave and true and happy. So while we are all trying to have a merry and joyous Christmas let us be sure to have Christmas in our hearts. Let us be really happy on Christmas Day because we pledge ourselves to be Christ's boy and intend to grow up to be Christ's men.

Your friend and Chaplain,

"Romilly F. Humphries."

And to show that its contents is not all of the most solemn nature we also quote the last sentence from a delightful page entitled "Loch Raven Ravings": "I can define the undefinable, unscrew the inscrutable, and draw a cork without a pencil: but I'll be jiggered if I can find out whose maternal parent is Mah Jong."

There are always items of news from the various cottages, for in this institution the modern cottage system with its small family group is shown to the best possible advantage. There is always an inspiring editorial, from Colonel Leon C. Faulkner, who is a natural born boy lover, and the last page entitled, "Wise and Otherwise," enables us to close this monthly message from this good and Godly institution with a smile and a prayer of thanks that in at least one state of our Union the value of a mischievous boy is recognized and his care and training is entrusted to the best possible hands and carried out in the best possible way.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.
Bishop.

The National Cathedral Campaign.

The campaign or crusade, as it has been more appropriately termed, for the raising of Washington's share of the ten million dollars for the Cathedral, was carried on from December 14 to 24, and its results bring to one's mind inspiring and heartening thoughts and a cause for thankfulness.

On Sunday afternoon more than $800,000 had been subscribed. The Bishop, at that time, believed it would reach the mark of one and a half million before the end of the time set. Better still than the amount was the way it came and from whom. The way has been in every case whole-hearted and in a spirit of appreciation of the high honor afforded. From whom has it come? From everybody, for everybody is represented. Every class and kind, Roman Catholic, Jew Protestant, those with no religious affiliation, business men, professional people, mothers, little children, all have taken a share in the great task of building a great Cathedral in the capital of the nation. The newspapers have given aid in putting it before the people, the laymen and women of the Church have given time and effort and the stonecutters themselves now at work on the building have desired to place their names among the donors. In the words of the Bishop of the Diocese, "It has been a great spiritual awakening for the capital of the nation," and in the words of another, "Marks a milestone in the maturity of the people."

The charter granted the Cathedral Foundation provides that the work of the Cathedral be not confined only to religious work, but that education and social service come under its direction. This phase of the undertaking has always been kept in mind and much has already been done to thus broaden the work.

Some of the parts of the building and appurtenances already provided for by donation are the baptistry, choir, sanctuary and library. This library, when completed, will be perhaps the largest and finest library of its kind, providing books of theology and religious books for study by clergy and laity who will have free access to them.

Since the manifestation in Washington during the week of the crusade there is every confidence that the Cathedral will be completed within five years.

The Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, rector of St. Luke's Church, Lebanon, Pa., who has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, near Washington Circle, will not assume his duties as rector of the church until the Lenten season.

Mr. McCallum was born at Ontario, Canada. He was educated at St. John's College, Winnipeg, Canada, and later graduated at Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., where he studied under the direction of Dean McIlwaine (now Bishop) of Minnesota.

Some of his charges have been curate and assistant at the University of Minnesota, rector of St. Thomas'

Church, Rawlins, Wyoming; rector in Glencoe, Ill., chaplain of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Field Artillery, which was assigned to the "Rainbow" Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, and rector of St. Luke's Church, Lebanon, Pa., from which he comes to be rector of St. Paul's. Mr. McCallum succeeds in this position the late Rev. Robert Talbot, D. D., whose death last May was so keenly felt, not only in his parish, but throughout the diocese, where he was much beloved by every one who had experienced the blessing of knowing him.

A Pastoral Letter.

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of New York:

My Dear Brethren:—

Serious questions are before the Church at this time. Let no one, however, be unduly disturbed. We have Our Lord's promise that the Church shall be guided by the Holy Spirit, and to the full truth of Jesus Christ this Church has always steadfastly borne witness. The position of the Church has not changed. No new statement of doctrine has been made by the House of Bishops. The Bishops have reaffirmed the teaching of this Church as set forth plainly in her creeds, and in her worship. The recent Pastoral Letter is the answer made by the House of Bishops to an important question formally presented by a large number of laymen. Any difficulties or questions which may be felt in any quarter should have full and careful consideration.

The present questions are serious, and must be met faithfully, but as Bishop of the Diocese, I ask that controversial discussion of them shall be suspended during the Christmas season, and that all of us, clergy and laity alike, give our thoughts to the message of Peace and Good Will and Brotherly Love which the Festival of Our Saviour's Birth brings to us.

A little time of silence and thought and prayer will be of help to all of us, and at the end of such a period we shall be better able to meet these questions rightly in the spirit of truth and love, having in us that mind which is also in Christ Jesus.

Faithfully yours,

William T. Manning,
Bishop of New York.

December 20, 1923.

The Christmas Season in New York.

New York was giving wide and deep attention to religious controversy, and Christmas was approaching. Bishop Manning sent a letter to rectors and other clergy, and to the newspapers, asking that controversy cease during the Holy Season. Instant compliance followed. Several rectors who had planned to preach on doctrinal subjects on the Sunday next before Christmas changed suddenly. Some who had permitted reporters to place sermon extracts in the hands of editors withdrew them.

Midnight services Christmas Eve were more numerous than in former years, and all were well attended. The newspapers reported that more people were in churches than on any previous Christmas. The poor were showered with money, and two hundred needy families were cared for through efforts of one newspaper. All prisons had entertainments and big dinners.

Preaching in the Cathedral Bishop Manning formed his sermons on the model of bidding prayers, and stated under eight heads what he prayed for as Christmas gifts, bidding the people to pray for the same.

It is announced that Prof. Dickenson S. Miller, of the General Seminary, has resigned to accept a place on the faculty of Smith College. The newspapers say there is relation between the resignation and the theological controversies now going on. Dr. Parks, in St. Bartholomew's, replied to a statement made by the Bishops at Dallas. In interviews following it he declared he said nothing he has not said for thirty years, and that he defied no one. St. George's rector said contributions to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine will not be forthcoming from liberal parishes, and was at once answered by a lay officer of the Cathedral, saying they will be.

The Christmas season over, the controversies are sure to revive. Many are saying it is a healthy sign when the public takes such keen interest.

Greer Court, located quite near to Columbia University, has cost $45,000 and is a five-story house with basement, accommodating ten students. It is the second Church Community House for young women, and fostered by the Churchwomen's League for Patriotic Service. Young men can enjoy the parlors and club rooms. At the formal dedication a large number of Church clergy were present. A purpose of the League is to multiply these houses in New York and encourage such ventures in other cities.

St. Mark's in the Bowerie, long owning St. Mark's Chapel, a substantial building on the far East Side, has created in it a Da Vinci Art School. It has just been opened and some fifty students are enrolled. The evolution of the school is curious. At one of the church's services held on Mazzini Day, the statue which now stands in the corner of the garden was unveiled. It is the work of Attilio Piccirilli, instructor in sculpture. It attracted attention among the neighbors, particularly the Italians of the colony. Dr. Guthrie suggested to the Rev. Fortunato Verdoja of his church that he arrange a series of lectures on the arts to be given by the group of which Piccirilli was one, in St. Mark's Hall.

As soon as the idea was put in motion the artists themselves conceived the project of the school and got the use of seven rooms in the old chapel, which was built in 1883 as a memorial by some of Peter Stuyvesant's descendants. The rooms have been fitted up and courses arranged at $5 a month.

St. Stephen's College, Annandale, had a Christmas gift of $125,000 to go toward endowment, or such use as trustees see fit to make. The president of one of the great life insurance companies left, in his will, a large sum to be distributed as trustees might think wise. One of these trustees is Mr. Haley Fiske, who is also much interested in St. Stephen's. The gift came from the fund named. President Bell is now sending out appeals for further gifts, in which he says the college is totally unable to receive students who apply, and is compelled to accept the few, turning away the many. The endowment is about $300,000.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Unique Services in Loudoun Churches.

Christmas Day was observed in all the Episcopal Churches in Loudoun County. St. Paul's, Hamilton, St. Peter's, Purcellville, and Mt. Calvary, Round Hill, had the unique privilege, for the first time in their history, of having as their preacher the Rev. L. P. Tsen, a native Chinese clergyman, with the rector, the Rev. T. D. Harari, a native of the Bible land. It is no doubt the first occasion of its kind in the history of the Diocese of Virginia and in America.

Mr. Harari, in his talk, stressed the right way of keeping Christmas as a day of real Christian joy and thankfulness for the gift of God in Christ Jesus.

He said he could not refrain from offering a great tribute to his native country that sent out the "Light" to the Far East and Far West, and that His heart was blessing the speaker and his hearers, mostly of English stock. Mr. Tsen, who is a graduate of Boone University, and who was ordained fifteen years ago, gave an illuminating talk and the new trend of thought was much appreciated by his hearers.

The Creed was recited by him in Chinese and then in Arabic (now the language of Palestine) by the rector; then by the congregation in English.

On Wednesday afternoon, the Palestinian service, introduced five years ago, was held at Christ Church, Lucketts. A new speaker from some far off place is there every year. Mr. Tsen represented China this time.

St. Mark's Church, Richmond, Opened.

Sunday, December 9, was marked in Richmond, by the formal opening of the new St. Mark's Church on the Boulevard, the Rev. William D. Smith, D. D., rector. Services have been held in the basement for the past year or more, while the main body of the church was under construction. After much delay in the making of the pews the work has finally been completed and an overflowing congregation bore witness to the general interest in the opening of the new building. The sermon was preached by the rector; the Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, and the Dean of Church Schools, the Rev. E. L. Woodward, M. D., took part in the service.

St. Mark's is one of the oldest congregations of Richmond, having been established in 1866, in a section which has since been given up to colored people. It was forced to leave its old location at the corner of First and Clay Streets for this reason in 1919, and the congregation worshipped in a public school building until they were able to enter the basement of their new church.

The new St. Mark's has already taken its place as one of the outstanding church buildings in the city. It is built in the Virginia Colonial style, the architects being Baskerville and Lambert of Richmond. The organ, built by the Hall Company, of Hartford, is said by many local organists to be one of the finest in the city.

Christmas Eve at Old St. George's, Fredericksburg.

The Sunday-school Christmas festival of St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, was a beautiful affair, of light, color and beauty. Altar decorations of massed poinsettia and white narcissi, with a lovely five-pointed Christmas Star, together with the wreathing of church-rail and reading-desk with evergreens, made of the lovely old chancel a thing of beauty, calling forth the unqualified admiration of the large congregation which filled the big church to capacity.

The carols were beautifully rendered, and the address of the rector, the Rev. Dudley Borghers, was listened to with rapt attention by the children. Mr. Boogher has the great gift of interesting and holding children.

A special feature of the entertainment was the presentation of the "Gift of Love" by the children of the Sunday School. The gift consisted of fruit, toys, groceries and other articles. So generous was the response to the Rev. Mr. Boogher's appeal that all less fortunate children and needy families of the parish were amply supplied.

At the close of the service every one adjourned to the Sunday-school room, where a real Santa Claus presented toys and candy to the children of St. George's, and all visiting children.

Confirmation in Truro Parish: At the request of the Bishop of the Diocese the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., visited Truro Parish on the fourth Sunday in Advent, and confirmed a class of sixteen persons at Pohick Church and five at Olivet Church. Bishop Tucker first visited this parish October 12, when he held a special service, confirming two persons.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomas, D. D., Coadjutor.

The White Christmas.

For several years the Church School of St. Andrew's, Norfolk, has celebrated on the Sunday just before Christmas Day a "White Christmas," adapted by Mrs. Jerome Taylor, a member of this church, from an old story, "The Legend of Cathay."

The entire chancel of the church is draped in white and a tree is placed in the centre, but the usual custom of having it hung with gifts for the members of its own Church School is reversed. Instead the children bring gifts themselves (often from their own cherished possessions) and lay them at the foot of tree in the chancel, to be given to other children less fortunate than themselves. Every child has also been provided with a tiny bag in which to put his offering of money. These bags are hung on the tree. They are of white material and the gifts are wrapped in white paper. The front half of the church is reserved for the children by a broad white ribbon across the aisle. A suitable program of prayer, Christmas stories, and hymns, assisted by a vested choir of children, accompanies the celebration.

Any one who questions the success of this innovation has only to observe the eagerness with which the children respond to it. It is a beautiful and inspiring custom and the rector, the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, has made it an annual one.

Fall Meeting of Norfolk Convocation.

The fall meeting of Norfolk Convocation was held at St. John's Church, Hampton, November 19 to 21. Convocation enjoyed Bishop Tucker and his helpful words of counsel.

Among other interesting features of Convocation were: A discussion of the Church's Program, Tuesday afternoon, by the Rev. Dr. Brown; an address on Social Service, by the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D.; Practical Observance of Lent, by the Rev. W. E. Cox, of Richmond, Va.; Confirmation (a) Effective Confirmation Instruction, (b) Holding the Confirmed, by the Rev. J. Scott Meredith; and lastly, an address Wednesday night on Modern Biblical Interpretation, by the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., of Richmond.

These subjects were discussed in a way that was instructive and inspiring to all present.

Following the custom of Central Convocation, each rector gave a short report of conditions in his parish, and of work done during the past year.

A recess was taken for a part of each afternoon, in order that points of interest might be visited, such as Langley Field, Hampton Institute, the Soldiers' Home, the shipyards and the golf links. These excursions were greatly enjoyed. Lunch was served both days in the parish house by the ladies of the congregation. The gracious hospitality of the people of Hampton was much appreciated.

Invitations were accepted to hold the meeting next spring at Virginia Beach and next fall at Onancock.

St. Thomas' Church, Clarkton, has recently had a very successful mission by the Rev. Herbert Tucker and their rector, the Rev. E. W. Mellichampe. Bishop Tucker recently confirmed twenty-five and offered a beautiful Prayer for consecration for the Community House to be erected.

The Community House was given by a member of the church, the building of which was made possible by the generous action of the men of the church and the community, in giving their time and labor, free of charge. The foundation of the house is finished, and the Community House will soon be ready for occupancy.

Hungar's Parish: On the first Sunday in Advent service was held in Christ Church, Eastville, for the first time since the building was closed for repairs.

The rector, the Rev. E. W. Cowling, congratulated the workers of the parish on what had been accomplished and called attention to other work needing to be undertaken and carried through.

The repairs on the building inside and out have been thorough, and the little church looks thoroughly restored and refreshed.

The Rev. Norman F. Marshall last March resigned that portion of his work in Greensville County, contained in Emporia parish. He retained the rectorship of Meherrin parish in the northern part of Greensville. Besides the two churches, Grace, Purdy and Holy Trinity, Jarratt, he is president of the Episcopal Home for Girls. He is living not in but near the Home, and his present address is Rural No. 1, Jarratt, Va. The Home is near Purdy, but due to a peculiarity of the postal service its proper address is as given for Mr. Marshall.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.*Young People's Service League Delegates Meet at St. John's, Roanoke.

Pursuant to a resolution passed at the time of the organization of the Y. P. S. L. in the diocese effected at the Lynchburg Summer School in June, two delegates from each League and from parishes contemplating League organization, met at the call of the Department of Religious Education in St. John's Parish House, Roanoke, December 28.

The program was opened by a devotional period, conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese, in which he gave them a searching address on the importance of life as a trust from God, and challenged them to carry on the high idealism of their Christian profession.

About fifty delegates attended the Conference, and after luncheon the Diocesan President, Mr. Lawrence Green, of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, delivered an address, urging the Young People to their best efforts, especially along lines of cooperation and of the extension of the League's organization in the Diocese.

A constitution was tentatively adopted and the Young People pledged themselves to send a splendid delegation to the annual conference at the Virginia Summer School, to be held at Sweet Brier in June, 23-July 4, 1924.

The conference was reminded of the promise of the several Leagues of St. Paul's, Grace and St. John's churches, Lynchburg, and of St. John's Church, Roanoke, to feed four dogs of the team of Deaconess Bedell of Alaska, and of the promise made in Charlottesville to assist the Rev. Mr. Chu of the Diocese of Hankow, China, in his work along the lines of agriculture.

The appeal for assistance in the Associate Missions field of Southwest Virginia was listened to attentively, and the meeting closed with a discussion of the causes of success and failure in Young People's work, conducted by the Rev. Karl Block, of St. John's Parish, Roanoke, Chairman of the Department of Religious Education.

It is felt that the Conference has established diocesan organization on a firm and enduring basis.

PENNSYLVANIA.Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.*Christmas in Philadelphia.

Christmas this year was made a special feature by the City Mission in its work among the sick, the poor, and prisoners.

Hundreds of Christmas baskets of food were distributed among poor families in all parts of the city on Monday, each basket also contained toys for the children of those families.

Clergy of the City Mission distributed thousands of Christmas cards among the prisoners at the Eastern Penitentiary and the County prisons, and among the sick and the poor in the city's homes and hospitals, and at the Home for Consumptives in Chestnut Hill. Tobacco and other gifts were distributed among those at the Home for the Indigent, Holmesburg.

In addition to the regular Christmas Day religious services at various institutions where the City Mission serves, there was early morning singing of Christmas carols at Byberry, where the city takes care of its mild mental cases. The carol singers went from building to building. During the week the City Mission cooperated with organizations of Churchwomen from a number of parishes in giving all the patients at the Philadelphia General Hospital a Christmas entertainment and festival.

Hundreds of children throughout Philadelphia and vicinity, without regard to denomination, were invited to view "The Little Town of Bethlehem," reproduced in miniature with all the scenes and characters of the familiar Bible story of the Nativity, which was on public exhibition every afternoon of Christmas week, except Christmas Day, in the Church House of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

The exhibit is the work of a widely known Philadelphia artist, and this was the first time it had been exhibited anywhere. Mrs. J. Alison Scott, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, arranged for its view, so that as many children in the city as could come might have the opportunity of viewing it.

One of the features of the exhibit was the daily singing of Christmas carols by members of the Junior League of Philadelphia, an organization of women who devote themselves to charitable work of all kinds. Under the direction of Mrs. G. W. Melver, different members of the League each afternoon volunteered their services. At half hour intervals the Junior League members lead the children in the carol singing, while through an arrangement of electrical effects, the Town of the Nativity was shown on Christmas Eve, at dawn of Christmas Day, and as the Two Anniversaries Observed.

A dual celebration, Sunday, December 23, at St. Peter's Church, Germantown, marked the golden anniversary of the founding of the parish and the thirty-third anniversary of the ordination of the present rector, the Rev. Stewart P. Keeling.

To commemorate fittingly these synchronizing celebrations the vestry of the church built a memorial Skinner organ, which was dedicated the Sunday before.

The exact anniversary date of the opening of the church in 1873 was observed on Friday evening, December 21, when a reception was held in the parish house by the clergy and vestry to members and friends of the parish. The speakers included Bishop Garland and Colonel Sheldon Potter.

Since the erection of the church a Sunday-school building, a rectory and a parish house, the latter a memorial to the Rev. Thomas Till Rumsey, the first rector of St. Peter's, have been added to the group of buildings.

Funeral services for their former commander, Colonel John A. Wiedersheim, were conducted December 19 by members of the George G. Meade Post, No. 1, G. A. R., at the Colonel's former home in West Philadelphia.

A delegation from the Order of Sparta and F. & A. M., No. 385, attended the services at which Bishop Garland and the Rev. Dr. David M.

Steele officiated. Burial was in Laurel Hill Cemetery.

Colonel Wiedersheim was an active member of St. Andrew's Church and belonged to the Church Club and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He was a prominent patent attorney and gained fame in the battle of the Potomac, in the War Between the States.

R. R. W.SOUTHERN OHIO.*Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D. Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. I. Reese, D. D. Coadjutor.Christmas Celebrations in Cincinnati.

Christmas services throughout Cincinnati were uniformly well attended. The Cincinnati City Mission distributed thousands of Christmas cards throughout the hospitals and other institutions. Christ Church gave the inmates of the City Infirmary a Christmas party. The Kiwanis Club had a celebration for the children of the Tuberculosis Sanatorium and a clergyman of the church made an address and led the service. The Church of the Advent, Walnut Hills, gave two Christmas parties, one to white and one to colored children in the West End, using the fine parish of the colored congregation of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Oxley, Missionary. The Young People's Society of the Church of the Epiphany visited several of the shut ins in institutions. Carol singing was very general. Midnight services in several of the churches were very well attended. Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," was sung at Christ Church and at St. Stephen's. Winton Place with capacity attendance. Deaconess Drant, of the City Mission, gave a party to the women prisoners in the county jail.

Miss Virginia Nell Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Baker of Hartwell, was married on December 27 to the Rev. Leon Frank Haley, rector of St. Luke's Church, Cleveland, Ohio, in her parish church, Holy Trinity, by Bishop Vincent, assisted by Canon Reade. The bride has been a very successful worker in the church for many years. A reception in the parish house after the ceremony was largely attended.

The Diocesan Convention of Young People's Societies will be held in the Church of the Epiphany, Walnut Hills, January 11, 12 and 13. Part of the program will be held at Christ Church and St. Paul's Cathedral. A large attendance is expected.

Several social functions are marking the leave-taking of the Rev. Dr. Frederick L. Flinchbaugh, retiring as rector of Calvary Church, Clifton, and going in a few weeks to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., as rector of St. Stephen's Church. A dinner was given him by his congregation and he was presented with a handsome desk. The congregation of St. Philip's Northside, gave him a farewell reception and a token of their gratitude for the many years he served that church in addition to Calvary.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.Meeting of Young People in Waco.

The Fourth Annual Council of the Young People's Service League of the Diocese of Texas will be held in Waco, January 18, 19 and 20. The Young People's Service League of St. Paul's Church, Waco, will be host to the boys and girls from all parts of the diocese. This group of young people at St. Paul's is an enthusiastic and earnest bunch of workers, and is a live factor in the Church's work.

A cordial invitation is extended to the boys and girls in neighboring dioceses, particularly those in the Province of the Southwest. A part of the program will be given over to furthering the work of our Provincial Organization and we feel sure that this will be of vital interest to all those in any way connected with our Provincial Young People's Service League.

If you wish to attend the Council please send in your name and address to 1117 Texas Avenue, Houston, Texas (Diocesan Office), stating which Diocese you represent.

Interesting Mission Church Dedicated.

Following the laying of the cornerstone which occurred less than a month ago, the new mission of St. Thomas' at the Isle of Hope, in Chatham County, Ga., near Savannah, was dedicated by the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., on St. Thomas' Day, at eight o'clock in the evening. Since the contribution of $750 from the American Church Building Fund, there is just $190 due to pay off the entire debt, and it is expected that this amount will be raised in a short while, and the church building will then be consecrated. On the occasion of the service of dedication the Bishop gave an address on "The Purpose of Service," and the rite of confirmation was administered during the service.

The little chapel has an interesting history, and it has taken the members of the little mission just one year to the day to raise the money and erect their house of prayer. In a short history written at the time of the laying of the cornerstone it is stated that the first accurate information of an Episcopal service held at the Isle of Hope is contained in a letter by a Churchman of Savannah, Mr. C. S. Hardee, ninety-three years of age, which showed that he was lay-reader in the union chapel for twenty years beginning August, 1873. The records of the church were destroyed by fire in 1893, but an old Bible was found which had the following information on a leaf: "January 28, 1872, Dr. S. F. Dupont was confirmed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Beckwith in this church. February 11, 1872 was confirmed Maggie E. Harrison and Edwin Waite by Bishop J. W. Beckwith." In 1893 the records show that services were held in the Methodist Church, the land having been given by Stephen F. Dupont, and in 1916 the Ven. F. North-Tummon began his ministry at the Isle of Hope, holding services in this church. In November, 1923, Miss Maria Henderson, a communicant of Christ Church, Savannah, gave the lot for a site for a church, and on St. Thomas' Day of that year the mission was organized under that name, by the Bishop. A woman's guild was formed and the members at once began work for raising funds with which to build the church, as the gift of the lot carried with it the proviso that the building should be completed in one year. The land upon which the church is now located was formerly owned by Christ Church, Savannah. The church sold the land in 1840, and now the Episcopal Church is again owner of the property upon which the new chapel is built. Though there are permanent residents of the Isle of Hope there are many from Savannah who have summer homes at this resort which is on a salt river. Quite a number who are permanent residents are members of the city parishes, and when these are transferred to the new mission there will be a communicant list of about sixty members.

Unique Christmas Service.

Among the Christmas services preceding the feast held in the city, one that is rather unique is given by the Diamond National Bank. Each day during the week beginning December 16, there is Carol singing in the large corridors of the bank from 12:30 to 12:45. The music consists of carols by a sextette of the male clerks, and anthem solos by a fine tenor singer. The audience is made up of all sorts of folk, banking and other prominent men, clergymen, stenographers, shop girls, etc. This is the third season the bank has held such services, and they seem to have struck the fancy of the folks who are downtown at the noon hour.

Community Christmas Trees were placed in the churchyard of Trinity Church, downtown, and in that of Calvary parish, in the East End. They were both installed with a service of carol singing on Christmas Eve. They are large, handsome trees, brilliantly illuminated with electric lights.

Carol Services at Trinity: Instead of the twenty-minute noon-day service held in Trinity Church during Advent, there have been held carol services, led by the choir boys, in which the congregation took part. The attendance has been good, and the singing very enjoyable.

The December meeting of the Pittsburgh Clerical Union took place on Monday, 17, in Trinity House, Pittsburgh. Luncheon was served at one o'clock, and was preceded by a Quiet Hour in the Church for the Diocesan clergy, conducted by the Bishop of Pittsburgh. The afternoon was given over to reports of and suggestions concerning the Nation-Wide Campaign and Every Member Canvass for 1924. There was a goodly attendance of both city and rural clergymen.

Meeting of the Executive Council.

The fourth quarterly meeting of the Executive Council of the Diocese was held at Harrisburg on Thursday, December 13. A resolution was adopted expressing satisfaction with the recent Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops. The greater part of the sessions was devoted to the consideration of the Diocesan Budget for 1924, particularly the diocesan quota for the Field Work of the National Council. Several members of the Council disputed the accuracy of the statistics regarding the diocese printed in the Report presented to the last meeting of the Province of Washington. The Treasurer of the diocese reported that one-third of the total income for the Field Department is sent to the Treasurer of the National Council, and that the statistics presented to the Synod are inaccurate. A statement, explaining the situation in detail, was made by the Committee on Annual Budget, to whom was referred the Provincial Report, 1923.

Christian Unity.

The Baptist Meeting House at Coudersport was destroyed by fire recently, and the rector and vestry, with the consent of the Bishop, have offered the use of Christ Church to the Baptist congregation for evening service until the Lenten season. It is thought that by that time they will have been able to secure another location. Christ Church, Coudersport, has had no evening services for some time, and the rector, Archdeacon Post, has been using Sunday evenings for visiting the Missions in his Archdeaconry. The Bishop has requested him, if agreeable to the Westfield congregation, to hold services in St. John's, Westfield, every Sunday evening until a new rector has been called there.

Wheeling Clericus.

This Clericus met at Trinity Church Parish House, Moundsville, the Rev. William Meade, rector, on Tuesday, December 18, when the Rev. W. M. Sidener, rector of St. Paul's Church, Steubenville, Ohio, gave a most interesting account of his recent visit to the Holy Land. Mr. Sidener's account of his travels was made still more interesting by a number of views which he had secured of the different places visited. The next meeting of Clericus will be held in St. Paul's Parish House, Steubenville, early in January.

American Guild of Health.

A Teaching Mission was held at Christ Church, Fairmont, December 10 to 17, inclusive, by the Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman, President of the Guild, headquarters Cleveland, Ohio. The series of lectures on the subject of Religion and Health of Body and Soul, made a profound impression upon the whole community. It was interesting to note how people of all creeds crowded the church to its capacity to hear a clergyman tell of God and His relation to us, not only spiritually but physically. It became clear that the Church has a vital message to the people of today which they are eager to welcome when presented in the language of today. Mr. Sherman, until recently rector of St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio, is a finished and convincing speaker. He proclaims the fact that the full faith once delivered to the Saints should be preached.

New Parish House, Charleston.

On Friday, November 23, a new Parish House in St. Andrew's Parish, Charleston, was formally opened and dedicated by Bishop Gravatt. This very handsome and useful building was erected on the site of the old Parish House, which was destroyed by fire a short time ago.

Collect for The Epiphany.

O God, Who by the leading of a star did manifest Thy only begotten Son to the Gentiles, Mercifully grant that we, who know Thee now by faith, may after this life have the fruition of Thy glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Three Shepherds.

Three shepherds returning from Bethlehem,

White with wonder came up the dawn,
Talked of the glory revealed to them.

The field was still as a startled fawn.

Quoth the lad: "O Light that flooded the cave,

Brighter than torches of Herod the King!

Music! O Music that, wave on wave, Broke on our lips and made them sing!"

Quoth the shepherd whose dreams had come to fold

In a rough stone hut where love was blest:

"I saw but a Child Whose hair of gold Shone like a star on His mother's breast."

Quoth the old, old shepherd: "Mine eyes are dim;

I see with the heart what is hidden deep.

I saw a Shepherd and worshipped Him,
For he goes to give His life for His sheep."

Three shepherds returning from Bethlehem,

The field was still as a startled fawn,
Talked of the glory revealed to them.

White with wonder came up the dawn.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Cleansing of the Temple.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

II.

Word was brought to the chief priests exactly as word would be brought now to the chief of police if some street-preacher interrupted the stock exchange. They said, "This man is incorrigible," and wished to arrest Him, just as we would. The political instability of the city is shown since they did not dare. There was no government strong enough to check riot. The Eleven, surrounding Our Lord as a body-guard, apparently made riot certain. But there have been governments strong enough to make arrests in spite of riot—Napoleon's government, after his whiff of grape-shot, for instance. The hydra-headed government of Jerusalem, however, dared do nothing publicly.

To those who read the New Testament without realization of crowds, it seems strange enough. Men bred in a small town ask why the Chief Priests did not have Him followed, mark down where He slept, then arrest Him. The sufficient answer comes to one who traverses the seething, boiling streets of any great city on any festival night. It is incommunicable. It must be seen to be believed. But if a crowd be dense enough you cannot follow any small group of men in it. No man will believe this until he has tried.

All things are possible in a great city. A great crowd is like a force of nature, titanic, remorseless, unreasoning. All things are doubly possible in a great crowd. Unless we treble err, there was a greater crowd, a mob gigantic, a throng multitudinous, an oppression of innumerable onlookers, of numbers numberless.

One microscopic of all the universe of stars, one pin-point of a country on that orb, one infinitesimal of a city in that country, was focus of attention for the Universe Invisible. Intellectuals beyond our intelligence, Powers beyond our comprehension, brooded over it, withheld. Thrones, Dominions, Principalities, thronged and watched, stayed from helping or hindering. Questions we only dimly understand were come to issue. A fight was to be fought the anguish of which surpasses our capacity for suffering. Bound hand and foot by the laws of His own universe, the Maker lay in the power of that Prince of this World whom He had made.

Moreover, had He made no world and no spirits capable of sinning, there would have been no sin. There is a sense in which the Adversary could say it is his fault. If he who made happiness possible has right to thrill with every throb of it, then he who made misery possible has obligation to writhe with every pang. Not obedience, but joy caused by the obedience is his in eternal brightness of reduplicated glory. Not sin, therefore, but the suffering caused by sin, is his to the last pang of pain. Horrible, horrible, and beyond all horrible, in remultiplication of shuddering anguish, as this is, it cannot escape the notice of any intellect. Tinge that intellect with hate, and how it would speed across the universe to gloat over the anguish of its Maker. Tinge that intellect with love, and how it would outspeed the light-rays, sweeping, if need be, from the Outmost Void, to hang weeping, or stoop in sterner sorrow too deep for tears, over the agony of its best-beloved.

The Epiphany.

Year in and year out as the tide of time flows on, Churchpeople have brought before them month by month and almost week by week the fundamentals of the religion of Our Lord Jesus Christ. There, in the very heart, is the primary fact of Christ's death and Christ's resurrection; and radiating from that, behind and before, are the glorious truths that constitute the essentials of the religion of Christ. Going backwards there are the great Lenten truths of His temptation and our fights with sin; the Epiphany with its glorious world outlook; Christmas, and the Incarnation of the Son of God. And, going onwards, there is the Ascension, and Whitsuntide with the power of the Holy Ghost, and on through Trinity the great doctrines of our holy religion, and as the beginning and the end, the great season of Trinity terminating in it, and the great teachings of Christmas and Whitsuntide and Easter beginning with it, that magnificent doctrine, the Second Advent of Our Lord and Saviour. But, coming back to the Epiphany. In the Eastern Church it has been known rather as the Theophany and is put on a par with Christmas and Easter. It is popularly known as the Day of Lights, or the Lumenation Day, as there is always in the churches at that time a special array of lights. Poor Russia! One wonders if there are any there now. The fact of its having been entitled alternatively in 1662 "The manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles" has caused the season to be seized upon as the initiative of missionary energy. The fact that the Magi, the Wise Men who came from the East, either from Persia or Babylonia or Arabia, were supposed to be Gentiles, although, of course, this never can be proved, has made it the time for a great missionary call. The Church has accepted it as a challenge to make Christ known to the nations. To the writer, however, it is a matter of deep regret that the nobler note of the Epiphany according to St. Paul was obscured during the Dark Ages; those ages of widespread apostasy from the truth of the Bible and of the Apostolic Church. For, during that time, the Church, which started out with looking up to heaven for her returning Lord, forgot that glorious posture and, looking down on the earth with dreams of worldly dominion and world-wide power and the sceptre of temporal dominion, exchanged her uplook for the downlook, and the glorious teaching of the Epiphany was either overlooked or forgotten. St. Paul, in Titus 2:13, says that the grace of God teaches that we should live soberly, righteously, and Godly in this present age, looking for that blessed hope, the Epiphany of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. His last words to Timothy, ordained the first Bishop of the Church of the Ephesians, were a charge before the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the living and the dead at His Epiphany, to preach the Word. And a little further on he says that the righteous Judge at that day will give him a crown of righteousness and not to him only but to all that love His Epiphany.

Oh, that the spirit of this great Epiphany Season, combining as it does the glorious thought of the Incarnation, the Epiphany of Our Saviour Jesus Christ, that is, the first Epiphany, the inspiration of all our Christian life and missionary energy, could be combined with the uplifting and inspiring thought of the Second Advent of Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Epiphany of His glory, Who is soon to come as King of kings and Lord of lords.—Canadian Churchman.

For Epiphany-Tide.

"That," said the late Dean Hodges once writing of the Epiphany, "was the true beginning of the Christian religion"; for Epiphany interprets Christmas and reveals the universal Christ.

This is the message the Church asks us to consider during Epiphany-tide and at the beginning of the new year—the vision of the Kingdom of God on earth, the world's Redeemer Who is the Saviour of every soul.

"Behold, I make all things new." That is the blessed declaration of the revelator in his vision of a new heaven and a new earth. There are numberless assertions of the truth of that promise in the natural world and in mortal reckonings. When a new year dawns, the least worthy, the most sadly disheartened, and those who have utterly failed realize the glory of the gift.

Our meditation for the Epiphany season is an exalted and an inclusive one: heaven upon earth; Christ come to the humblest and to the highest; the Ancient of Days with us, our Emmanuel; time merged into eternity; and to us is committed a share in the consummation of His Kingdom.—St. Andrew's Cross.

The Timeless Things.

Men write their names on marble, and in a little day
The wind-rush and the rain-wash erase them quite away.
Men build them halls of granite—and Time's ironic hand
Makes of their grandeur at the last but rubble in the sand.

The towers of Troy and Babylon have withered, bronze and stone;
The names of Nineveh and Tyre are wind and dust alone.
They heaped their beams to heaven—they delved earth's inmost deeps—
And the slow turf alone may mark where their dead pride now sleeps.

But firmer far than marble are stones of mortal trust,
And human hearts remember when granite turns to dust;
And he who builds for human needs, for service tried and sure,
While faith and honor flame undimmed, his work will yet endure.

O builders, toilers, artisans, hewers of wood or stone,
Toiler and task are dust at last; the dream remains alone.
So let the fire of high resolve harden the basic clay—
That Time may test your work at last and turn, repulsed, away!

—Ted Olson.

Integrity.

Benjamin Franklin summarizes one of his essays by saying that "Nothing so likely makes a man's fortune as integrity."

This strange and stern saying of that practical man is not so often quoted in these days of mechanical processes for getting and spending, and yet we all know how very true are these words if the principle could but be tried out in our daily living. At least most of us have seen instances of the actual working of this very principle.

A few months ago a large building company in Atlanta asked for bids for the plumbing in a certain new building in Atlanta. When the bids were opened the job was awarded to a well-known plumbing concern. The work was completed and the final approval was made and the bill ordered paid. Some few days ago the building company called the president of the plumbing company on the telephone and asked him to come to his office. When the two men met, the president of the building company said:

"Please take this blue print and put in the sewerage and water for this new sub-division that my company is going to develop."

The president of the plumbing company looked at the blue print and saw that the sheet was perfectly clean and showed no sign of any one having handled it. He was puzzled. His face showed his inability to understand exactly what was meant by the proposition.

"What do you mean?" asked the president of the plumbing company.

"I mean," answered the president of the building company, "exactly what I said. I want you to take charge of this job and when you finish the work, send me the bill and I will send you a check."

The two men looked at each other a moment and then the president of the building company said:

"Do you know that my bookkeeping department tells me that on that big job that you did for us, involving more than $25,000 worth of plumbing, that our figures tallied exactly with your invoices at every step of the work and that when your final cost sheet was in that we balanced to a penny? I have been looking for a plumbing company for ten years that could be depended upon. I have a million dollars worth of building this year and I am not going to worry any more about the plumbing. You are going to look after that end of it for me in the future."

The president of the plumbing company came by the office of the writer and laid that blue print on the desk and said:

"Do you know that I had rather have the confidence of that man than the total profits of my entire business for a year?"

Integrity! It wins out at last. And it will always be the safest way to success. Isn't it enheartening to know that in the stress of modern business life there are men who are honest? And that there are men who are glad to recognize integrity in their fellows and reward it? This old world is capable of many good things if we will just act right and press forward.—Exchange.

Epiphany.

"The festival of the Epiphany must be deemed of very high importance by a believing and thoughtful Christian. It does not merely commemorate one of the most beautiful incidents of Our Lord's infant life, it asserts one of the most fundamental and vital features of Christianity: the great distinction, in fact, between Christianity and Judaism. The Jewish revelation of God contained within itself the secret and the reason of its vanishing by absorption into the bright light which should succeed it."—Canon Liddon.

When the Anchor Holds!

Lincoln C. Cummings.

How blessed we are, that in all the sorrows and troubles of life, if we but realize that God's Hand is measuring out what is best for us—we may still go forward courageously perplexed but not in despair; cast down but not destroyed—faint yet pursuing the perfect will of God. Falling but to rise again, and fighting forward with faces to the foe—sure that the struggle is not in vain in the Lord!

Every day surer, though evil may seem the stronger, that we shall yet be more than conquerors in Him Who loves us and has given us the conquering faith and overcoming life and power of His Spirit. Blessed are we indeed, though the storms assail and the sea is rough, who can rest and trust in God's ruling power.

"Be still my soul! He then through thee can teach His lessons—and His Power in weakness show!"

Coming of the Christ Child.

The coming of a child often transforms a family. The Christ Child transformed the family of God on earth. Civilization, education and Christianization have followed His lead. The humanitarian, philanthropic and religious institutions of this age are the result of the influence of Jesus during the past nineteen centuries. His light will illuminate mankind as long as time and eternity endure. It is shining brighter and brighter as we near the perfect day of His triumph. More hearts welcome the coming of Christmas this year than ever before. More nations are in accord with the angel's proclamation of "Peace on earth, good will to men." More than ever before love rises above hate, truth, above falsehood, right above wrong. There is more living for and thinking of others than ever before.—The Expositor.

A Christmas Prayer.

O Saviour Christ, Who as at this time didst come into the world for our salvation, establish in our hearts the true spirit of this season made glad by Thy gracious Nativity.

Forbid, Lord, that we should be so full of our own doings and interests that the heart has no room for Thee!

May the spirit of the Eternal Son be born again in us, and make us partakers in the Eternal Sonship of Christ.

So establish in us the dominion of Thyself, that the heavenly harmonies may be heard on earth, and the just and loving Kingdom of the Prince of Peace may come amongst men, through Thee, Our Blessed Redeemer, Who art, with Thy Father and the Holy Spirit one God, world without end. Amen.—Selected.

A Pastor's Christmas Remembrance.

By the Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson.

"Dear Member:

With joy we enter again the blessed season that commemorates another anniversary of the birthday of our dear Lord and what joy it does bring! Nearly two thousand years ago Jesus the Christ was born in Bethlehem and the whole world is vastly better for it.

I have one wish for my own life as I write you: it is that Jesus be born in me this blessed Christmas time. If this be so I know that my life all next year will be vastly better because of it.

Now, what I wish for myself I wish for each member of my congregation. I wish it for myself because it is the best thing that could happen to me: I wish it for you because I want you to have the best there is in life, too.

May Jesus the Christ be born in our lives so that all through the next year the angels shall sing again, 'Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good-will to men!'

Cordially and joyfully,
Your Pastor."

For the Young Folks

Christmas Candles.

There is an old, old story
God sends to you and me
Of joy and peace and gladness
On Christ's nativity.
The moon rose bright o'er Bethlehem,
To light the vail so dim;
And angels sang together
To lead the way to Him.

And while the shepherds wandered,
And wise men from afar,
And paused to greet the Saviour
Beneath the kindly star.
They lit three waxen tapers,
For Prophet, Priest and King,
And offered each with reverence
The gift that he did bring.

Then, while they lingered, praying,
Each one upon his knee,
To Christ, the Lord Incarnate,
And swore fidelity,
'Twas noticed that the tapers
A wondrous light gave round,
And in the smoke they fancied
A cross and, more, a crown.

And thus arose the custom,
Each Christmas Eve to place
A candle in the window,
To ask Him for His grace,
To pray Him for a blessing,
To grant that surely we
With each and every brother
May live in charity.

So bands of merry singers
Go passing to and fro
And chant their Christmas carols
Across the fleecy snow.
Then every window opens
And each his best proclaims
That God is King of Heaven
And o'er the earth He reigns.

For Christ is born this morning,
Our Saviour, God and Friend,
And we shall raise our anthem,
While all our voices blend.
And, while we sing, we listen
For that great, grand Amen,
Which angels chanted from on high
To those in Bethlehem.

So brothers lift your voices,
As bright your tapers shine,
Remembering now and ever
Each candle is a shrine,
That Jesus is our Master,
That peace and joy abound.
And for each cross He gives us,
He holds for us a crown.

Making Good.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Louise Temple was bending over her First Latin Reader, preparing her lesson for the morrow. "Bonus, bona, bonum!" she repeated.

"What on earth is that?" demanded her brother, Lawrence. "What are you saying, Lou?"

"You mustn't be so impatient," Louise laughed. "When you are a little older you will learn what 'bonus' means."

"Can't wait that long. Tell me the good news now."

"That's just it. It does mean good. It is a Latin adjective." Louise went on with her studying, while Lawrence, his curiosity being satisfied, worked a problem in algebra and forgot, for the time, about the Latin word meaning good. The next afternoon, however, he was pleasantly reminded of it.

Each day after school and all day Saturday, Lawrence was errand boy in a hardware store. His duties were to deliver packages, run errands and perform various other odd jobs around the store. On the day following his introduction to the Latin adjective for good, Mr. Lewis, the owner, called him into his private office.

"Lawrence, in looking over the records, I find that you have been on time every day since you came here."

"Yes, sir," Lawrence answered wonderingly. "School is over at three-fifteen. And I have no trouble in getting to the store by three-thirty."

"Usually you are five minutes earlier," Mr. Lewis smiled.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, Lawrence, I believe in encouraging good work. I pay my regular clerks a bonus of an extra week's salary, twice a year, if they have been on time every day and have made no mistakes in their work. I intend to do the same with you. If you continue the good work you have done thus far, on the first day of January you will receive an extra week's salary."

"Just think of it, mother," Lawrence cried exultantly, after telling the family of his good fortune, "a bonus of an extra week's salary. That's what I call good news."

"Of course," said Louise; "didn't I tell you last night that bonus means good?"

"I'll have seven dollars, mother. what shall I do with it?"

"It will be yours to do with as you please," his mother answered. "Buy something that you want very much."

"I'll get a new foot ball suit," Lawrence cried eagerly. "I do need a new suit."

"You do, indeed," his mother agreed. "If the suit costs more than the bonus, I'll pay the difference. I shall be very proud of my boy if he earns special merit by being punctual and trustworthy."

Louise looked at her brother teasingly. "Lawrence, wouldn't it be a splendid idea to earn that bonus before you buy the football suit? You know there are three whole months yet to work. Something may happen to interfere with your being on time at the store, you know."

"It won't!" he said firmly.

"Don't be too sure," said Louise; "you may get into mischief. And Miss Ophelia may keep you in school to punish you."

"I haven't been kept in since I took the position at the store. I know I have to be there on time. And I try to be careful of my conduct. With a bonus in sight and a new football suit to look forward to, I'll be more careful than ever."

Lawrence was careful, and Mr. Lewis had no reason to complain of him. He was a diligent, earnest worker. It seemed he would be sure to earn the longed-for bonus.

One afternoon, late in December, Lawrence hurried from school to the store. He was thinking happy thoughts as he ran, that in a few days he would have the new football suit. He had been too impatient to follow his sister's advice and wait until he had secured the bonus before he selected the suit. He had been to the clothing store several times, carefully examined every football suit there, and decided which he would take. The suit cost five dollars more than the bonus would amount to, but his mother had promised to pay the addition; so Lawrence collected the money from her in advance, made a deposit on the suit and awaited the first of January, and the bonus to pay the rest.

"Don't count your chickens before they are hatched," his sister advised him. "You have spent the bonus before you earned it."

"Oh, I'll earn it all right," Lawrence answered, "and get it, too."

"Four more days," he exulted as he ran. "Only four days and I shall have my suit." At the corner, he paused at the curb to wait while several automobiles went past. As he watched, eager to cross the street at the first opportunity, his pleasant train of thoughts were rudely broken.

In the middle of the street, with cars passing to and fro on each side of her, stood a tiny, blue-coated figure. "How did she get there?" Lawrence gasped as he looked at the little frightened face. Then, suddenly something he saw in the child's face turned his attention into immediate activity. Evidently she was determined to dash between the speeding cars to the sidewalk.

Lawrence glanced at an on-coming machine. Then he gave a great bound, covering the distance and barely escaping injury. He paid no heed to the angry driver's shouts, but reached out and grasped the little girl just as she had prepared to run. Picking her up, he waited until the traffic had lessened, and carried her to the sidewalk.

He set the child down just as an excited and grateful mother caught his arm and held him, trying to express her thanks for saving her baby.

Lawrence, boy-like, was embarrassed at her praise, and as he feared he would be late at the store, he soon managed to get away, and ran. As he entered he saw by the clock that he was five minutes late! Like a melting snowflake, the bonus, the football suit and all his happy prospects vanished. As he worked, he decided that he would go to the clothing store and tell the manager he would be unable to make the final payment on the suit and he hoped he would refund the advance he had made. He wished he had followed Louise's advice and not spent the money before he had earned it. To have lost his bonus because he paused to do a kind act to a little girl! Heroic? Oh, no, Lawrence never thought of himself as a hero. If any one had suggested that he had been brave, or that he had really saved the child's life, Lawrence would have laughed. He had done an act of kindness that any one would have done. That was all there was to it. It was too bad that he had to lose the bonus on account of it.

Lawrence had a number of packages to deliver that afternoon. When he returned to the store, Mr. Lewis called him to the office.

"You were late this afternoon, Lawrence?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, five minutes."

"Why didn't you come into the office and tell me about it? It is too bad to lose your bonus on account of an accident."

"Accident! There wasn't any accident, Mr. Lewis. Just a sort of jam of machines."

"Oh, I was told there was. While you were out a lady came into the store and insisted that you had saved her little girl's life at the risk of your own."

Lawrence looked as if he wanted to run.

"Is she gone?" he demanded.

"She is," Mr. Lewis laughed.

"Well, that was really what made me late," he confided to his employer. "She caught my arm and kept thanking me for saving the little girl, when I really hadn't done a thing but pick her up and carry her across the street."

"Well, the lady insists that you are quite a hero and deserve a medal for bravery."

Lawrence shook his head.

"I didn't do much, sir. I was just kind to the little girl."

"Well, I don't think you should lose your bonus on account of—well, we'll call it kindness and not bravery, if you insist upon it."

"Oh, then I'll get the bonus in spite of being five minutes late? Oh, I'll get my football suit after all!"

"Football suit? Is that what you have decided to buy? It is a fine investment for a bonus. Now, what shall you purchase with this?" He took a twenty dollar bill from a desk drawer and held it towards the astonished boy.

"That?" gasped Lawrence.

"The lady insists you are a hero and left this little token of her gratitude for you."

"But I can't take it, Mr. Lewis."

"Well, Lawrence, I suppose you must take it; I don't want it. The lady left no address. Take it, boy, it is yours. You deserve it."

"A new ball, a glove, a mask, a leather jacket besides the suit, and something for mother and Louise, too!" Lawrence exulted as he related the story to his family that evening. "Lou, get out your Latin book and show me that lesson about bonus. I like that Latin word. It—it surely is good."

"Things are always good when we live up to them, my son," said mother.

"And you've learned the use of Latin long before you begin to study it," teased his sister. "That's more than some students do who study the language all through their high school career. That's fine!"

"I'll say so!" agreed Lawrence.

The Verses That Made David Livingstone Brave.

When David Livingstone, the great missionary, was going further into Africa than any white man had ever gone before him, he had many adventures with savage chiefs.

One day he came to the place where the Loangwa River flows into the Zambezi. He knew that if he could go on he would discover a part of Africa no white man had ever seen, and open up a way for many missionaries who would come after him.

When the chief saw him he was very angry and said he should go no further. He threatened to kill Livingstone.

Livingstone knew that if he were killed no one would ever know of all the discoveries he had made and had written in his book, so he was afraid to go on when the chief told him not to. He was not afraid for himself but he did not want all the discoveries he had made to be lost.

That night he opened the little tin box in which he carried his papers and took out his Bible. In the flickering light he read:

"Go ye into all the world and teach all nations . . . and lo, I am with you always."

"It is the word of a gentleman of the most sacred and strictest honor," he said: "I will not cross furtively by night as I intended. It would appear as flight, and why should such a man as I flee? Nay, verily, I shall take observations for longitude and latitude tonight, though they may be the last. I feel quite calm now, thank God."

In the morning the natives gathered around Livingstone. They were armed with spears. Livingstone had borrowed a canoe to get his men and oxen across the river. First he sent the oxen across, then his men. He stayed on the bank surrounded by the threatening natives armed with spears until all of his men were safe on the other side; then he stepped into the canoe.

"I wish you peace," he said as the canoe was paddled away. Not one of the spears was raised to do him harm, and he went on his way in peace.

If you will find in your Bible Matthew 28:18-20, you will see the verses which Livingstone said were the words of a gentleman of honor and which took the fear out of his heart.—Selected.

The Beasts at the Manger.

The following lines are from the "Notes and Queries" department of the Boston Transcript. The sender says: "They are quoted from memory and I do not know the author."

The Babe was born in Bethlehem and swaddled by His mother.

And laid within a manger, for bed there was no other—

And then, so very weary, she, beside her treasure, slept,

While Joseph, leaning on his staff, a nodding vigil kept.

Within that wretched stable an ox and solemn ass

Stood patiently, spectators of all that came to pass—

They knew their great Creator in that form so weak and small.

For the ox his owner knoweth and the ass her master's stall.

So they stumbled to the manger and, for all the beasts that be,

They bowed their heads and worshipped, each on its hairy knee.

Then back they crept together, for they heard the hurrying feet

Of shepherds, hastening down the path, the Holy Child to greet:

And none had knowledge of the things within that lowly shed

Save an Angel singing softly in the rafters overhead.

But ever since, on Christmas Eve, the beasts can speak by night,

And they talk with one another all about that Holy Night.

How Mrs. Spider Cleans House.

Like all careful housekeepers, Mrs. Spider has her cleaning days; but, unlike other careful housekeepers she wears her fine clothes when she works.

Maybe you have seen her all rigged out in her yellow and black velvet gown, sweeping and dusting her web, but just remember, she is not as extravagant as she seems. Clothes never bother her. She doesn't have to go to a dressmaker when she needs a new gown. She has only to step out of her old one, and, lo! just under it is a fresh one all ready made, and a perfect fit!

No, Mrs. Spider is not extravagant. She is very economical, in fact; for, instead of throwing aside her old dresses, she rolls them into a ball and eats them.

There are no old-clothes men in the spider world.

Well, to tell about Mrs. Spider's house cleaning. She has neither brushes nor brooms nor dusters; so she begins her work by raising one of her eight claws and giving her house a shake which reaches every corner. She is careful, however, not to injure it, but she makes the dust fly. When this is done to her satisfaction, she looks her web over, first from the top, then from the bottom, and then from both sides. If the walls sag, or are the least bit broken, she rolls them into a ball and eats them, just as she does her old clothes. Then she replaces them by new ones.

When everything is in thorough order, she sits down for a rest and to make her own toilet.

As her whole body and legs have a rough, hairy covering, she needs quite a little time to fix herself properly.

In her mandibles, or jaws, are the teeth with which she combs her hair, and her claws serve as brushes for the other parts of her body.—Selected.

Cooperation.

I watched the snowflakes falling,
They seemed so very gay;
I bent my head and listened
To what they had to say.

"We all must work together,"
They said with greatest glee,
"And overcome the weather,
It's bitter cold, you see.

"The flowers will be freezing
If it continues thus;
We'll cover them all snugly,
Without a bit of fuss."

And so a downy blanket,
All soft and smooth and white,
A thing of wondrous beauty,
They wove within a night.

O'er mother earth they spread it
And kept her snug and warm;
The seeds and rootlets 'neath it Felt not a mite of harm.

But just suppose each flakelet
Had thought himself too small,
And had in desperation
Refused to work at all!

Now, like the snowflakes tiny,
Although with warmer heart,
How much we can accomplish
If each will do his part.

—Exchange.

Science and religion, properly understood, need never conflict, but should always cooperate in the advancement of the human race, for each supplies what the other lacks. Science provides the means by which human toil and suffering may be alleviated and shows how human life may be brightened and enhanced. Religion gives inspiration to the individual, an aspiration to a high ideal. Science gives eyes to religion. Religion gives a heart to science.

Teach your child internal cleanliness

THE mother who permits constipation in her baby or older child is risking the health, even the life of her little one.

It must be remembered that an infant is helpless, unable to tell that constipation is making its life miserable. Consequently the mother must be able to recognize signs of constipation in her baby. Convulsions, night terrors, grinding the teeth in sleep, feverishness, fretfulness and such symptoms—any of these may indicate that poisons from baby's stagnant intestine are flooding the little body.

Washing Cleans Only The Skin

In older children biliousness, coated tongue, loss of appetite warn the mother that constipation is present. Constipation, unchecked in youth, may lead to serious consequences. In constipation, according to intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Only Aggravate Constipation

The mothers should not resort to laxatives. A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

More Important Than Soap and Water

Not a Medicine

Nujol is used in children's and general hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Let your infant or child have Nujol regularly—and see rosy cheeks, clear eyes and happiness return once more.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol yourself as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

Obituaries

KERR: Entered into life eternal, at Eastville, Virginia, December 5, 1923, ELLA WINDER KERR, daughter of the late Dr. George and Caroline Winder Kerr.

Those who knew her best, loved her best.

ONE OF THEM.—M. E. T.

WATKINS: Died, on Tuesday, December 18, 1923, at the Union Memorial Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland, ELLA WHITE ROBINSON, wife of Rev. Wilber F. Watkins, Jr., rector of St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

"Remembered with Thy saints in glory everlasting."

KNOX: On Friday, December 7th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Randolph Robins, in Baltimore, Maryland, ELIZABETH HORNER KNOX, beloved wife of the late John Somerville Knox, of Alexandria, and latterly of Richmond, and daughter of the late Eliza Baylor and Joseph Horner, of Warrenton, Virginia.

"And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

PRENTISS: Died, on the afternoon of December 14, 1923, REV. PAUL TRAPIER PRENTISS. Funeral services were conducted in St. James' Church, McClellanville, S. C., by Rev. W. B. Sams, and the interment was in the Doar Cemetery, at Walnut Grove Plantation, on December 16th.

MRS. MARY FUNSTEN REED.

Died, December 7, 1923, at Webster Groves, Missouri, MARY FUNSTEN REED, Buried December 9, 1923, in Bellefontaine Cemetery, St. Louis. Born at Mt. Airy, Clarke County, Virginia, October 24, 1846.

Entered into rest, from her home, in Webster Groves, Missouri, Mary Funsten Reed, wife of Rev. B. E. Reed, daughter of Colonel David Funsten and Susan Meade, his wife. Her husband and five children: Mary Teackle, Virginia Ritchie, Anne Parramore, Benjamin Everard and Dorothy, survive her. She went to her Heavenly Home unexpectedly, in the early evening, without pain or sickness, as one who peacefully falls asleep.

She was of strong and cultivated mind, and has left to all who knew her the memory of a beautiful life and character. She loved her native State, Virginia, and bore its noble spirit in her heart and life. She was wonderfully sympathetic and to those who knew her best she seemed a type of character impossible to excel. Her sweet, quiet going home was in beautiful keeping with her long, trusting life. From early childhood she was devoted to her Lord and through her long years her devotion increased, till she passed to her home in Heaven as a child going to her Father's arms. As one who knew her intimately writes, "It was a translation, befitting one who had lived such a saintly life. Her presence here, and her example now, are priceless memories."

CHURCH NEWS.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. T. P. Thurston, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Church, Tulsa, is backing up its reputation as one of the leading parishes in the district. Of course, for a parish to have such a reputation it must be doing a notable piece of work, and this is true of Trinity. The weekly parish paper carries a list of more than twenty organizations in which are banded together for work—the men, women, boys and girls; and it is rather interesting to know that the men's work seems to be just as strong and effective as that of the women. This parish has enjoyed the distinction of being the only one in the district that has paid the full amount asked of it (one dollar per communicant) for the support of the Church's Hospital, at McAlester.

Archdeacon Carden, of Central Oklahoma, and Mr. Spencer, the Executive Secretary, were up in the northern part of the district over a recent week-end, and it is interesting to note that at the communion service in Grace Church, Ponca City, on the morning of the third Sunday in Advent, and at the service of Holy Communion held at St. John's, Newkirk, the same evening, there were in the congregations Roman Catholics, communicants of the Greek Catholic Church, and full-blooded Indians, as well as a goodly number of those who are ordinarily found at the services of the Episcopal Church.

At Chilocco there is located the largest Government Indian School in the United States, and services are carried on here by the clergyman from Pawnee, the Rev. Benjamin Bean. Not a very large number of the Indian boys and girls at the school are communicants of the Episcopal Church; some of them are attached to the church, and there are upwards of a dozen adults.

Personal Notes

Messrs. E. C. Mercer and H. H. Hadley have recently conducted very successful preaching missions in St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, N. J., St. Michaels and All Angels, Baltimore, Md., and St. Luke's, Norfolk, Va. They ask the prayers of their Christian friends for God's blessing upon the following missions they are to conduct: January 3-13, St. Paul's, New Orleans, La.; January 13-20, St. Paul's, Lynchburg, Va.; January 20-27, Epiphany, Danville, Va.; January 27-February 3, Trinity, Columbia, S. C.

The Rev. William McClelland has resigned the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Bustleton (Philadelphia) to accept a call to the rectorship of St. Stephen's, East New Market, Maryland. For some years Mr. McClelland has been Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Clerical Brotherhood of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Mr. McClelland goes to his new charge on January 6, and as rector of St. Stephen's he will have charge of a number of churches in Dorchester County on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Bishop Paddock is now living at 28 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York City. He is slowly improving in health, though he has not yet regained his strength.

The Ven. William Wyllie, Archdeacon of Santo Domingo, is returning to the United States as soon as possible in response to a cable informing him of illness in his family, who are in this country. One of the children is seriously ill with scarlet fever.

The Rev. Dr. J. D. Herron, who had charge of the Cathedral in Cincinnati, Ohio, prior to the coming of Dean Jones, has accepted a call to be rector of Holy Trinity Church, Madisonville, taking effect January 1.

The Rev. George John McCormack has been transferred from the Canadian Diocese of Montreal to the Diocese of Harrisburg by Bishop Farthing, and has accepted the unanimous election to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Steelton, Pa. The Rev. Mr. McCormack is an Honor Medallist of Kings College, Canada.

The Rev. Herbert H. Parkinson, of Sturgis, Mich., has been called to the rectorship of the Church of the Ascension, Wyoming, Ohio.

The Rev. Clarence E. Wolfe, formerly rector of St. John's Church, Havre de Grace, Md., has entered upon his duties as rector of St. Andrew's Church, Baltimore, Md., and should be addressed at 1627 North Broadway, Baltimore.

ORDINATIONS.

On St. Thomas' Day, in St. James' Church, Irvington, Baltimore, the Rev. Wade Earl Stonesifer was ordained to the Priesthood by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D. The Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Archdeacon of Maryland, presented the candidate and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert E. Browning, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore.

Until recently Mr. Stonesifer was a minister in the Lutheran Church. He will continue in charge of St. James' Church, where he has been serving his Diaconate.

On Wednesday, December 19, Ember Day, in Emmanuel Church, Hastings, Mich., the Rev. J. E. Wilkinson, rector, Diocese of Western Michigan, the Rev. William Keith Chidester was ordained to the Priesthood by Bishop McCormick. The sermon was preached by Archdeacon Vercoe and the Candidate was presented by the Rev. William G. Studwell. Dean Jackson read the Epistle and the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent the Gospel. Ten clergy of the diocese were present and took part in the service and in the laying on of hands. The musical portions of the service were well rendered by Emmanuel choir, and after the service lunch was served by the ladies of the parish to the visiting clergy and the vestry and their families. Mr. Chidester becomes rector of Holy Trinity, Manistee.

Bishop Garland advanced five deacons to the Priesthood and ordered one deacon at the ordination service St. Thomas' Day, December 21, in St. James' Church, Philadelphia.

Neville H. Caley was ordered deacon and was presented by his father, the Rev. L. N. Caley, rector of St. Martin's Church, Oak Lane. The five deacons who were advanced to the Priesthood were: the Rev. John Henry A. Bomberger, now serving at St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, Virginia, presented by the Rev. Herbert L. Hannah, rector of All Saints', Norristown; the Rev. Leon Mark Brusstar presented by the Rev. John A. Richardson, Jr., rector of St. Mary's Church, West Philadelphia; the Rev. George Donald Pierce presented by the Rev. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's Church; the Rev. Arthur B. Vossler presented by the Rev. Charles H. Arndt, rector of Christ Church, Germantown, and the Rev. R. S. Whitehead presented by the Rev. John Mockridge, rector of St. James', Philadelphia.

The Rev. John Doyle and the Rev. William H. Smaltz were advanced to the Priesthood Sunday morning, December 23, by Bishop Garland at a special ordination service held in Church of the Resurrection, Philadelphia. Mr. Doyle is now serving as Curate at the Mediator, in West Philadelphia. Mr. Smaltz is a deaf mute and is serving at All Souls Church for the Deaf, Sixteenth Street near Alleghany Avenue. The ordination of Mr. Smaltz was in the sign language, a special choir sang the ordination hymns in the sign language also.

Louis Douglas Gottschall was ordained to the Diaconate in the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, Bishops court, Harrisburg, Pa., on Tuesday morning, December 18, by Bishop Darlington. Morning Prayer was said by the Rev. Geo. J. McCormack and the ordinance. The Candidate was presented by the Rev. Leroy F. Baker. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Philip A. Dales, rector of St. Paul's, Harrisburg. The Epistle was read by the Rev. Orlando H. Bridgman, Vicar of Mount Calvary Church, Camp Hill.

On St. Thomas' Day in St. Thomas' Church, Newark, N. J., the Rev. Robert Thorpe was ordained to the Priesthood by Bishop Lines, it being the forty-ninth anniversary of his own ordination. Mr. Thorpe was presented by the rector, the Rev. John C. Donnell, it being the tenth anniversary of his ordination. The sermon was preached by the Rev. George P. Dougherty. About twenty of the clergy were present and a large congregation. Mr. Thorpe has reached his seventy-seventh year, and after long service in the Alms House, in various missions, he is in charge of the Mission Church at Lincoln Park.

On the Feast of St. John the Evangelist, in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., the following named persons were admitted to the Diaconate, by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Pittsburgh: Messrs. E. R. Hart, R. C. Brace and Gilbert Good. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. P. G. Kammerer, rector of Trinity. The Rev. Dr. H. A. Flint, Executive Secretary, presented Mr. Brace; the Rev. M. S. Kanaga, of St. John's, presented Mr. Hart, and the Rev. R. H. F. Gairdner, of Trinity Church, Washington, presented Mr. Good. About twenty of the clergy of the diocese were present in the chancel and choir seats. Mr. Brace is serving at St. Thomas' Church, Cannonsburg, Mr. Hart at St. George's, West End, Pittsburgh; and Mr. Good is in the senior class at the Alexandria Seminary.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Paul Trapier Prentiss, a retired clergyman of the Diocese of Southern Florida, but for the past two years a resident of South Carolina, died at his home in McClellanville, S. C., on December 14. Funeral services were conducted in St. James' Church, McClellanville, by the Rev. W. B. Sams, and interment was in Doar Cemetery at Walnut Grove Plantation, on December 16.

The Rev. William B. Everett, Sr., M. D., of Ballston, Virginia, a retired priest of the Diocese of Washington, died Friday, December 14, 1923, and was buried in the churchyard of Zion Church, Fairfax, Va., the next day.

Dr. Everett was born in Kent County, Md., December 19, 1837, and had therefore nearly completed his eighty-sixth year. He graduated in medicine at the University of Maryland in 1862. He was ordained deacon in 1870 by Bishop Whittingham, of Maryland, and priest by Bishop Lay, of Easton, in 1873. His whole ministry was spent within the States of Maryland and Virginia, until his retirement in 1895. He leaves a son, in the ministry of the Church, the Rev. William B. Everett, Jr., rector of Piedmont Parish, Marshall, Virginia.

SEARCH YOUR ATTIC FOR FORTUNES IN OLD CONFEDERATE ENVELOPES.

Among the old letters of many Southern families are hundreds of very rare stamps and envelopes. Many have been found and sold for small fortunes. Single envelopes have been sold for as high as $700.00. Many have brought upwards of $50.00 each. It sounds "fishy," but it's true. They are valuable because they are rare. They are rare, not because there are only a few, for there are many of them, but simply because most of them are forgotten, being stored away in old trunks and closets.

Make a thorough search through your attics for these old war letters. Fortunes in rare stamps have been found in old safes which no one ever dreamed contained anything of value. Many an old trunk or chest contains letters that may bring the finder a profitable reward. Send these to Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Box 63-A, Marshall, Michigan, and he will immediately write you, stating whether they are of value and, if so, will offer you full value for them. He is a private collector of rare stamps and envelopes and will pay more for those he is seeking than a dealer. Besides the Confederate issues, certain United States and foreign stamps are wanted, provided they are on the original envelopes and mailed between 1845 and 1870. Although the rare issues are especially desired he also buys many of the commoner kinds, and many people are in this way getting Christmas money with very little trouble and no expense.

The Advertising Manager of the Southern Churchman has known Mr. Brooks for many years and you may place fullest confidence in his integrity. He will advise you frankly, offering what he regards the envelope as worth to him and in case the envelopes are not satisfactory they will be returned to the sender.

As so many stamps are similar in appearance, Mr. Brooks cannot quote values from written descriptions, but must see the envelopes. Furthermore, the condition of a stamp or envelope has an important bearing on its value, Confederate money, old documents or coins he does not collect.

If envelopes are sent in a bunch they should be very carefully wrapped— if possible between cardboard to protect them from becoming wrinkled or creased. Do not cut the stamps from the envelopes, but send the complete envelopes. Also take care not to tear the stamps or put pins through them. Such damage greatly reduces the value of any stamps. If you have reason to believe your envelopes contain any of great value send them by Registered Mail.

This notice will not be printed again, so make a thorough search now before the address is lost or forgotten. Tell your friends or ask permission to look over their old war letters. Many elderly people have kept hundreds of such letters. Mr. Brooks' address is as follows:

HAROLD C. BROOKS,
Box 63-A, Marshall, Michigan.

We indorse the statement recently made to us by a well-known banker, namely:

"The small coin of human kindness and courtesy, costing so little to the giver and counting so much to the receiver, is more valuable than much fine gold."

And so, from the service-man who greets you at the door, from the young gentlemen at our various windows and in charge of the safe-deposit boxes, and from all of our officers and directors, you may expect to receive uniform courtesy and consideration. Your good-will is essential to our success, and we value it highly.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Keep us, O Lord, from the vain strife of words.—St. Hilary.

Once admit the energy of the divine love, and all things are subdued unto itself.

The way, the truth and the life mean direction, guidance and fellowship.—
John Timothy Stone.

We who look for Jesus ought to be joyful. It is no credit to Our Lord when we look as though we were seeking His grave.—Ex.

Let the past give up to you all the assurance of Christ it contains. Set that assurance of Him before you. Follow that, and the new life to which it leads shall open its best riches to you.—Selected.

Who would be bold enough to claim, with the memory of prayers offered hurriedly, coldly, thoughtlessly, "Father,
I know that Thou hearest me always."
—F. R. Iremonger.

To be a strong hand in the dark to another in the time of need, to be a cup of strength to a human soul in a crisis of weakness, is to know the glory of life.—Hugh Black.

If we noticed little pleasures
As we noticed little pains;
If we quite forget our losses
And remembered all our gains;
If we looked for people's virtues,
And their faults refused to see;
What a comforting, delightful,
Cheerful place this world would be!
—Selected.

A supernatural gospel must be accompanied with a supernatural energy, and then it overcomes the natural heart.
All our preaching and teaching, even though it be of the truth of God, is but as sounding brass till God's Spirit puts a divine soul into the utterance. Then we may speak with an ungrammatical, uncultured tongue; but the power of God will go with it.—Pierson.

The value which prayer may have in my life rests with me. If I wish my friend in New York to talk with me over the telephone, I must take down the receiver, put it to my ear, and listen.
He may be ever so willing and ready to talk, but he cannot talk to me until I do my part. In prayer we not only want God to hear from us; we want to hear from Him. Prayer is the act of taking down the receiver.—Selected.

A SUGGESTED APPROACH TO PEACE

The announcement of the winning plan in the American Peace Award confronts all the American people with a duty for mind and will. Here is the suggestion which a jury of able and thoughtful persons have adjudged to be the most practicable and hopeful approach toward world peace submitted in a great contest which has caught the attention of thinkers everywhere, and in which more than twenty-two thousand manuscripts were received. A lively interest waited the publication of the winning plan, and immediate discussion of an unprecedentedly general character has begun. Politicians and partisans of various sorts will try to distort the issue according to their particular prejudices, but the needful matter is that the sober thought of the American people as a whole should express itself, and that the choice of America should be shaped in its own deliberate freedom so that there may be constituted a referendum on our world relationships which will not be biased and twisted by any other confusing issues.

In the national election of 1920, the question of America's entrance into the League of Nations was involved with so many other political questions and personal likes and dislikes, that no living man can tell in the light of that election what the American people really feel as to our closer association with other nations of the world in a league for the maintenance of peace. The winning plan in the American Peace Award recommends our entrance into the World Court, an immediate approach to the League of Nations through cooperation with its various commissions, and an entrance into membership with careful reservations. For lack of space we do not print the plan in full in the Southern Churchman, particularly as it has been already so widely published in daily newspapers that practically all of our readers will already have seen it. We do print, however, at the end of the editorial space, the form of ballot upon which the American people are asked to express their verdict, and we urge our readers to mark that ballot according to their conviction and to mail it to the address there given. Christian folk, who by the very fact that they are readers of a Church paper show their desire to consider all great questions in accordance with the mind of Christ, should be the first to recognize their privilege for intelligent part in such a shaping of the public opinion of America as this.

THE CATHOLIC INTERESTS OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

At the last General Convention which met in Portland in the fall of 1922, the failure of our Church to assume full membership in the Federal Council of the Churches was due to a misunderstanding which rolled like a fog round the whole subject in the hurried closing hours of the session of the House of Deputies. The Bishops had already voted by nearly a two to one majority for membership in the Federal Council. The clergy voted for it in the House of Deputies, and affirmative action was prevented by a fraction of a vote in the lay order. Had the vote been taken earlier, when the real representation of the Convention was present instead of a mere remnant of the rapidly dwindling delegations, there is little doubt that the House of Deputies would have voted as the Bishops did. Even at that late session, it is wholly probable that the vote would have been affirmative if there had been time for full discussion and for the clearing away of the exaggerated misunderstandings which clouded the issue.

One matter much complained of by the opponents of the Federal Council was the supposed indifference—and as some would have it, even hostility—of the Federal Council to the great Catholic communions of Christendom. What would become of our cordial relationships with the Orthodox Churches of the East, troubled speakers wanted to know, if we joined this Federal Council? Was not the Federal Council merely a sectarian drawing together of Protestantism in contradistinction to those communions that do not call themselves Protestants? In associating ourselves in council thus with the Protestant churches, would we not be imperilling our chance to serve as a reconciler for all Christendom?

In the brief time of the discussion in the General Convention, the effort was made to point out how groundless was this supposition. As a matter of fact no organization has surpassed the Federal Council in open-mindedness and in the wide generosity of its truly catholic sympathies. It has sought to draw together all Christians everywhere in that fellowship of service which can be stronger than all divisions of past history or present name.

Particularly as to the relationship of the Federal Council with the Orthodox Eastern Church, these words in the report to the Executive Committee of the Federal Council made by Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert upon his recent return from a study of religious conditions in Europe, are conclusive:

"No thoughtful observer can be long in the Near East and meet some of its spiritual leaders without realizing that the Protestant Churches of the West know all too little of the Orthodox Eastern Church. He cannot help feeling keenly that here is a great part of the body of Christ with which we ought to have closer fellowship and cooperation.

"We ought, in the first place, to recognize our debt, throughout past centuries, to the Eastern Church. It is a debt which began in the early period of Christianity when the Greek intellect gave theological formulation to our faith. It is a debt which has continued through the Middle Ages and since as the Orthodox Churches have stood as a bulwark against the westward advance of Islam.

"And not to the past alone, but to the present hour may one look to see the strength and the power of the Eastern Church. Certainly there is a current of quickened life flowing through great sections of it today. This has been unmistakable in the informal conferences which it was my privilege to hold with some of the outstanding figures in the Orthodox Churches, including the Acting Patriarch of the Greek Church at Constantinople, the Acting Patriarch of the Armenian Church, Archbishop Anastasis of the Russian Church in Constantinople, and Chrysostom, the newly consecrated Metropolitan of Athens. These, and others whom one might mention, such as the Metropolitan of Saloniki, the Archbishop of Jerusalem, and Bishop Nicholas of Serbia (so well known in America) represent a deeply spiritual and forward-looking leadership with whom we should count it a joy and a privilege to develop the closest relations of fellowship and helpfulness.

"Of course there are obvious weaknesses in the Orthodox Church, as we see it today, its traditionalism, its over-emphasis on ritualism, the lack of education among the clergy. But if one is tempted to pass a final judgment in the light of these things alone, let him recall for how many centuries these Near Eastern Churches have either been in bondage politically to Islam or struggling to keep themselves alive in a hostile environment. The wonder is not that there are things which may be criticized, but that Christian faith and spiritual life survive such obstacles and that the Church still has, as it has always had, a mighty hold upon the hearts and lives of the people.

"Certainly whatever we in the West are to do FOR the Orthodox Churches we must do THROUGH these Churches—not by proselyting among them. The Protestant leaders with whom I talked in Constantinople and Athens, almost without exception, share this opinion. Indeed, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in association with Robert College, has already put into operation a remarkable plan of cooperation with the Orthodox leaders in training priests and workers for their Churches. In "The School of Religion," as this project at Constantinople is called, opened a year ago, there were more than a score of students from the Greek, Armenian, Russian and Bulgarian Orthodox Churches, together with several Protestant students. The Orthodox students came with the full endorsement and support of their bishops, who realize today the need for such help as the American Churches can give. The instruction in the liturgy and Church history is given by leaders of the Orthodox faith, while courses in the Bible, religious education, social service and other subjects are given by American teachers. It is hoped that this School of Religion may ultimately become a union effort, including in its scope all the Protestant Churches carrying on work in any part of the Near East, and always developing in the fullest cooperation with the Orthodox Churches themselves. Here is a superb pioneering enterprise, deserving the support of the whole of American Protestantism and demonstrating the practicability of closer relations between Near Eastern and Western Christianity in every realm of activity.

"Another concrete project for cooperation, the significance of which can hardly be exaggerated, presents itself in the task of religious education for the Greek and Armenian children in the Near East orphanages. Why should not a program be arranged by the joint action of American Protestant leaders and the highest officials of the Greek and Armenian Churches, which would ensure that by a cooperative program the children shall be brought up in the Orthodox Faith, with all that the Churches of the West can contribute through greater familiarity with modern methods of religious education and character building? To develop such a program might open the way to a new relationship with the Orthodox Churches in the whole realm of their life in the future.

"Never was a moment more opportune than the present for developing such cooperation between the Orthodox Church and Protestantism. Their leaders are now turning to us for sympathy and practical help. They are grateful for what has already been done by American Christianity—for the service of revered leaders like Dr. Peet, of the American Board, who, I was told, was one of the most trusted advisers of Patriarch Meletios of the Greek Church; for the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, with which Orthodox leaders have cooperated heartily; for the special interest of the Episcopal Church, which has made many of our Western Churchmen known to them; for the mission of mercy carried on by Near East Relief; for the efforts of the Federal Council of the Churches in behalf of justice for the minorities in the Near East. For these and other reasons there is a surprising interest throughout the Near East in the American Churches. Every one of the Orthodox leaders with whom I spoke welcomed eagerly the suggestion of closer contacts in the future.

"As a representative of the cooperative work of the American Evangelical Churches it was a special satisfaction to me to discover that several of these Orthodox leaders already knew of the Federal Council of the Churches, understood something of the united movement for which it stands, and were grateful for what it had done for the Near East. The Armenian Patriarch spoke feelingly of the service of the Council to his people and pleaded for future help. The Acting Patriarch of the Greek Church knew of the Council's effort in behalf of the refugees and of the message to the first Lausanne Conference protesting against the proposal to expel the patriarchate from Constantinople. The Metropolitan of Athens said that he read the Federal Council Bulletin and was watching the development of the Council with deep interest. In his inaugural address at the time of his recent consecration he urged, among other wise policies, the 'establishment of friendly cooperation with all the Christian Churches throughout the world.'

"As steps in the further development of closer fellowship and helpfulness it would seem that the Protestant Churches of America, acting through the Federal Council as their agency for united effort, ought to serve as a center at least for:

"1. Interpreting the Orthodox Churches to the West. First of all, the present ignorance and lack of understanding must be removed.

"2. Expressing in every possible way the sympathy of the Western Churches toward the Eastern, and facilitating more personal contacts and more systematic communication with the Orthodox leaders in the Near East.

"3. Giving practical assistance to the Orthodox Churches in such ways as they may deem helpful.

"4. Developing a more regular consultative and cooperative relationship with the branches of the Orthodox Churches ministering to their own people in America."

One by one the spectres which were conjured up out of men's misunderstandings to prevent us from fellowship in the Federal Council, are vanishing into air before the serene light of reality. It can, we trust, be confidently believed that in the next General Convention our Church will take its place in this great free and friendly Council which more than any other organization is helping to make the united force of Christendom effective in America.

Proposes

THE PLAN IN BRIEF

- I. That the United States shall immediately enter the Permanent Court of International Justice, under the conditions stated by Secretary Hughes and President Harding in February, 1923.
- II. That without becoming a member of the League of Nations, the United States shall offer to extend its present co-operation with the League and participate in the work of the League as a body of mutual counsel under conditions which
 1. Substitute moral force and public opinion for the military and economic forces originally implied in Articles X and XVI.
 2. Safeguard the Monroe Doctrine.
 3. Accept the fact that the United States will assume no obligations under the Treaty of Versailles except by Act of Congress.
 4. Propose that membership in the League should be opened to all nations.
 5. Provide for the continuing development of international law.

"ON EARTH PEACE"

By the Right Reverend George Ashton Oldham, D. D.

Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Albany

THESE words, you will recognize, as part of the Heavenly chorus which ushered in the advent of the Prince of Peace. How God came into His world is a question of interest and great moment, but it is not nearly of such practical importance as the fact that He came and the purpose for which He was incarnate. The "how" is less important than the "why." Yet thousands are willing to debate and listen to arguments as to the method for one who in sincere and humble spirit earnestly endeavors to fulfil the purpose. Interest in theological controversy is a common, ancient and easy substitute for the living of the Christian life. The world may perhaps afford to wait for the settlement of some arguments but it cannot, without great suffering and perhaps ultimate catastrophe, await the more earnest and widespread practice of the Christian life.

"On earth peace." What a mockery such a phrase seems today! How often the angel chorus must have sounded in a minor key, or sunk to an inaudible whisper, in the past centuries and the last few years. But we must remember their song was prophecy, not fact. The then existing peace, the pax Romanum based on force and fear, was only temporary and bound to fall of its own weight, but the angelic hosts looked forward to a certain and abiding peace based upon good will among men. Note the explicit words. Not long ago, in conversation on this subject with a friend, he said: "But you are living in this world, not the next. We must be practical." In response I make my own the words of a great English statesman: "I am on the side of the angels," and take this prophecy at its literal face value, as looking forward to a time when peace shall prevail—not in heaven only or in the soul of man, but as an actuality in all men's dealings with one another in this world—"peace on earth."

I.

That all right thinking men who know anything about it deplore war, may be taken for granted. No sane man glories in war, especially as we know it today. Its glory has departed. Time was when armed conflict between man and man gave opportunity for physical prowess, skill and dexterity, but those days are gone. War, like everything else in this age, is waged by machinery, and the men engaged are mere attendants or parts of the machine. It is scarcely inspiring to stand or sit in dirty, muddy trenches for days or weeks, shooting at men you never see and against whom individually you have no particular grievance. To set a young man, with courage, daring and high ideals, dropping gas bombs or disease germs on defenseless women and innocent children is far from glorious. On the contrary if we consider it in the abstract we should all say it was an exhibition of wanton depravity or sheer madness. Whatever else modern war may be, not its most ardent supporter will claim it to be glorious.

War, as we know it today, is an enemy of all progress, leaving as it does, both victor and vanquished in a state of complete exhaustion and passing on to generations to come its baneful effects. The last war cost ten million lives, of the best of the race. Compare that with the War Between the States, which cost 700,000, or with the Franco-Prussian War which cost a paltry 184,000 men. Add to this the number of physically maimed and crippled and those morally and mentally unfitted to take up their lives again in peaceful industry and we get some idea of the awful hindrance to real progress of a modern war.

When, however, we look at its future possibilities, all that we have said pales into insignificance. How many of you have read Will Irwin's book, "The Next War"? He gives there, among other things, not only a description but a photograph of a cylinder containing Lewisite gas, a gas so deadly that it need not be inhaled to produce death, only a few drops on the skin will suffice. Being heavier than air, it will sink into cellars and dugouts, killing every living thing. The very ground over which it floats will be barren for seven years. Listen to General Swinton's picture of the next war:

"The final form of human strife, as I regard it, is germ warfare. I think it will come to that; and so far as I can see there is no reason why it should not. If you mean to fight prepare now we must envisage these new forms of warfare, and as far as possible expend energy, time and money in encouraging our inventors and scientists to study the waging of war on a wholesale scale instead of thinking so much about methods which will kill a few individuals at a time."

There will be no non-combatants in the next war. To quote one of our own experts: "Women in the last war showed they were part of the military establishment. Their employment in making war masks and in other war industries enlisted them as members of the warring forces. In the next war bombardment of capitals and big cities is a certainty. People will have to go to their work wearing gas masks. Under each city a shelter city will have to be built. The lower city must be proof against gases intended to penetrate deep."

This is not Jules Verne or Anderson or the Arabian Nights, but the sober reasoned statement of one of our own authorities. Such is modern war—small wonder men who know its character contemplate a recurrence of it with alarm and dread. Said Lloyd George: "If this war is not the last, then the next war will leave the world in ashes." And Lord Brice: "We must destroy war or war will destroy us."

II.

In spite of all this, another war is possible if not imminent. No nations seem thoroughly satisfied with the present settlements. There is seething unrest in the near and Far East; Central Europe is in a turmoil; industrial unsettlement, class strife, national suspicion, fear and hatred are widespread. In addition, and in spite of our high and loud protestations of a few years ago that we were fighting a war to end war, nearly all countries are preparing at a rate never before equalled in time of peace for the next conflict, including strong and peace loving America. Only a week ago in the New York Sunday Times a headline read: "War Department foresees that chemical warfare will play a large part in any conflict of the future and prepares for emergencies."

A government official, after stating that an enemy properly equipped could bombard New York and annihilate the greatest city in America in a few hours with gas bombs, went on to say:

"These possibilities are so horrifying as to suggest that in the future nations may fear to war against one another Nevertheless, preparations for such warfare must proceed. There will be noiseless airplanes. There will be planes speedier than the wind. There will be planes that make their own concealing clouds. You can't hear them, you can't see them, but you 'wake up dead.' How are you going to combat the war when it comes to you in that fashion?"

One of the most talented of the younger generals of our army, the commander of a division through the bloody campaign of the Argonne, says that seventeen nations are even now engaged in diligent preparations for the next war and that a large corps of the best trained, most intelligent and capable officers of our army are constantly so employed. He went on to say:

"The plans being perfected will determine how your boys shall be drafted, clothed, armed and subsisted, trained and transported to the field of operations, how they shall be deployed, blooded by trial battle and finally plunged into the fury of conflict. It is being determined whether their dead bodies shall be buried or cremated, how the shell shocked gassed and wounded men may most quickly be rehabilitated and hurried back for further effort, and how more and more of your boys and others like them shall be gathered with least delay and pushed into the shambles to replace those who have been destroyed."

Only a few nights ago in the Albany Evening Journal the headlines read:

"Nine Telegrams Can Mobilize U. S. for War. Col. M. B. Stewart tells officers in Albany program for next conflict. Industries coordinated. Washington ready to move two million troops at moment's notice. When the next war comes to America nine telegrams dispatched from the Department of War will mobilize the nation."

How far we have traveled in the past five years. Four or five years ago no paper would have dared print such statements.

What does all this mean except that another war is considered at least possible if not probable. Sensible men do not prepare at such cost of money, energy and brain against impossible contingencies. How rational human beings can sit still or remain passive in view of such a prospect it is difficult to understand.

We seem to be bewitched or in a sort of nightmare unable to resist as we drift toward a precipice. And were that all, I should not have had the temerity to present the matter at all. With God, however, all things are possible and I am sure there is a way out. But there is no time to lose. We must start to walk in that way immediately. On the eve of a conflict, with all nations armed to the teeth and a proper casus belli, it will be too late. As well try to stem Niagara. If this dread alternative is to be avoided something must be done now, and done with vigor and determination, and in this effort every patriotic American should gladly cooperate. Said General O'Ryan: "The American people can end war in our time if they get on the job. Let us wage peace. . . . I should be a traitor to my country if I did not do everything in my power to abolish war."

Are we not as individuals and as a nation justified in making the most earnest and desperate efforts and even running the necessary risks and paying the necessary price to attain peace?

III.

The Church's Task. No other institution is so well fitted and has such a duty laid upon it to cooperate in this task as the Church of the Prince of Peace. Says an unknown writer of the second century: "What the soul is to the body, that are Christians in the world. The soul holds the body together, and Christians hold the world together. God has assigned to them this illustrious position, which it were unlawful for them ever to forsake."

But what are we to do? How are we to start?

In the first place we must do some straight thinking. The Church as a whole has never seriously faced the problem of its attitude towards war. The outsider is frequently puzzled by the apparent inconsistency of our professions and our practice. Said a native minister in India one day:

"You must know that the educated people of this country look upon Christianity as a warring, blood-spilling religion. I would strongly advise you not to use the word 'Christianity' in India. It is here regarded as the name of a Western religion that has failed."

A learned Hindu, member of the Imperial Legislature, said:

"Ten years ago it looked as though Christ was to become the dominating personality of India, but the great war has settled that forever. Why, in God's name ought Indians to accept your Western religion? It promotes the very thing we hate most."

Such utterances should give us pause!

I am not a pacifist, for I frankly recognize that there may be occasions when a nation is driven to the use of armed force in defence of its liberties; but to find oneself in such a position unwittingly is one thing and to go deliberately along the path that leads to such an impasse, with our eyes open as they have been by the last war, is another matter, and in such case we may not acquit ourselves of sin before Almighty God.

Secondly, we can recover for ourselves and transmit to others more faith in God and man. Do we really believe that God is a living God, directing His universe and able and desirous of directing it according to the plan revealed in His only begotten Son? Do we really believe that? If so, we might act more consistently on that faith.

Do we trust our fellow men? Aye, there's the rub and the tragedy. After all the splendid heroisms and high ideals shown in the last war we began almost immediately to act as if material interests were the most important, material motives the most compelling, material guarantees the most reliable. What awful materialists we are! The worst danger in this whole situation is not the mere external activities or material cost of our preparations, but the underlying scepticism and cynicism of which these are the expression. Our leaders seem to have lost faith in humanity as well as in God and here lies the Church's task—to rekindle once again such faith in the hearts and breasts of men. War is, after all, very largely the result of a state of mind. If instead of men going up and down saying: "You cannot change human nature." "There always have been wars and there always will be," they would go up and down the world saying: "There must never be another war," who does not believe a different state of things would prevail?

Moreover, the task is not quite so hopeless as it might seem. In the past few years people's minds have undergone a gradual but very definite and hopeful change. All the nations lamented the fact that they were dragged into the last war; all believed they were fighting for peace; the peoples of all countries honestly believed that war was forced upon their peace loving rulers by unscrupulous foes. A century ago this was not the way war was regarded. The very fact that people are saying constantly that Christianity has broken down is significant. No one thought it had broken down through the Napoleonic wars. People realize now as they never did before that Christianity means peace and good will. A lecturer who recently travelled around the world writes: "In every one of these nations there was accumulating proof that the common people . . . were sick, tired and utterly weary of the military outbreaks and that a consuming passion for unbroken peace was taking possession of humanity. Not one single incident occurred to call this statement in question in eight months travel in nineteen nations representing all kinds of folks, to whom over two hundred and sixty public addresses were delivered, the substance of which in every case was a condemnation of war as a method and a prophecy of a warless world some time."

Among the younger generation, in our schools, colleges and universities there is a growing interest in this subject as well as among the very numerous and increasingly powerful class of toilers. The leaven is at work and is certain in time to leaven the lump. But how greatly the process might be accelerated, and with what saving of money, life and suffering, if only Christians at large would take this problem seriously and bring all their tremendous power to bear.

"Nothing," says Victor Hugo, "is so powerful as an idea whose hour has come." The hour of the idea of "Peace on earth" has come and for one I am sure it will proceed to its successful consummation. The great question for us of this generation is—Shall we have a worthy share in bringing that happy day to pass?

In the third place we can make a serious, determined reasoned effort.

We live in a world of law and order. Things do not just happen. Nothing comes by chance. Everything is the result of some prior cause. We won victory in the last war because we prepared for it. We cannot find peace because we have made no such determined and persistent effort in that direction. The harvest always corresponds to the seed. Hate, fear, greed, suspicion and their like lead inevitably to war, while their contraries—love, sympathy, service, good will, issue in peace. It is for the Christian Church to sow these seeds and sow them far and wide. The Christian nations have never yet turned completely aside from the ways of war. We have always depended in the last analysis upon war instead of law, upon might instead of right. It is high time we did better! The history of mankind is strewn with wrecked civilizations—surely it is time we tried some other way. It remains for wiser persons than I to say what kind of organizations may be helpful towards an ordered world, but that such an institution as the World Court might be made to minister to such an end, I have no manner of doubt, and I devoutly hope and pray that the subject of our entrance therein may be kept free from partisan politics and be treated on its merits as our President has asked, as a non-partisan question. In the light of my slight knowledge of American history it seems to me a peculiarly American institution—in line with all our professed ideals for decades past and in large measure the product of American talent and labors. Christians should plead, moreover, that this and all our foreign policy shall be directed in some measure at least from the standpoint of service and not solely from that of our own interests. That we may be strong enough to stand alone does not necessarily mean that we ought to. It may mean a heavy responsibility to use our power to help those unable to help themselves. I sometimes think we need to pray those stirring and searching lines of Kipling—

"If drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe
Such boastings as the gentiles use
Or lesser breeds without the law,
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget! Lest we forget!"

But it must constantly be remembered that no organization or machinery, however perfect, will of itself accomplish the task. If we want peace, we must provide its conditions and walk in its way: which way is not reached merely by political adjustments, however wise, but by learning to live with a new outlook, a new motive, a new set of values. Ultimately it is a matter of the spirit.

"EUCCHARISTIC ADORATION."

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of December 15 the Rev. Wallace Carnahan has a letter under the above caption. In it he says:

"In this essential part of the Communion office (Ye who do 'to Gloria in Excelsis') the name of the Deity or one of the persons of the Trinity is mentioned eighty-one times; twenty-five times in the second grammatical person, and fifty-six times in the third grammatical person; amongst the latter Our Saviour is mentioned thirty-three times; and never once in the second grammatical person.

"A moment's reflection will show any one that the compilers of the Prayer Book, by never addressing a prayer to the Saviour in the Communion Service, meant to make Eucharistic Adoration impossible."

"A moment's reflection will show" that the Saviour could not be addressed in the Communion Service proper. It is a service of sacrifice offered to the Father in which the Son is the Victim, as the Consecration Prayer shows. The Hebrews would have been ridiculous had they addressed the sacrificial lamb, the type of Christ. Hence "the omission of such prayer" has no "tremendous significance," as Mr. Carnahan thinks, and no significance whatever. The omission is logically proper and necessary.

Again Mr. Carnahan says:

"It is unthinkable that we should believe Our Saviour personally present, especially in this His own special Sacrament, and never address a word of devotion to Him. Try to imagine what our Catholic brethren would make of it if there were a prayer in the Communion Service addressed to the Saviour after the consecration of the elements. Would they not triumphantly point to it as abundant justification for Eucharistic Adoration?"

What would Catholics do in that case? They would ask General Convention to take it out of the Service as not only illogical but as marring the intent of the Service.

But is the Saviour not Personally Present after Consecration—spiritually and sacramentally, not materially? Did Our Lord deceive His Apostles when, giving them the Bread, He said of it, "This is My Body?" Even Calvin believed in and taught the objection, real, spiritual Presence of Christ in the Eucharistic. So did Bishop Andrews, Bishop Overall, Bishop Cosin, Bishop Taylor, Bishop Wilson, Bishop Sparrow, Bishop Mant, Bishop Lake, Bishop Bull, Dean Comber, Nelson, Sherlock, Johnson, Wheatley, Thorndike, Knox and other Fathers of the English Church. So does the Homily on the Sacrament, first part.

Mr. Carnahan also says:

"A rubric permits the singing of a hymn during the Communion Service, but it is contrary to the spirit of the service to use here one of the hymns that is addressed to the Saviour."

The hymn immediately follows the Consecration, and all the hymns in the Old Hymnal except one are addressed to the Saviour, the exception (No. 220) being addressed to the communicants. Is this fact not "tremendously significant?" And is singing hymns of praise and worship to the Saviour after Consecration not "Eucharistic Adoration" of a really, spiritually, objectively Present Christ? Is it not also significant, as Bishop Overall says, "Before consecration we call them God's creatures of bread and wine * * * after consecration the Body and Blood of

The angels, with unerring logic, point out the efficient cause of peace on earth as "good will among men." That is the thing we must endeavor to cultivate and practice—good will among ourselves, in our Church, among the Churches between classes in the nation, between races and other nations, until the earth shall be filled with the spirit of good will as the waters cover the sea.

Christ"? Bishop Overall composed that part of the Catechism which treats of the Sacraments.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

Mr. Editor:

Will you please let me ask a question or two apropos the present controversy about The Virgin Birth? I am not seeking to prove anything, as a matter of intellectual gymnastics. The question is too sacred and serious for that. I want light, more light. And this is my point, in the form of a question. What are we going to do with the last eight verses of the first Chapter of St. Matthew if the contentions of the so-called Modernists are right? Furthermore, what is to become of the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth verses of the first Chapter of St. Luke if the conclusions of so-called modern scholarship are to be the final authority in regard to the birth of the Saviour? I am not an obscurantist, nor a "mossback" about anything in any sense of the word, and I am inclined tremendously to the "forward-looking" aspect of things which is in harmony with sane advancement, even in theology. I trust I am always open to conviction on the right side. I think I am fairly well posted in regard to the arguments, pro and con, of the so-called Fundamentalists and Modernists, but I think I am right in saying that if the Virgin Birth is to be proved by Scripture, and Scripture alone, we have got to reckon, without equivocation, with the statements I have referred to above, or abandon the field altogether and base this argument on the reductio ad absurdum. It is not a question of faith, although faith enters in. It is not a question as to whether a miracle was performed before or after the birth of the Saviour, although there was a miracle. It is not a question of connecting the Incarnation with any fact or time, although there was a fact and a time in regard to the Virgin Birth. It is a question of integrity, the integrity of the Scripture narrative. If there is no final and absolute truth about the accounts in St. Matthew and St. Luke, if what they said was not inspired by the Holy Ghost, if their words in this case are open to question, the Incarnation is only what we make it by our own scholarship and not what God makes it by His miracle. Make your miracle a slave to your scholarship if you choose, but do not try, consciously or unconsciously, to rob the world of a Saviour whose coming produced a Magnificat that has been sung in holy gratitude by millions of souls through the ages. "How can this be," said Mary to the Angel, "I have no husband." Are these crucial words, these pregnant words, an interpolation? No commentator or exegete has ever said so. And yet the Modernist, "good, easy man," has told us that the Incarnation could have come, and perhaps did come, after the birth of the Saviour, and that God fulfilled Himself in this way in order to vindicate so-called "natural law"! Furthermore, when we connect the consternation of Joseph, as told in St. Matthew, with the amazement of Mary, as told in St. Luke, after they were convinced of the state of the case, we have a solid foundation of fact and inspired testimony so commanding, so convincing, that it makes the honest-hearted Christian exclaim in glad wonder, "With God nothing is ever impossible!" Is it not in such a trust as this that we find, not an anaemic Christ, but a Divine Saviour?

CONCERNING "THE VERDICT OF THE MARKET PLACE."

Mr. Editor:

Since when has the Editor of that valuable paper, The Wall Street Journal (from which a recent correspondent of the Southern Churchman quoted), become a theologian capable of deciding so positively the differences now before the Church?

The matter is not quite so simple as he thinks. Probably no clergyman thinks exactly as he did twenty or even ten years ago and the question is whether the so-called Modernist represents, as he believes, the principles of his Church or not. A question that can only be decided by the Church acting through the legal machinery of its constitution.

Until such action is taken would it not be wise for the "Market Place" to refrain from platitudes remembering that it is not the first time its verdict has been: "Crucify Him!"

THANKS FROM JAPAN.

Mr. Editor:

A cable has just come from the Church Missions House that $500,000 has been received for the Emergency Fund for the relief of the Japanese Church. Words are totally inadequate to express the gratitude of Bishop McKim and his staff, and of Bishop Gailor and myself, at this good news. Will you let me have the privilege of saying through your columns how thankful we all are for the prompt and generous response of the people of the Church at home to the needs of the Church in Japan.

Bishop McKim, Bishop Gailor, and I are going carefully over the situation confronting the Church in Japan at this time. When we return to the United States in February, Bishop Gailor and I expect to have detailed plans to present to the National Council with regard to the reconstruction of the Church's work.

Let me add a further word to express the privilege I have felt of being the bearer of many gifts from people in the United States to the members of the Mission staff in Japan. Twenty trunks were, through the courtesy of the Admiral Steamship Line, transported across the Pacific without expense, and the Japanese custom officials passed them without examination. The contents have been distributed and have done much to relieve the serious inconveniences from which our friends in Japan have suffered.

WARNING.

Mr. Editor:

Many of us are aware of the peripatetic beggars and fakes who appear regularly and serenely. The classic instance is that of a man who presented himself to me in Philadelphia two years ago, with the statement that his wife had just died after fifteen years of illness in a sanitarium. In consequence, his resources had been exhausted and he had been compelled to take to canvassing for a livelihood, in which he was disqualified by his former business career. At that time he gave the date of his wife's demise as six short months before. Lo and behold, within the past weeks, he appeared in St. Louis, failing to recognize me, told the same story, except that this time his wife had died on the fourth of last July.

Another, apparently, is a man claiming to be an ex-aviator in the recent War and as having served with the British forces. His story is that he had been engaged in commercial aerial photography, had crashed, and in the crash had lost his plane and other equipment, which meant all his capital.

If either of these men should present himself for assistance of any character, will the person to whom he appeals wire me at once at my expense? My desire is not only to protect those whose sympathies may be aroused and violated, but also to secure the apprehension of either of these fakes.

Mr. Editor:

It appears from reports coming to St. Paul's School that one or more persons are in the field soliciting funds in the name of St. Paul's School without any authority whatsoever. In fact, we have no authorized agents to solicit for the School, except representatives of the General Board of Missions and the American Church Institute for Negroes.

I understand that a fluent talker, well versed in many matters, styling himself a German, J. E. or D. H. Braun, a native of Georgia, but now of Massachusetts, is one of the parties soliciting in the name of St. Paul's.

This is to warn the clergy and all friends of St. Paul's School that the party in question is not known to the School authorities and any one to whom he applies for funds will do the School a great favor by refusing his appeals and by telegraphing the principal of the same.

ON "THE URGE OF FAITH."

Mr. Editor:

Under the title, "The Urge of Faith," in words beginning, "There came to us the other day an envelope enclosing a page torn from a San Francisco financial newspaper," etc., you have written a beautiful article, and my purpose of sending this note, is to thank you for it all. I was impressed with the fact of your interest in the subject, and my friend here (the Editor of the "Commercial News," and a Church Warden), jumped at the chance to make a comment upon the subject as outlined in the New York Churchman—the Labor question.

In sending to you my friend's comment, I thought it only necessary to send his comments, but took occasion to stamp my name and address upon the scrap and upon my envelope.

I am greatly pleased with what you have written and make this second reference to it, and add another "thank you" for your editorial in so full and complete a reference to it all.

With my very best wishes for the success of the dear "Southern Churchman," and all the compliments of the season, I am,

Sincerely yours, in His name,

GEO H. ANDRUSS.

Book Reviews

VERSES BY THE WAY. By James Henry Darlington Bishop of Harrisburg. With a foreword by Edwin Markham. Brentano's, New York.

Bishop Darlington's book contains an appreciative "Foreword by a Friend," written by Edwin Markham, which is so accurate and full as to make it difficult for any other pen to take up a task which seems to have been exhaustively performed. Those who know the author of these poems will recognize throughout the work the loving personality which has made and retained for him so many friends. Edwin Markham says: "Bishop Darlington has a genius for friendship, and this little book may be looked on as a love-letter to his many friends."

Great variety is to be found in these poems: the keen observant eye of the lover of Nature; the short epigrammatic rendering of parables of grace; the ethical lessons, never prosy, but given in the true spirit of poetry—these are calculated to help the reader "when the paths are steep and the climbing is hard."

TALKS TO HIGH SCHOOL BOYS. By John M. Holmes. Illustrated. McMillan Company, New York. Pp. 162.

Its title describes this book, and there is little more to be said about it, except that there are thirty-three "talks," and that most of them are of a character that if properly delivered will interest boys of the High School Age. The illustrations given are simple and easily remembered. The author recognizes the value of giving an audience of young people something to look at while one is speaking, and offers a number of simple objects that can be used for this purpose.

ESSEX SKETCHES. By Virginia Showell. Thomas and Evans, 217-219 Gullford Avenue, Baltimore, Md. Illustrated. Pp. 85. Price $1.50.

We have here a dozen interestingly written accounts of old homes in one of the earliest settled counties in Virginia. These sketches are built around some incident to give them what is sometimes called the point of contact. Essex County, Virginia, in early Colonial days was thoroughly accessible by way of the Rappahannock River which, like a great thoroughfare, skirts its border. When railroads were built, and that form of travel superseded the river, it became quite isolated, but with the coming of the automobile, this lovely section of Virginia has come into its own again. Many readers throughout the country will welcome this little volume, which will make for them a pleasant introduction to a section of the country that deserves to be far better known than it is at present.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE ADULT MIND.

EVERY one is pretty well agreed that if Service Leagues and Fellowships are to accomplish their purpose they must remain within the intellectual sphere of the members who comprise them. Those who have been the advisers of these new societies insisted from the beginning that adults must not intrude into the meetings, for two reasons: first, the young people became self-conscious, and second, the older people could not remain silent.

Having successfully defended the young people from dangers without, we must now address ourselves to similar hazards within. Some of the young people have risen in protest against the absorption of initiative by counsellors and advisers. These latter seem to have misunderstood or forgotten the principle with which they started; namely, that they were only to be tolerated and must lead from the rear. Sometimes the clergy seem to be the offenders. The young people are grateful and dependent upon the interest of the rector. A peculiarly sensitive age resents the indifference of their pastor, and, through him, the officials of the church to which they are related. But a society will never thrive in the best sense of the term when the rector takes the initiative and conducts a glorified Sunday-school class.

More often the adult counsellor bears the indictment. He may be clerical or lay, male or female.

It may be that in the Southland we are over-conservative or even obscurantist, yet those who know the young people and have their confidence are sure that a great many of the intellectual difficulties and doubts concerning the faith imputed to them do not exist. It may be that the adolescent, as we know him in most of our societies, has not reached the age of intellectual revolt. It may be that we have less of dogmatic skepticism in our collegiate life. But if evidence means anything, the young people in the Service Leagues of the Southland are not crying for intellectual freedom and unshackling of thought.

One of the real dangers today is that counsellors are apt to read into the mind of our young people intellectual difficulties which they frankly have not experienced. May be their crass ignorance has protected them. May be they still "think as a child"; but facts are stubborn things. The crisis which has been so largely emphasized in the great urban centers of the North finds no counterpart in the Southern Dioceses where the Service Leagues have been well established for a period of years.

As the counsellor felt objectively the danger of the intrusion of the adult mind, let him now be on his guard subjectively, lest having saved the young people from "Scylla" he dash them into "Charybdis!" The creative precedes the critical. If the central motive of loyalty be present, more rational and comprehensive faith is inevitable with natural growth, but there is enough unreality and intellectual presumption at large to put us on our guard against its invasion into the ranks of our Service Leagues.

One of the valid criticisms of youth today is this: that boys and girls in early adolescence are assuming the dress, the manner, the "sang froid" of their elders, and confusion will be worse confounded if we invite them to emulate the flippant skepticism of a maturity which they have not reached or the honest doubts they have not personally faced. The counsellor could do a great service if where a searching question is asked or some Biblical interpretation is sought he will answer frankly, clearly and firmly. If he have unsolved personal doubts as regards the central truths of the faith, he had far better refrain from a position of responsibility and leadership until his earnest search is rewarded.

No one is called upon to stultify himself, but young people can afford to bask in a childlike faith, even though it be childish, until they reach an age when these questions will press upon them for a more satisfactory answer than they have had heretofore. In older groups, where constructive thinking is to be expected, the program subjects can be built around the very fundamentals under discussion today, and no one who grows to maturity in one of these organizations could feel that the Church has shackled the freedom of his individual thinking.

A Historical Sketch.

Dr. W. E. Gardner, Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education, has written a brief story of the Young People's Movement for the Hand Book recently published in the Diocese of Southern Ohio:

"The first organization of young people's societies of which we have any record is of those established in the Diocese of Michigan in 1915 by Bishop Williams with the help of Miss Julia M. Fish. These societies in Michigan were bound together by the name "The Episcopal Young People's Association." They came into existence because of the call of the Bishop and existed primarily to help him in any way that he suggested. One of the outstanding features of the early years of their service to Bishop Williams was their annual Corporate Communion service with him.

The next move to organize young people came in the Diocese of California. A number of persons interested in young people felt that the time had come when the Church should provide means whereby young people could express their latent powers and train themselves as leaders for the future Church. With this end in view, a meeting of all interested was called and a plan of diocesan organization was developed. The California organization adopted the name "Young People's Fellowship."

The third outstanding step in the development of the movement was the gathering together of four parishes in Louisville, Kentucky, and the extending of their influence throughout the surrounding parishes. They called themselves "The Young People's Service League."

The next step was the going of the Rev. Gordon Reese to the Diocese of Texas. From Houston as a center he stimulated the organization of many parochial groups and in a brief time developed one of the strongest diocesan organizations of young people in the church. They called themselves "The Young People's Service League."

While the last three movements above mentioned were going on, organizations were being formed in Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts and many other dioceses.

These are the outstanding facts in the organization and development of this movement, which now has organized groups in every diocese.

The movement has grown up spontaneously because of three principal reasons: first, young men and women of the Church desire an organization where they can meet together; secondly, they instinctively feel that the Church has power to give them in their struggles for right living; through organization they sought closer contact with the spiritual powers of the Church; thirdly, they wished to share in the contributions which the Church ever makes for the uplift of the world.

These three motives should be kept ever in mind, for the young people under the leadership and guidance of the Bishop can become the determining factors in the future life of the Church.

The Programs in the Hand Book Issued by the National Council.

A request has come for the amplification of the Program Subjects in Booklet 4801 of the National Council. Each week hereafter a slightly amplified program will be subjected.

January 27—Third Sunday after Epiphany:

5. Discussion:

Should the so-called "Blue Laws" be Repealed?

6. Hymn: "Saviour Again to Thy Dear Name we Raise."

7. Sentence Prayers and Benediction.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

LOOK BACK AND TAKE HOPE.

The date which this issue bears is a day which is already sacred throughout the South, and is becoming more and more prominent in the whole country as the hero whom it commemorates is becoming better understood from year to year.

This is well attested by the fact that one of the books which best introduces General Robert E Lee to the American public, is written by a New Englander from Massachusetts, who bears a name that dates back to the earliest days of that great commonwealth. "Lee, the American," by Gamaliel Bradford, is recognized as an authority by historians, North and South, and its fairness and generous treatment of all the historical characters connected with the great conflict, commends it to the reading public throughout the English-speaking world.

(We cannot refrain from a word of gratitude that this distinguished author has consented to write for the Southern Churchman, and that an article from his pen will appear in next week's issue.)

It is from this volume that we have frequently quoted heretofore in calling the attention of our readers to the importance to all Americans, of January 19.

This year, however, we have in hand as we write, the work of another distinguished Virginian upon this subject, a Virginian, and a Churchman, who passed on to his great reward within the last twelve months—Thomas Nelson Page.

In his book, Robert E. Lee, Man and Soldier, in writing of the surrender after a splendid tribute to the generosity of General Grant at Appomattox, he continues as follows:

"Thenceforth he who had been the leader of armies, whose glorious achievements had filled the world, who had been the prop of a high-hearted nation's hope, was to walk the narrow by-way of private life, defeated, impoverished, and possibly misunderstood.

"But to us who have survived for the space of more than a generation, how different it appears. We know that time, the redresser of wrongs, is steadily righting the act of unkind Fate; and Fame, firmly established in her high seat, is ever placing a richer laurel on his brow.

"Yea, ride away, thou defeated general! Ride through the broken fragments of thy shattered army, ride through thy war-wasted land, amid thy desolate and stricken people. But know that thou art riding on Fame's highest way:

"This day shall see Thy head wear sunlight and thy feet touch stars."

In these days when we see the world floundering through despondency, over-shadowed by suspicion; when nation seems to be ready to rise against nation, and financial chaos may be breaking loose in Europe, it is well for us to look back upon such a scene as that picture by Mr. Page, and to remember that under God's guidance the darkest hour may be turned to brilliant sunshine when viewed through the perspective of a generation or a half-century.

Let us use January nineteenth as a day on which we shall make the deep resolve to view all disappointments, and apparent defeat of our hopes with the same courageous faith that was manifested by Robert E. Lee, and that has since carried his memory to the pinnacle of respect and love.

PROGRESSIVE RELIGION.

Sometimes it takes a newspaper headline to drive home in our minds the enormous progress that has been made during the centuries.

Thus the startling announcement, "BELIEVE GOLD IN KING TUT'S TOMB WORTH $50,000,000—Treasure Buried with Pharaoh Included 3,000 Feet of Solid Gold," which appears in connection with the further investigation of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, may not at a casual reading seem to have any particular religious value to us in America in the Twentieth Century, A. D.

If, however, we pause to reflect that this $50,000,000 of gold represents a religious idea, that the Egyptian of his day had a strong belief in immortality, so deep, in fact, that he thought the departed could use gold and silver, food and raiment in their journeyings through the other world the above headline takes on a different aspect.

If we further meditate upon this subject and contrast the attitude of that monarch and his contemporaries toward the future life, with our own, we begin to realize how tremendous has been the advance of the spirit during the centuries. The belief of these ancients in the future life was perhaps as strong as ours today, but the nature of that life was entirely different. Materiality dominated their ideas not only here but hereafter. They believed they would live beyond death, but they also thought that place would be one in which the necessities of this life would continue to serve him.

How great is the contrast between those dead millions lying idle through the ages, and the sum contributed by Andrew Carnegie for his Peace Foundation, or even the offer of $100,000 by Edward Bok for a Peace Plan.

Through the constant spread of the teachings of Our Saviour the wealthy of today are coming to realize more and more that money is a trust, that its value in the next life depends upon the way it works here in this world, both during their lifetime and after their departure.

Perhaps nothing illustrates the progress of the desire to help through financial assistance more vividly than the report of the "Hundred Neediest Cases," as shown in the New York Times. In 1912 $3,630.88 was raised by this Metropolitan paper through its appeals, and one hundred cases were cared for. This year in the same way more than one hundred and seventy-seven thousand dollars was raised in the same length of time by the same method, and over ten thousand people took part in sending their contributions for this fund. The number of families cared for has grown from one hundred to three hundred, and this year included more than 1,200 individuals.

In commenting upon the fact that not more than two per cent of the subscribers contributed to this fund, the Times uses the following pertinent words:

"It has been the experience of charitable societies generally in this and other communities that not more than two per cent of the people give to the charities of the community where there is no common fund or united appeal. The Times's experience is therefore not exceptional, but it emphasizes the need of a common effort to bring a larger proportion of the people into the habit of yearly giving.

The growing response to this annual appeal for the Hundred Neediest Cases, while it illustrates general disappointing experience with regard to the relative number of givers, does, on the other hand, give prospect of the coming of a time when there will be a closer and wider cooperation among the charitable organizations both in their service and in their appeal to the community. This fund will have served more than the thousands whom it has directly helped in the past if it leads in this direction."

Church Intelligence

Results of Every Member Canvass.

Partial reports of the recent Every Member Canvass indicate that there will be an increase of several hundred thousand dollars in 1924 in the offerings for the general work of the Church.

Knowing from past experience that it is impossible to secure complete reports soon after the making of the Canvass, the Field Department requested the dioceses to send in the record of the first six parish reports of pledges which reached diocesan headquarters. The purpose of this was to furnish an indication or trend, just as the result of a political election is forecasted by the returns from scattered precincts.

Up-to-date, eighteen dioceses have made these preliminary reports, and parish reports in other forms have been received from a number of others. The list includes both large and small dioceses, and parishes reporting are of all kinds, large and small. It is believed that these reports are fairly representative, for they include decreases as well as increases. There is no indication that in any case an effort was made to select only favorable examples.

The parishes reported made pledges for 1923 totaling $162,472; for 1924 their pledges total $184,563. This shows an increase of $22,091. In a number of cases it was reported that the canvass was incomplete and that the final figures would be larger.

According to the Living Church Annual, there are 7,740 parishes and missions in the Church, exclusive of foreign missions. As many of these are merely preaching stations or very small missions, it is estimated that for purposes of calculation 4,000 would be a conservative figure. The one hundred and eight parishes reported on are one-third-seventh of this number. If the average gain shown by the reports is accepted for the whole Church as a basis of calculation, this would indicate a probable gain of $812,000 in total pledges for the quota for diocesan and general work. Judging from the past, about half of this, or $406,000 will be devoted to the general work of the Church. Figuring on the basis of money rather than number of parishes, the estimated increase would be about $370,000.

Among the increases reported are the following: Trinity, Watervliet, N. Y. (Albany), pledged its whole quota. Christ Church, Cooperstown, N. Y. (Albany), pledged more than its quota. Bethesda, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., (Albany), doubled its 1923 pledges. Good Shepherd, Scranton, Pa. (Bethlehem), increased from $3,750 to $4,500, with more to come. Christ Church, Norfolk, Va. (S. Va.), increased from $2,382 to $6,617. Good Shepherd, York, S. C. (Upper S. C.), increased from $600 to $1,080. Christ Church, Springfield, Ohio (Southern Ohio), increased from $2,400 to $3,227. St. Bartholomew's, Chicago, increased from $695 to $2,524. Epiphany, Chicago, increased from $500 to $2,223. St. Luke's, Evanston (Chicago), increased from $15,538 to $20,405. St. Andrew's Minneapolis (Minn.), which paid $115 in 1923 has pledged $625. St. Mary's, St. Paul (Minn.), has increased from $480 to $956. The Cathedral, Fribault (Minn.), increased from $1,782 to $3,924.

Dr. Emhardt's Mission Abroad.

Dr. Emhardt, Field Director of the Foreign-born Americans Division, sails for Europe and the Near East on January 14, as special representative of the National Council to the Churches of Europe and the Near East. He will accompany Bishop McCormick, who has been appointed Bishop of the American Churches in Europe, during part of the Bishop's visitation. Dr. Emhardt's mission abroad is of great importance.

The development of the work of the Division with national groups has reached a stage at which perfect accord with the Churches and in some cases the Governments in the homelands is indispensable. Some of the problems he must meet have reached an acute stage; others, after several years of patient culture, are about to blossom forth as developments of great importance to our relation to foreign peoples and their Churches, both at home and abroad. Our Church is sending a single representative to visit those fields which are continuously being covered by several representatives from each of the other large religious bodies, although our relations in most cases are more intimate and are of far-reaching importance both to the Church and State. Dr. Emhardt's mission is a delicate one. He should be sustained by the prayers of all Church people.

American Professor in Jerusalem Seminaries.

At the urgent request of Eastern Patriarchs the Episcopal Church is about to send a clergyman to take up his residence in Jerusalem. The Rev. Charles Thorley Bridgeman, assistant secretary of the Foreign-born Americans Division of the National Council has been appointed by the Council as Chaplain in Jerusalem, where he will be a professor in the Seminary of the Armenian, Gregorian and Greek Orthodox Churches. He will thus be a vital factor in the development of leaders for the people of the Near East. He plans to begin his work in the spring. Provision for the new position is made through the Good Friday Offerings.

This represents a policy of far-reaching importance, viz., the helping of the Eastern Churches from within. It is not the imposition of American ways and forms of religion on Eastern people, but the response to the call of the East, crushed down by war and persecution, to help them resuscitate themselves. Back in the forties of the last century the Episcopal Church had a bishop, Bishop Southgate in Turkey, whose policy was the same, cooperation with the native Churches. Since his recall no formal ministrations have been thus given in the Near East.

The new American Chaplain will also hold a position of Honorary Canon of the English Cathedral in Jerusalem.

The Orthodox Patriarchs of the Church of Roumania, Constantinople, and Antioch have made like requests to the Episcopal Church, which will be answered in due course of time.

A Reply.

Brethren of the House of Bishops:

The writer, a minister of Jesus Christ, set apart to declare God's good news about His son, who was physically descended from David, and decisively declared Son of God in His holiness of Spirit: God Our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ bless you and give you peace.

First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ about you all, because of your sincere desire to put forth words of reassurance in these days. As God is my witness, whom I serve in my spirit in spreading the good news of His Son, I never fail to mention you in our prayers.

1. I rejoice that you have made a distinction between the Christian faith and the forms in which it is expressed. Faith is indeed a personal relation, a living attitude, real confidence and trust. Before any creed was formulated faith existed. "I have not found so great faith, no not in all Israel." Our Master said to a Roman soldier who so far as the forms were concerned probably believed in Mars. The man had a sure confidence that Christ would and could help him. What warrant can there be to demand of any one more than Christ Himself asked of men?

2. Is it not the fact that the creeds are statements about the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit? The Nicene Creed came out of a century-long controversy, first over the relation between the Father and the Son, second over the relation between the two natures in Our Lord, and third over the relation of the Holy Spirit to the other two hypostases in the divine-being. Only a knowledge of these controversies can reveal to us of today the original meaning of this creed. We say that we believe in three persons but we all know that the word person in English is not the equivalent to the Greek word hypostasis in the Creed. We do not believe in three personalities in God.

3. Is it not a fact that the Apostles' Creed also has a history. Its original form did not contain the phrase which is under discussion today, "Born of the Virgin Mary." That clause was added to the creed about two hundred and fifty years after Christ's death and at the time of the Docetist heresy which asserted that Jesus was not a real man. The purpose of this article in the thought of the men who inserted it in the creed was to declare the reality of Our Lord's humanity.

4. It is entirely fitting that some test of discipleship should be required by the Church. Is it wise that the test should be different from that which the Master Himself asked of men? "If any man will come after me let him take up his cross daily and follow me." Can any satisfactory reply be made to this question which Bishop Lawrence asked in the House of Bishops at the last General Convention, "What right has any branch of the Catholic Church to set up a bar of entrance to the Church which is higher than that used by the Apostles themselves?"

5. Is it not significant that no Deacon, Priest or Bishop is asked at ordination or consecration a single question about either of the creeds? It is only at baptism that a creed is specifically mentioned and then it is the Apostles' Creed; the Nicene Creed is only part of the Church's liturgy, like the Te Deum. What is insisted on at the Ordination of a priest and repeated at the consecration of a bishop is that he shall "teach nothing, as necessary to eternal salvation, but that which he shall be persuaded may be concluded and proved by the Scripture." The creeds rest on Scripture, not Scripture on the creeds.

6. To explain away the statement, "Conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary," as referring to the birth of two human parents, you declared, is an abuse of language and exposes us to the suspicion and the danger of dishonesty and unreality. But you know that the original purpose of the words, "Born of the Virgin Mary" was to assert the reality of Our Lord's humanity; and the phrase, "The Virgin" is used as a designation. Instead, therefore, of explaining away this article of the creed some men today are asserting a truth which the Church has allowed to become obscured. A great scholar has said that "the faith of the Church has been incurably docetic," which means that we have thought of the Son of Man as unreal.

7. In the past twenty-five years scholarship has been at work on this article of the creed and on the Gospels and Epistles which are our test of the truth of the creed itself. There is a growing agreement that the Virgin Birth can not be proved from Scripture; when accepted, it is accepted as part of the Christian tradition.

8. Your statement that the fact of the Virgin Birth does not make us believe in our Lord is undoubtedly true. The Virgin Birth is one of the chief obstacles in the way of faith in His moral and spiritual leadership. It obscures instead of reveals Him as the Son of God and the Son of Man.

9. The Church has indeed a deliberate and determined purpose to proclaim that the Jesus of history is the source of the world's hope of redemption and salvation. But it is not the creed that will convince the world of that fact; it is the life we Christians live, the way we love one another, the loyalty we give to Christ Himself.

10. The Apostles were without our creeds when they preached Jesus and Him crucified. The early Church which won the Roman Empire for Christ was neither inspired nor encumbered by the historic creeds. They followed One Who said, "For this was I born and for this end came I unto the world: that I should bear witness unto the truth. They that are of the truth hear my voice. * * * Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Only in Christ, as the Way, the Truth, and the Life, do we find freedom to carry out God's purpose for the Church and the world.

JOHN HOWARD MELISH.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Death of Bishop Temple.

The Rt. Rev. Edward Arthur Temple, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of North Texas, died at his home in Amarillo, Texas, at eleven-thirty Thursday night, January 10. His health had been poor for several years.

After a short service on Friday afternoon, at St. Andrew's Church, Amarillo, conducted by the Rev. E. H. J. Andrews, of Plainview, the body was taken to Waco, where the funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon from St. Paul's Church, by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Garrett, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. George H. Kinsolving, D. D., assisted by the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector of St. Paul's, and the Rev. T. J. Sloan. The services were attended by all the clergy of the District, vested.

Bishop Temple was born in Walkerton, Virginia, September 5, 1867, the son of John Temple and Matilda Wright Temple. He graduated at the Theological Seminary in Virginia in 1895, was ordained deacon the same year by Bishop Whittle, and priest in 1896 by Bishop Newton. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of the South and the Theological Seminary in Virginia, in 1912.

Before his consecration as Bishop of North Texas in 1910 he held charges in Front Royal and White Post, Va., going to Waco, Texas, in 1903, to take charge of St. Paul's Church, where he remained until his election to the Bishopric. He was consecrated Bishop on December 15, 1910, by Bishops Tuttle, Johnson, Kinsolving and Garrett.

Bishop Temple is survived by his widow, who was Miss Mary Craik Davis, of Waco, and two sons.

Fire Destroys Main Building of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School.

The main building of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School at Monteagle, Tennessee, was lost by fire on Wednesday evening, January 9. Part of the furniture was saved, but the building was a total loss, including the library. No lives were lost and no injuries suffered, as the accident occurred during the winter vacation, when only five people were living in the building. The original part of the building was erected fifty years ago, additions having been made from time to time, and was used to house Fairmont School for Girls, famous throughout the South. For many years past the School was administered by the family of the late Rev. Dr. W. P. DuBose.

In 1921 the property was secured through the efforts of Archdeacon Claiborne for the use of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School, now well known throughout the Church.

In spite of the catastrophe, the Trustees, Dean and Officers of the School made instant decision to continue its work and temporary quarters have been secured in Monteagle in which the School will begin its next session on March 20, and continue until the new buildings are ready for use.

The many friends of DuBose are rallying to the emergency with assurances of continued support.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

How Virginia May Serve the World.

Dr. S. C. Mitchell's plan of supplying the $400,000, which impoverished nations voted to strike from the budget of the League of Nations has been set in motion in Virginia, and the campaign is now to be waged in every state of the Union.

Dr. Mitchell, who is Professor of History in the University of Richmond, lectured before the Men's Bible Class of the Second Baptist Church, of this city, explaining the plan of having the Friends of the League in America contribute this deficit, thus showing their belief and faith in the League of Nations. Ninety per cent of the members of the class pledged $1 and their moral support, and a committee was appointed to get the campaign under way at once. Following this action, the Ministerial Union, in its meeting on January 14, appointed a committee to consider with the above named committee plans for this campaign, and nearly every member immediately contributed their dollar for the fund.

It is hoped that every Friend of the League in Virginia will contribute not only financial but moral support to this splendid plan of strengthening the work of the League, which is our best hope for international peace and prosperity. Contributions may be sent to Mr. Thos. 3. McAdams, Mutual Building, Richmond, who is treasurer of the Friends of the League of Nations.

The Annual Missionary Institute.

The fifth annual Missionary Institute of the Woman's Auxiliary, held under the auspices of the Educational Department, has just closed the most successful of all the Institutes ever held in the Diocese.

There was a "Quiet Hour" led by the Rev. J. M. Morris, D. D., who has just returned from Brazil. Dr. Morris started the institute off with the real missionary spirit, which grew more intense each day, until the last night, when it overflowed in loving sympathy and kindly gifts to the very needy workers in our mountain districts.

Mrs. W. W. Wishart of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, led an intensive Study Class on "Creative Forces in Japan," carrying her class at times to great heights of enthusiasm and inspiration for the work in Japan.

Miss Sallie Deane conducted a most interesting class on Diocesan Missions. She was assisted by the Rev. George P. Mayo, one of the pioneers of the mountain work, and by two of the women missionaries. Mrs. Hibbert and Miss Knight, who also charmed a large evening audience with a thrilling account of their special work.

In one of the morning conferences Deaconess Gore of Yancey, who has just come to the Diocese from the Diocese of Springfield (Illinois), won the admiration and sympathy of all who heard her recount her heroic experiences in rescue work in many large cities.

Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast, whom every Churchman knows, because of her valuable services for the Church's missions everywhere, gave a very fine stereopticon lecture on the Orient. Mrs. Pancoast has made two trips to the Orient and knows whereof she speaks. The pictures were taken by her on her last trip a year ago. They are educational and sure to win new interest in the great "Christ for the Orient" movement.

Mr. Tsien, of China, who is now a student at the Theological Seminary in Virginia, addressed one of the night conferences. Mr. Tsien is a very talented speaker, full of humor, and information about his country, with a very charming personality. Any man who can stand before an audience of a hundred or more ladies, and make them roar with laughter when he tells them they are really older than they think they are, has power—mysterious power. This Mr. Tsien did!

In a most wonderfully interesting way he told about the new mission work being done by the Church of China, (not the American Church) which work he was one of the founders. This he calls the "great grand child of the American Church." Therefore we are the great-grand mother! Older than China! Older than we thought we were!

There isn't space enough to tell of the mighty influence of this Institute. It was felt and seen during its days of activity and this influence will grow and spread throughout the Diocese. It is bound to carry a blessing to the world, and to help hasten the day when the Kingdom's of this world shall become the Kingdom of Our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

M. E. O.

The Junior Auxiliary Program of the Institute was most enjoyable, as well as helpful.

Mrs. R. T. Barton, of Winchester, Diocesan Secretary, presided at all the our o'clock conferences, and Mrs. C. M. Davison, Educational Secretary, conducted the study classes from five to six and seven to eight o'clock. The Box Work Conference was led by Miss Kate Mason Brown, Box Secretary, the Hand Work Conference by Miss Anne Bigger, Mrs. Davison's assistant, and the Conference on the United Thank Offering by Miss Anna Purcell.

The average attendance at classes and conferences was eighteen.

Diocesan Training Classes at Trinity Church, Staunton.

The Department of Religious Education having undertaken Teacher-Training classes in various points of the Diocese, began the first of these courses at Staunton on Wednesday, January 9. By grouping neighboring parishes, whose teachers can conveniently reach one central point, it is hoped that interest may be stimulated in this very important branch of Church work. Through the courtesy of the Rev. J. J. Gravvatt, Jr., one of the well-equipped and attractive classrooms in the new parish house of Trinity Church, Staunton, was used as a gathering place of teachers representative of both Trinity and Emmanuel parishes.

The annual election of vestrymen, followed by reports of the parish activities of Trinity Church took place the same evening. So large and well-appointed is the recently completed parish house that the offices of the Southwestern Episcopalian occupying one portion of it, with the rector's study adjoining, leave adequate accommodation for simultaneous meetings on week days and extensive Church School classes on Sundays. Surrounding the entire block, which the church and parish buildings occupy, a substantial and permanent brick and iron fence is being erected. As this is one of the most historic parishes of the diocese, its present activity and beautiful setting are particularly interesting.

The Rev. M. Colgate Daughtrey, rector of Emmanuel Church, Cape Charles, started on a trip around the world on January 15. The party sailed on the Cunard S. S. "Laconia," with Clark's Cruise, and will visit Cuba, Panama, Southern California, Honolulu, Japan, China, the Philippines, Java, Singapore, India, Palestine, and several countries in Europe.

Mr. Daughtrey and the Rev. Mr. Banks-Smith, of Governor's Island, and of Trinity parish, New York City, are the appointed preachers for the entire cruise.

The Rev. Frank A. Ridout, of Onancock, will act as locum tenens at Cape Charles during the rector's absence.

Dr. Studdert Kennedy Visits Diocese.

The Rev. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, Chaplain to the King of England and rector of St. Edmund's Church, London, was in the Diocese of Pennsylvania Sunday, January 6, the Feast of the Epiphany, and the following day, Monday, January 7. He preached at the morning service on Sunday in the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr. That afternoon he addressed a Sunday School Rally at the Church of the Holy Apostles, South Philadelphia, and at the night service he was the preacher at the Chapel of the Mediator, West Philadelphia. On Monday, January 7, he addressed the Clerical Brotherhood in the Church House.

Recent Bequest: Dr. Norris W. Vaux, Accounting Warden of St. Thomas' Church, Whitemarsh, has received from the executor of the estate of Mrs. Amanda W. Richardson $11,558 in money and $16,994 in securities and mortgages.

Mrs. Richardson was a communicant of long standing in St. Thomas', and in her will, after she had left a few bequests, made the Endowment Fund of St. Thomas' Church her residuary legatee.

The Rev. Stanley R. West, rector of Christ Church, Pottstown, who served as an Army Chaplain in the late war, has been elected Dean of the Convocation of Norristown, to fill the vacancy caused by the death in November last of the Rev. J. Kennedy Moorhouse, rector of Calvary Church, Conshohocken. Coincident with Mr. West's election as Dean to succeed Mr. Moorhouse it was also learned that Mr. West has been called to the rectorship of Calvary Church, also made vacant by Mr. Moorhouse's death.

The Rev. Alan Whitehorn Called to Ascension Church.

Ascension Memorial Church has elected as rector the Rev. Alan L. Whitehorn of Australia, and has cabled the call, offering to pay his expenses of coming to America. For fifty years the rector of Ascension Memorial was the Rev. Dr. John F. Steen. About the time the last named was retiring, there came to New York this Anglican priest from distant Australia. In his country he had devoted his life to the care of children paroled by the Court on probation. Although a bachelor, he has adopted more than a dozen boys, and located them in good families. He came to New York to study court methods in relation to children, and while here served at Ascension. He returned to Australia last summer, and is now asked to come back, permitted to do here his work for children.

St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, the Rev. H. A. Pritchard, rector, has dedicated a new reredos, and while the edifice as a whole is not yet complete, it is one of the most beautiful in the whole New York Diocese, certainly in the rural part of it. Bishop Shipman dedicated the reredos and preached. The enrichment is in three parts, intended to present the scene of the Transfiguration. The parish has recently dedicated a new building for a Chapel at Katonah, five miles north of Mt. Kisco.

Death of Mr. Bliss: The death is recorded of Mr. Walter P. Bliss, treasurer of Grace Parish, and member of the vestry, who died suddenly on the platform of the subway. He was not quite fifty-four years of age. Mr. Bliss was also treasurer of St. Luke's Hospital, and trustee of a prominent medical society. He was director in a number of great railroads, and came from a family long prominent in social and financial affairs of the city.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. T. P. Thurston, D. D., Bishop.

One of the most interesting Christmas Services among the smaller Missions of Oklahoma was that at St. John's Church, Woodward, out in the far western part of the state. Archdeacon Jamison and Mr. Spencer, the Executive Secretary, were present and made addresses in connection with the service. A congregation of some sixty people was present.

Services Resumed: The last Sunday morning in year, witnessed the resumption of services in the town of Alva, also in the western part of the State, and here, also Mr. Jamison and Mr. Spencer were present. It is expected that services will be held once a month from now on. There are apparently not many communicants in the place, but there are hopes of winning other people to the church.

St. Matthew's Church, Enid, the Rev. Chas. K. Weller, rector, is one of the very strong Mission Stations of the District and its accomplishments during 1923 have been really remarkable. A new parish house has been erected and is in use; the old rectory has been entirely remodeled and made to look like new; every cent of current expenses for 1923 has been paid and in addition every cent for missions, over $500, has also been paid.

The Executive Secretary visited the missions at Ada, Henryetta and Holdenville on the first Sunday in January. At Ada and Holdenville the Church has two strong missions with buildings; at Henryetta the outlook is promising as far as people are concerned, but services are held for the time being in a hall. The congregation has only a piece of property—some day in the not far distant future, it hopes to build.

Classes for Sunday School Teachers.

Classes for elementary instruction in pedagogy for Sunday-school teachers and other workers will be held under the auspices of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education at Epiphany Parish Hall. The classes will begin February 7 and will be held every Thursday afternoon and evening, and the instructor will be the Rev. Edward P. Wroth, rector of St. Philip's Church, Laurel, Md. The subject of the course given in the afternoon will be: "The Pupil" and this course will cover, in a simple way, the elements of child psychology with particular reference to the moral and spiritual needs of the young child. At the evening classes, "The Teacher" will be the subject of the course, covering the general points of the art of teaching, including preparing the lesson, obtaining and holding the pupils' attention, questioning and review. Examinations will follow each of these courses, and those passing the test will be eligible for a partial certificate issued by the Department of Religious Education of the General Church.

A Joint Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary and Sunday-school Institute of the Diocese was held in Epiphany Church on Tuesday evening, January 15. The principal speaker of the occasion was Deaconess Edith Hart, principal of St. Phoebe's School for Deaconesses and other workers at Hankow, China, and also in charge of other educational work in that district. The subject of her address was "The Methods and Aims of Religious Education." M. M. W.

Conference for Church Work.

The Annual Conference for Church Work in the Diocese of Maryland under direction of the Educational Department of the Church Service League opened with celebration of the Holy Communion in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore. Bishop Murray was celebrant.

Following luncheon the Rev. Dr. W. H. Milton presented "The Church and the Program." The afternoon sessions under the leadership of Miss Emily C. Tillotson, were given over to study of "The Creative Forces in Japan."

Far apart as the Editor of the Living Church may be in ecclesiastical conviction from the late editor of the Churchman, they clasped hands in spirit when Mr. F. C. Morehouse spoke on "The Church and Reconstruction." The organized Christian forces of the world must stop war, he said. The Church may dictate to Congress a specific policy but it can and should say: Join the League of Nations or provide something better.

The final address was delivered by the Rev. J. W. Suter, Jr., on "The Church and Her Challenge." Loyalty, said the speaker, is the outgrowth of affection. Loyalty to the Church must be based on affection for Christ.

Death of the Rev. Nowell Logan, D. D.

The Rev. Nowell Logan, rector of Trinity Church, Pass Christian, died at the rectory on January 2, at the age of eighty-five. The funeral services were held from Trinity Church by Bishop Bratton, and interment was made in Live Oak Cemetery.

The love and esteem in which Dr. Logan was held by all in Pass Christian is evidenced by the following, taken from the local paper:

"A gloom that perhaps no other event could have produced was cast over Pass Christian yesterday afternoon when the announcement was made that the Rev. Nowell Logan was dead. Beloved by all the citizens at the Pass regardless of denominational lines the death of Dr. Logan is regretted by all, because he was a factor in the spiritual and moral life of the community.

"For the last five years Dr. Logan had been gradually failing in health, but his indomitable spirit of 'carry on' in church work never allowed him to vacate his place as pastor nor would he permit more than momentary assistance in the church and rectory, believing it always his duty to officiate. Those who knew him best knew that his preaching from Trinity Church pulpit was an urging from his heart because he loved the Pass and was ever foremost in efforts for its advancement. During his residence here, which covered a period of twenty-five or thirty years Dr. Logan made friends whom he kept always."

Gifts to the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery.

The following gifts were presented on the Fourth Sunday in Advent in the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, the Rev. P. N. McDonald, rector. This parish has been the first in the United States two successive years to report a successful Every Member Canvass for the Nation-Wide Campaign at the scheduled time:

A set of white ribbon book marks, for the Bible, Litany desk and altar. Given by Mrs. Ralph Faulkner.

A complete set of purple hangings suitable for Advent or Lent. The gift of the Parish Guild.

A large picture for the Parish House. An etching, Christ in the Praetorium. Formerly owned by the Rev. Horace Stringfellow; given by him to the Rev. Stewart McQueen, and to this church by Mrs. McQueen.

An oak desk for the parish house which was used by the Rev. Edward E. Cobbs, a founder of this church. This was given by Mrs. Cobbs.

A prayer desk of oak, for the use of the Church School in the parish house, in memory of Henry Edward Bissell, Charleston, South Carolina, given by Mrs. Charles A. Thigpen.

A large oak cabinet in the sacristy, to preserve the hangings for the altar and also the altar linen, given jointly by Louise Bankhead Holloway, in memory of her mother; Louise Bankhead Lund, and Frances Browne McDonald, in memory of her mother Sarah Ann Browne.

A silver flagon for the communion wine, a gift of thanksgiving from the wife and children of A. M. Baldwin.

EASTERN OREGON.

Rt. Rev. Wm. P. Remington, D. D., Bishop.

News Notes From An Interesting Mission Field.

The Rev. Albert Clayton Tebeau, Deacon, was advanced to the Priesthood by Bishop Remington on the first Sunday after Christmas, 1923, in Trinity Church, Bend, Oregon. This is the first ordination service ever held in this section of the State, and made a great impression on the community. Dr. Tebeau graduated from the Virginia Seminary last June, and was admitted to the Diaconate by Bishop Darst of East Carolina. He immediately came out to Bend, Oregon, to begin his active ministry. Bend is a lumber town with about 9,000 inhabitants, and should become a very strong center for Church work. Dr. Tebeau is not only in charge of the Church in Bend, but has missions in Prineville and Redmond. He is the first missionary of our Church to be resident in this growing section of Central Oregon. A number of years ago a church was planned for Bend and a very excellent lot was secured at the head of Wall Street, the main street of the town. The plan to build at that time fell through. Dr. Van Waters, former Archdeacon, began an energetic work some five years ago, and the church grew. The present Bishop of Eastern Oregon found plans already made for the erection of a combined parish house and church, when he first visited Bend in the fall of 1922. These plans have been pushed to accomplishment and a very attractive building has been erected, the money for which has largely come from the people themselves with some little assistance given through the Priorities of Eastern Oregon, and a loan of $2,000 from the American Church Building Fund Commission. It is confidently expected that within five years the Church will be out of debt and become a self-supporting parish. The first Sunday School in the Church has been established with a competent staff of teachers and attendance of about forty. In a recent campaign a budget of $3,000 was secured, including a quota of $300 for the Church's program. Bishop Remington preached the ordination sermon from the text, "He That Doeth the Will of My Father Which is in Heaven Shall Know of the Doctrine." He was assisted in the laying on of hands by the Ven. M. McLean Goldier, Archdeacon, who read the Litany, and the Rev. Sidney W. Creasey, also a graduate of the Virginia Seminary, who presented the candidate. The building was filled to its capacity, with practically all of the communicants of the Mission, besides many strangers. A beautiful altar cross has been presented by Miss Evelyn Williams, a teacher in the Sunday School and member of the choir. Also the altar recess has been beautified by a re-dos and a new altar which has just been installed.

The Rev. Thomas A. Merryweather, formerly of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, became resident in Klamath Falls, Southwestern Oregon, on January 2, 1924. This also is a prosperous and growing lumber town. It bids fair to be the second largest city in the whole State within the next five years. Mr. Merryweather also will be the first resident missionary in this section, services having been carried on previously by the Bishop and the Archdeacon. A combined parish house and church was planned under Archdeacon Van Waters and the building project was brought to a successful conclusion under the present Bishop, who secured a gift of $1,000 as a last payment, from the American Church Building Fund Commission. Archdeacon Goldie succeeded during the fall in carrying out the canvass for the support of a resident missionary, and has brought the work up to the point where it can care for a clergyman with some slight assistance from the Bishop. The people are looking forward to the purchase of a lot next to the Church and the building of a Rectory during the spring. Beautiful chancel furnishings and pews have been installed at the cost of about $900. The building will seat about one hundred and fifty and is planned for social as well as church purposes. Mr. Merryweather besides having charge of the Church in Klamath Falls, will be head of the department of social service in the district, and hopes to open up new work at Lakeview and in the Klamath country. Mr. Merryweather served as a Captain in the World War and has done excellent work in St. Barnabas' Church, Kensington, Philadelphia.

The Fourteenth Annual Convocation will be held January 17 to 26 in St. Paul's Church, The Dalles, the Rev. Joseph A. Ten Broeck, rector. This will be the first Convocation held since 1921, and many interesting features have been planned.

Why Stand Ye Idle?

Gene Scott Wright.

Why stand we idle? Know ye not
The vineyard's Lord is waiting still?
Upon the fields the sun is hot,
The shadows lengthen 'neath the hill:

Full many a worker, toiling there,
Has labored since the rising sun;
For them in sight a guerdon fair,
While your day's work is not begun.

One last, clear call—what, heed ye not?
Ere long, the sun will hide his face,
And night, descending, quickly blot
The fields where you might find a place.

The hour of grace He has prolonged,
Has called you oft, is calling still.
His loving-kindness, daily wronged,
Enfolds you yet, Oh, stubborn will!

* * * * *

Beyond the fields, the shadows creep,
And silence folds her mantle there.
No more the call for those who weep
The vanquished day, nor those who sleep.
With sin-dulled ears, without a prayer.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Authority of Christ Questioned.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Tuesday in Holy Week Our Lord walked to and fro in a porch of the Temple, teaching. It was early morning. The formal and prompt manner in which the Chief Priests, Scribes and Elders met, suggests arrangement the night before, at a committee meeting, an informal council of leaders. There is no record, but it must have been an angry meeting, for they had to take action on the second cleansing of the Temple, and to find some adjustment for the disturbed finances of a nation.

They brought out the heavy artillery. It was the Chief Priests, Scribes and Elders, the leading men of the nation, who interviewed Christ; much as if the College of Cardinals should meet an Italian agitator, or the Cabinet should make an informal call on a Washington socialist. Through it all runs the tacit acknowledgment that Jesus was of the lineage of David, and a King. They came and stood around Him in the Temple porch and began an intellectual battle, the tact and keenness of which is a sheer pleasure to every intellect which can get rid of the halo of reverence and appreciate the facts. Some of the men concerned had known Our Lord as a bright twelve-year-old boy who, years before, stayed three days, hearing them and asking them questions. They said:

"Tell us by what authority doest Thou these things and who gave Thee this authority?"

Nothing was freer than Jewish teaching so long as the teacher made no legal rulings. Anybody might set up for a Haggadist, a popular preacher or teller of parables. But the moment a man taught as "One having authority" he came into conflict with the law, unless he were ordained by laying on of hands. This must be administered at the hands of three regularly ordained persons (Edersheim v. 2, p. 382) and conveyed the offices of Rabbi, Elder and Judge, combined in one. Our Lord seems to refer to it in Luke 12:14, where he refuses to divide an inheritance, saying, "Who made me a judge over you?" Its ultimate source was some great teacher authorized by the Sanhedrim. The formula in bestowing orders was: "Let him teach, let him teach, let him judge; let him decide on questions of first-born; let him decide; let him judge." This authority from the Sanhedrim Our Lord lacked, and had publicly disclaimed. The question was therefore ugly. He had acted as a judge in driving out the money-changers from the Temple. Whose authority did He have?

Now, Our Lord had the authority of John Baptist, as they very well knew. One ugly point in the question was its insincerity. John had testified that Our Lord was: "He who should come." The question was therefore an attack on the authority of John Baptist, discrediting his mission. Our Lord said:

"I also will ask you one question which, if ye tell me, I in likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. The baptism of John whence was it? Of heaven or of men? Answer me?"

"And they reasoned; If we shall say From heaven: He will say unto us, Why, then, do ye not believe Him? but if we shall say of Men; we fear that all the people will stone us; For all men counted John that he was a prophet indeed." It is a wry comment on the feebleness of local government that the heads and rulers of the nation felt unable to protect themselves from mob-violence.

If the President and Cabinet held public debate with some propagandist in the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington the interview would not lack spectators. Jesus and the Chief Priests in the Temple had an audience; an excessive audience, an overpowering, amazing, abounding, tumultuous and fascinated audience. The place would comfortably hold about fifteen thousand people. There were more than two million strangers in Jerusalem who visited the Temple every day. It is quite safe to say that, before the interview was over, twenty thousand people were crowded, packed, jammed, crawling over each other, the nearer ones repeating the substance of debate for the benefit of those further off, and all full of glee. The Chief Priests were getting the worst of it. They said: "We cannot tell whether the baptism of John was from heaven or of men."

This was really the only thing they could say, for the people would not tolerate disrespect to John's memory, and Jesus had John's endorsement. It was the only thing they could say; but it was palpably, publicly, manifestly and outrageously false. It was so openly false that Our Lord did not pursue the matter further. He merely said: "Neither will I tell you by what authority I do these things."

Robert Edward Lee.

The mold was broke when he was made.
He stands
Without a peer in all that makes men great,
The strength, the pride, the glory of the State,
Immortal Robert Lee! In other lands
Besides his own, his splendid fame commands
The love of men. Defeat did not abate
His great renown, or make men under-rate
His worth and polished strength. The stern demands Of august Duty ruled his iron will.
He ever aimed her mandates to fulfill.
His spotless character, like massive shield
Embossed with lucent truth, shone once afar
Amid the storm of war, and like a star Burned at its brightest o'er his darkest field.

Very Much Alive.

Rural Churches are supposed by some people to be usually asleep, if not virtually dead. It is true that for many years the country churches in the South were not very active, but this was due largely to economic and social conditions, which were brought upon this section of the country by the War Between the States. But the inherent ability, which belongs to the people of the South has enabled them to overcome all the handicaps that had been placed upon them. Naturally the changes took place first in the cities and therefore many of the ablest and brightest men and women of the country were drawn to the cities. This was a great gain to the cities in both its commercial and church life. But the country is now showing wonderful advancement in many ways. The farmers are far more prosperous. They are building themselves more comfortable homes than the country people ever had before. With the introduction of water and light systems of their own, with telephones and automobiles, with good schools and good mail facilities, the farmers of today and their wives live in far more comfort than did their grandfathers and grandmothers in antebellum days, even though they have not many servants to wait on them. This improved condition is enabling the people of the country to do more for their churches than they have been able to do in the past. And with the ability the willingness is being manifested. This is seen in the better character of new churches that are being built, in the improvements being put on the old churches, in the building, improving and furnishing of homes for their ministers. But in no way is it shown more than in the growth of spiritual life and activity, which is manifested in the demand for more religious services than they have had in the past, in better attendance upon these services, in the better support of their pastors, in the increased contributions to the benevolent causes of the Church, and in the larger numbers who are being won for Christ. What is greatly needed is that earnest, persistent and consecrated effort shall be put forth by the whole Church to build up and strengthen the country churches that are still weak and to establish more of them in sections where they are very much needed. Money invested in this way will be as seed sown in good ground that shall bring forth abundantly in a rich spiritual harvest.—Adapted from Presbyterian of the South.

Faith and a Star.

Frederick Herbert Adler.

Like one lone, distant light far out at sea
That star sends down its beams, a stellar wraith,
From slowly darkening sky high over earth—
Perchance it mourns my soul's great loss of faith.

Like glint of moonlight in a dusky dell
It quickly flashed a message down to me,
When now a sigh had just escaped my lips—
It bids me know God's love will ever be.

Like Beauty's gleam in hidden hall of Truth
That star enkindles rays that make a sun
And streams about a radiant, warm glow—
It has revived the faith His love had won!

Reims.

There is probably no structure in all the war-devastated area about which so much has been written as the Cathedral at Rheims. The destruction wrought by the German shells has been described so vividly, and so many pictures and prints of the ruined edifice have been scattered throughout Europe and America, that most people have a correct idea of the famous Cathedral. But here is something for us to think about. Although many buildings in Reims were completely destroyed, the Cathedral, which from the first was the target for the German gunners and which was subjected to weeks of continuous fire, though woefully damaged, still stands. Hundreds of shells fell within it, but it is in little more danger of falling now than it was on the day when the first shell struck it.

The secret lies in the way it was built. The building of a Cathedral was the chief event in the history of a town. The monks, who preserved the arts even down through the Middle Ages, outlined the plans for the building, and every person in the community shared in the actual work. Following the general plans, each man worked out his own ideas and made his own contribution to the structure. The stonemason, the carpenter, the worker in brass and in bronze, the general artisan, did each the best work of which he was capable. The work was never hurried; it sometimes required two or three centuries to complete a Cathedral.

Underlying the whole enterprise was the thought that they were building for God, and that there must be no imperfection in what was built for Him. The laying of a stone in the wall was as important in his sight as carving the Coronation of the Virgin above the door. Eight centuries later when the test came the cathedral at Reims, though exposed to a gunfire that would have demolished a modern skyscraper almost instantly, stood, and still stands, a monument to the men who in building it wrought for God.

We in America know too little of such motives and of such permanence. We may learn from the Cathedral of Reims the lesson of unhurried, honest workmanship that we so sorely need.

What a Particular Reminiscent Word Means to Me.

E. Grace Oldham.

One cool, bright morning in August, 1912, my friends and I were preparing to climb the "Jungfrau," starting from the picturesque little town of Interlaken, Switzerland, which, as its name implies, nestled between two lakes. We ascended the gradually rising ground as far as possible by rail; then when the way became too steep and rocky, we availed ourselves of a carriage drawn by sure-footed hores. When the horses could no longer ascend we mounted the remainder of the climb, now far above timber-line, on foot, to the base of a glacier, through which a tunnel had been cut that one might enter and be, as it were, in a house of ice between two lofty peaks.

Just before going into the glacier, and after the strain of the ascent in that rarefied air, which makes breathing difficult, I stood still, getting my breath, and looked around me on all sides at this unspeakably beautiful panorama of snow-capped peaks, glaciers, and rocks, and feeling keenly the grandeur, the magnificence, the calm of these mountain silences, there flashed unbidden across my mind these words of the Psalmist: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help," and from that day until the present the word hill has carried me in fancy to Switzerland, and the wonders of its scenery.

The Parable of Safed the Sage.

The Parable of Instructing the Conductor.

From the days of my youth I have beheld with admiration the engineer of the train, and that admiration groweth no less as I have come to understand somewhat better what his responsibilities may be. But I have come to know that, important as is the engineer, the conductor is the man behind him, and he is the man who telleth the engineer what to do.

But this I have learned, that the conductor cannot be at one time at both ends of the train. And trains are long.

Now there was a long train that stopped at a divisional terminal. And they cut out one car and set in another. And they iced the coolers and oiled the wheels, and filled the tanks with water. And I saw and beheld how many men were at work at the same time beside the cars, and inside the cars and on top of the cars and under the cars and between the cars. And there appeared to be a master mechanic who directed them all. And he it was who knew when the tanks were filled with water and the coolers filled with ice and the journals greased with oil, and everything swept and garnished. And the conductor waited beside the train, two-thirds of the way to the locomotive, waiting for the signal from the master mechanic that the train might go.

And I said, the engineer directeth the train, and the conductor directeth the engineer, and the master mechanic directeth the conductor.

And then I went to where the master mechanic was standing beside the train. And he was looking at a man who squatted between the cars, and was working with a monkey wrench at something which I did not very well understand. And as nearly as I could discover, everything else about the train was ready, but this bolt or nut or whatever it was had been the last thing to be adjusted before the train could move. And the master mechanic said unto the man between the cars, is she all right now, Bill? And the man between the cars answered, yes. And he cast out his wrench and his other tools, and he made haste to creep out from between the cars. And he spake unto the master mechanic, and said letter-go.

And the master mechanic held up his hand and waved it. And the conductor held up his hand and waved it. Divers persons shouted all aboard. And the engineer pulled out the throttle the man who had been between the cars said unto the master mechanic, it was in a hard place to get at, but we got it. And they went their way and the train went its way, and I went with the train.

And I said unto myself, the conductor weareth an uniform with brass buttons, but he taketh instructions from the master mechanic. And the master mechanic weareth a gray business suit, but he taketh his information from the man between the cars. And the man between the cars weareth overalls, that are very badly spotted with the places where there is no grease. Yet he is the man who first telleth when the train may go.

But the passengers knew not of the master mechanic, much less did they know of the man between the cars. Howbeit, they saw the conductor in his uniform.—Selected.

O God of unchangeable power and eternal light, look favorably on Thy whole Church, that wonderful and sacred mystery; and by the tranquil operation of Thy perpetual providence carry out the work of man's salvation; and let the whole world feel and see that things that were cast down are being raised up, and things which had grown old are being made new, and all things are returning to perfection through Him from Whom they took their origin, ever through Our Lord Jesus Christ!—Ancient Collect.

The fiery cross is speeding forth
To the purging of men's lives!
Speed on, speed on, O fiery cross
For the kindling of men's souls!
The powers of ill have had their day;
They broke life on the rough, red way,
They levied bitter tolls.
But now God's torch is blazing bright,
Wrong lies beneath the heel of right,
And men seek nobler goals!"

For the Young Folks

An Invocation.

God of the dew,
In gentlest ministry,
As silently
Would I some soul refresh anew.
God of the sun,
Far flaming heat and light,
Be my delight
On radiant errands swift to run.
God of the star,
To its stern orbit true,
My soul imbue
With dread lest I Thine order mar,
God of the sea,
Majestic, vast, profound,
Enlarge my bound—
Broader and deeper let me be.

Harebell and the Honeydew.

M. L. G.

Three little sister fairies sat on a fern-leaf one fine morning, and talked happily of the party they were to have that evening.

The Fairytown dress-maker, Mrs. Sybilla Spider, had made them the loveliest dresses; Major Ceasar Cricket and his niece, Miss Katy, were to play on their fiddles for the dancing; and Mrs. Merrifairy was bustling about indoors setting the house to rights. The fairies' home stood in a bower of ferns—but they called it a fern-grove. If you had been there you would not have seen the house, but would have thought only that the sunbeams danced more brightly on that bed of green moss than elsewhere. The sunshine was really reflected from the many windows of the fairies' home; and the moss was, of course, Mrs. Merrifairy's best velvet rugs. "Moss indeed!" Mrs. Merrifairy would have said, "where can these human creatures have been raised, that they don't know a velvet rug when they see one!"

The three sister fairies swung back and forth on the fern leaf, thinking the day would never go. The party could not begin before moonrise, and the sun was not yet half-way across the sky.

"The best thing about the party," said one little sister, "will be the music. The Major and Miss Katy do perform so elegantly!"

"No, Iris," answered Geranium, the second sister, "I think the pleasantest thing will be to see the beautiful dresses all the fairies will wear, shining in the moonlight. What do you say, Harebell?"

"Oh, sisters," cried Harebell, as she balanced on the tip of the fern leaf, "the best of all will be the frolic and dancing. I feel light as a snowflake, and bouncy as a bubble."

Just then their mother, Mrs. Merrifairy, appeared at the door.

"Come down from that tree, you children!" she called, "and be brisk, for I want you to run on an errand."

The little sisters hurriedly flew to the ground and ran to their mother.

"I sent a message an hour ago," said Mrs. Merrifairy, looking as worried as a fairy can look, "by Jerry Elf, to ask Mr. Bemus Bee to send me five drops of honeydew. Jerry is so forgetful, I suppose he is miles away by now. So you must all go to Mr. Bee's shop and inquire if he has good, fresh honeydew this morning. Be very polite, for he can be very sharp if he is displeased. Now hurry!"

Away went Geranium, Iris and Harebell, now skipping, now flying, now holding hands and running over a smooth bit of the road. At last, tired and breathless, they came to Mr. Berries Bee's shop. The sister fairies went timidly in, and when Mr. Bee himself buzzed up to wait upon them, neither Iris nor Geranium could find a word to say. Mr. Bee looked so grand in his black and yellow suit! And they remembered what their mother had said of his sharp manner. But Harebell spoke up in a very small voice, even for a fairy.

"Please, Mr. Bee, Mother says, have you good, fresh honeydew this morning?"

"To be sure, to be sure," said Mr. Bee, "as good as the best, and better than most. I gathered the honey myself, and set it out in the dew overnight. I'll skim off the honeydew, as much as you like, little Miss."

"Five drops, thank you, Mr. Bee," answered Harebell, taking courage at his kindly tone.

Mr. Bee turned toward the back of the store, and the little sisters heard him call:

"Here, you Dusty! Here, Buzzy, you lazy drone, fetch me one of those lily-stalks, and don't let the grass grow under your feet!"

Then from under the counter at the back of the shop appeared the two Bee boys rubbing their eyes and yawning. They seemed still half asleep, but they hurriedly buzzed and stumbled out of the door, and soon came back with a stalk of lily-of-the-valley. There were five lily-cups on the stalk, and Mr. Bee poured a drop of prime honey-dew into each cup.

"This goes to Mrs. Merrifairy's," he told the boys, "and no loitering on the way. Now fly!"

"But we don't know the road," complained Dusty and Buzzy. They didn't like the idea of a long, hot flight with that heavy lily-stalk, and they had made up their minds not to go if they could help it.

"Follow these little ladies," said Mr. Bee.

"Oh, we must hurry home," Geranium cried, for she was half afraid of the Bee boys.

"Yes," added Iris, "we must rest before the party. We'll be out of sight in a minute."

"Suppose I go more slowly," Harebell suggested, "and show them the way. I don't feel tired."

And so it was decided, though Dusty and Buzzy looked quite out of humor, and buzzed together in an angry undertone. Mr. Bee got them started, each holding an end of the lily stalk, but Iris and Geranium were mere specks in the sky before Harebell and the boys were fairly on the way.

As long as Dusty and Buzzy were in sight of Mr. Bee, who stood in the doorway waving his inch-rule at them, they flew along swiftly, and Harebell thought they would soon be home; but when they were too far away for him to watch them, those naughty Bee boys began to twist and fidget.

"I've got the heavy end, of course!" Dusty grumbled.

"Well, mine's heavy enough," answered Buzzy, "the way you push. Fly straight, can't you?"

"Oh, boys, do be careful," warned poor little Harebell, "you'll spill the honeydew."

But in a few minutes the Bee boys began to complain again.

"I'm going to rest, that's what," said Dusty.

"Me, too," mumbled Buzzy.

"Put it down gently, then," Harebell said, "and rest a little, then we can try again."

So dusty and Buzzy put the lily stalk down, and crawled to the shade of a leaf, and instantly Harebell heard them snoring. She sat by the precious honeydew, with the sun beating down on her hot head and delicate wings. Her gown caught on a briar and was torn, and her little feet ached with weariness. Worst of all, when she tried to rouse the Bee boys she could not waken them. She called them and shook them, but they only buzzed faintly and slept again.

Poor Harebell! She could not leave the honeydew, even to fly home for help. It would not keep fresh and cool for so long. She tried to drag the lily-stalk to the shade, but it was too heavy. So she sat down by it, hoping some kind traveler would come to her aid.

After a long time, as she thought (but it was really no longer than you would take to skip once with your skipping-rope) Harebell heard the humming of wings. She sprang up and flew into the air, waving her arms and calling.

"Why, what's the trouble?" said a jolly voice, and up flew a merry elf, all in green. When Harebell told him he gave a long whistle (you can hear an elf whistle any summer day, if you stand out in a field and keep perfectly still).

"Let me think!" said the elf, looking as solemn as he could. "Don't I remember something about a message to Mr. Bemus Bee?"

For this was that same forgetful Jerry Elf!

"Never you mind," said he to Harebell, "I'll have the honeydew home in a twinkling, and you shall rest under this fine leaf—Why, what's this?"

"Dusty and Buzzy, Mr. Bee's boys," explained Harebell; "they carried the honey-dew this far, and stopped to rest, and I can't wake them."

"Wake or sleep, out they go," cried Jerry; and with the tip of his foot he sent them rolling away, still snoring.

"Now, as I said, you shall rest under this fine leaf until I send a dragon-fly for you."

Harebell found it very pleasant to rest in the cool shade while Jerry picked up the lily-stalk very carefully, holding his arms wide, and sailed away.

"I'm so tired," thought Harebell, "I won't want to dance and frolic tonight. Never mind, the honey-dew is safe."

But it turned out better than she expected. For in a minute she heard the buzz of the dragon fly's wings and in another, she had climbed upon his back, and was flying home much faster than her own little tired wings could have taken her.

Mrs. Merrifairy rushed out to meet her.

"You are the best little girl a fairy mother ever had!" she cried, "Now come in and take a nip of herb tea and a nice nap on your rose-leaf bed, and you'll wake up ready for the party."

And when the moon rose that evening, and looked upon the merry frolic of the fairies, the lightest and happiest and gayest sprite she saw was little fairy Harebell.

Do we not all feel the change that had come between Paul crying submissively, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and the same Paul crying, "Not I live, but Christ liveth in me!" This was the perfect victory after which Paul looked so intensely.—Phillips Brooks.

Does A Bee Have Memory?

While away on a vacation, I used to take about the same walk every morning. As I passed a certain point in my walk, I used to notice a large bee sitting on a tall weed that grew by the side of the path.

I knew it was the same bee that I saw from day to day, for I came to know his personal appearance and he was always sitting in exactly the same place in the same tall weed.

I am not sure of the correct name of the species, but his color and markings were somewhat like those of a bumble bee, but he was considerably larger than a bumble bee and with a much wider spread of wings. We had become very good friends and neither of us had troubled or molested the other, which is one of the marks of friendship.

One morning as I passed by I happened to have a piece of cake in my hand. I thought that perhaps my bee friend might like to share it with me, so I tossed him a little piece.

My aim was a little too accurate and the piece of cake hit him in the side. He immediately flew into a terrible rage—"mad as a hornet," as we say. He flew around and round me, six or eight times and then dashed away in mad haste and I saw him no more that day. On the previous days he had never taken any notice of me, as I passed so near that I might have touched him, but on the next morning when he saw me approaching he again flew into a terrible rage apparently, and flew round and round me several times, as he had done on the previous day, and then dashed away in a mad rage and I never saw him again.

As near as I could follow the workings of the bee mind, he apparently said to himself something like this: "There comes that great giant who threw something at me yesterday and hit me. I will just show him that I don't like that kind of treatment and I am not afraid of him even if he is a giant, and if he is coming this way every day I am going to change my place of residence."

This narrative which is true as to the facts in the case and possibly as to the bee reasoning, closes with the same question with which it began,—“Does a bee have memory?”

And the other is a secondary question—If a bee can remember, can he also forgive and forget?—George P. Foster.

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

Many Diseases Start from Clogged Intestines

THERE is no reason why you should suffer from constipation. Headaches, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness. Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

MRS. POCAHONTAS ROBERTSON TRIGG.

MRS. POCAHONTAS ROBERTSON TRIGG, widow of the late Hon. C. F. Trigg, died at her home, in Abingdon, Virginia, December 1, 1923, in the eightieth year of her age. Mrs. Trigg was a devoted Churchwoman and a lovely Christian character. She will be sadly missed by a host of friends of her own station in life; but, most of all, by that little group of mountaineers who live in "The Knobs," just on the outskirts of Abingdon, to whom, for more than fifty years, she has been god-mother, friend and benefactor, tried and true. Though a semi-invalid, her whole life and the greater part of her means was given in service and ministry to these humble mountain folk. Her one desire and prayer was that these people might be brought to Christ. They were naked and she clothed them. They were hungry and she fed them. They were sick and she ministered unto them. They were in prison and she visited them, and she loved them unto the end. We give thanks to God for the wonderful grace and virtue of such saints who have been the choice vessels of His grace and the lights of their several generations.

WILLIE OVERTON WILLIAMS.

A Tribute.

This is not a eulogy, for he of whom we speak is far beyond the touch of praise or blame, and those who knew him best already know all that here can be said, and infinitely more; while those who knew him not at all will find these empty words, perhaps. So, it is no eulogy—only a loving tribute, simple as it is true a tribute to his memory to go on record in the paper of the Church he loved so well and served so long and loyally.

Willie Overton Williams was born forty-four years ago, in Maryland, but when almost a baby, his parents, Dr. Thos. Edward and Williana Overton Pollard Williams, moved to Hanover, the old home county of his mother. Here he spent his childhood and boyhood; in early manhood he moved to Danville, Va., where his business career began; where he married Miss Nancy Thomas, in 1916, and where the rest of his life was spent, and where he died suddenly, October 10, 1923, in the forty-fourth year of his age. He lies buried in St. Paul's Church yard, Hanover, Va., beside his father and mother.

That "the child is father to the man" was never more emphasized than in the life of Willie Williams, for the two outstanding characteristics of his boyhood were those of his manhood, love and devotion to his Church; love and good will to a superlative degree, to his fellow men. When a mere boy he showed his love for his Church, inheriting all its cherished traditions from his father and mother, both of whom were devoted Churchmen. He loved the beautiful service and teachings of his Church, and for twenty years served faithfully as its vestryman.

His genial, happy spirit was marked in him as a boy and he loved people always with a sweet, brotherly kindness that was its natural reaction—men loved him. He was true in every relation in life, as men are, if they be true in one: Son or brother, or husband, or relation, or friend he was true in that relation. He loved his own. He was a family man, but his was a community spirit. He served in the World War in the John Garland Pollard unit and was also a Mason for some years. He died what men call "suddenly," "tragically," "prematurely." But after all no death is "sudden" to the man who has learned the meaning of life and knows its issues. No death is really "tragic," except the death of the soul while the body still lives, and no death is premature to the man who, having seen his task, has done it until he heard the call. And, so, while he went out without a warning, we believe that he was ready, with a "conscience void of offense toward God or man," with clean hands, and a pure heart he fared forth and we believe, because we have His word, which cannot fail, we believe that in a twinkling of an eye "He met his Pilot face to face ere he had crossed the bar," and even before the first cry of human distress had gone up, he already had seen "Those angel faces smile which we have loved long since and lost a while."

Church Club Dinner: On Thursday, January 10, at the William Penn Hotel, the Church Club of the Diocese held their first dinner of 1924, at which the topic for discussion was "The Church Colleges." The President, Edwin Z. Smith, Esq., presided. Dr. Theodore Diller, Historian of the Club, gave a brief and brilliant talk on "Current Church Events." The speakers of the evening were the Rev. Murray Bartlett, D. D., LL. D., President of Hobart College, Geneva, New York; the Rev. Remsen B. Ogilby, D. D., LL. D., President of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut; and the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of the Diocese.

Personal Notes

The Rev. A. E. Whittle, formerly of Blossburg, Arnot, and Antrim circuit, Diocese of Harrisburg, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mark's, Patterson, N. J., and has been transferred to the Diocese of Newark.

The Rev. Albert N. Clayton has accepted the call to the rectorship of Calvary Church, Clifton, Ohio, and will commence his duties there about the middle of March. He is an alumnus of Gambier and Bexley and for several years was rector of Holy Trinity Church, Hartwell, Cincinnati. For the past six years he has been rector of St. John's Parish, Charleston, W. Va.

The Rev. Clarence P. Parker, Secretary of Religious Education in the Diocese of Arkansas, has been appointed to membership on the National Pageantry Commission of the Church.

The Rev. George W. Lamb, M. D., formerly rector of St. John's, Huntington, Pa., has resigned on account of the illness of his wife, and has taken charge of a church in Philadelphia.

The Rev. William Henry Pettus, rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C., underwent a successful operation for appendicitis, at Providence Hospital, Washington, on January 8.

ORDINATIONS.

On Wednesday, January 2, in Christ Church, New Bern, N. C., Mr. Joseph Mitchell Taylor was Ordered Deacon by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Daniel G. MacKinnon, S. T. D., rector of the parish and Chairman of the Board of Examiners of the Diocese.

The Litany was read by the Rev. John Hartley, Ph. D., and the Epistle by the Rev. Stephen Gardner.

Mr. Taylor, who is a member of the Senior Class at the Theological Seminary in Virginia, will be assigned to work in the New Bern District after his graduation in June.

On the Feast of the Epiphany, in St. Andrew's Church, Lawton, Oklahoma, the Rev. Herbert Brooke Morris was ordained to the Priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D. D., Bishop of the District. The sermon was preached by the Bishop, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Charles L. Widney, minister-in-charge of St. Luke's, Ada.

The Bishop has appointed the Rev. Mr. Morris to remain permanently in charge of St. Andrew's, Lawton, and St. Paul's, Altus, where he has served his diaconate.

In St. James' Chapel, Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, on December 22, the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, ordained to the diaconate Lansing Goodrich Putnam, presented by the Rev. Dr. Delaney; Frederic Lamont Bradley, presented by the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton; and Eason Cross, presented by the Rev. Dr. Bowie; and advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Harold Leslie Gibbs, presented by the Rev. Dr. Sedgwick. The sermon was preached by the Rev. A. R. Gray, D. D.

On the Feast of St. Thomas', the Rev. A. J. Mackie, Deacon, in charge of All Saints' Mission, Guantanamo, Cuba, was advanced to the Priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, D. D., Bishop of Cuba, in the Church of All Saints in Guantanamo. The Ven. J. M. Lopez Guillen, Archdeacon of the Oriente, said the Litany, and presented the candidate; the Bishop was the preacher. The Archdeacon and the Rev. J. B. Mancebo of Santiago, joined in the laying on of hands.

On the Feast of the Epiphany the Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, D. D., Bishop of Cuba, ordained to the diaconate Mr. Lee Grundy. Dean Harry Beal, of Holy Trinity Cathedral, said the Litany and presented the candidate. The sermon was delivered by the Bishop.

Mr. Grundy has been a student at Monteagle, Tenn., taking also some courses at Sewanee. He will take duty on the Isle of Pines until next fall, when he will return to the United States for the purpose of completing his preparation for the Priesthood.

At Holy Trinity Mission, Monessen, Pa., on Wednesday, January 9, the Rev. Albert Northrop Roberts, in charge of the work there, was advanced to the Priesthood, by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., in the presence of a congregation that filled the church to capacity. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. H. A. Flint, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Lester Leake Riley, and the Rev. Robert Nelson Meade, D. D., of Pittsburgh. These, with the other clergymen present, to the number of eight, united with Bishop Mann in the Imposition of Hands. After the service a luncheon was served in the Community Club House for the Clergy in attendance, the members of the Executive Committee of the parish, the invited guests, and others of the congregation, forty-eight in all. Mr. Roberts will continue in charge of the work at Monessen.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Francis E. Alleyne, rector of All Hallows Parish, Anne Arundel County, died at the Church Home and Infirmary, Baltimore, January 11, after a long illness.

Mr. Alleyne was born in London, England, and was at one time Line Officer in the British Navy. He was ordained by Bishop Tuttle in 1899 and he held several charges in the Middle West and South. For the last five years he has been rector of All Hallows Parish. He is survived by his wife.

Mary Lois

is my name and you can have me for nothing

Yes! My name is Mary Lois—and I want YOU for my mamma! You won't have to pay one penny for me, either! I'm a big doll—16 inches high—and I walk, cry, wink and go to sleep. Besides, I'm much prettier than my picture. I have the rosiest cheeks and beautiful, soft, silky, brown hair—and it's bobbed! I have a lovely check gingham dress, with a dainty embroidered and trimmed cross bar blouse—and I have a Dutch cap to match. I wear a muslin combination slip just like a real little girl, and I have the sweetest patent leather colonial slippers you ever saw! And don't forget—if you spank me or even turn me over, I'll say "Mamma, Mamma!" real loud.

It's So Easy

I'm not sold. I don't cost a penny. You can have me for just a few moments of your time. Thousands of little girls are getting dollies like me without the least bit of trouble—and YOU can, too! You needn't be a bit afraid of breaking me and I'll make you happy for the longest, longest time!

Send Coupon TODAY!

Find out how easy it is to get me! Send the coupon today. If you wait too long some other little girl will be my mamma and then you'll be sorry. It won't take a moment to put your name and address on the coupon and mail it. DO IT RIGHT AWAY!

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For the future of the South

BECAUSE of the remarkable development of its natural resources, the South today is taking a new leadership in the economic progress of the nation.

But this leadership, if it is to be maintained, must have a more enduring foundation than the possession and exploitation of material things.

The South of tomorrow will be made by the children of today. The boys now in school and attending the churches will be the captains of industry and the leaders in the professions a few years hence.

Citizenship is in the making in the schools and the churches.

A great responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the teachers of the South—in the pulpit and in the class-room.

But the compensation accorded the great majority of them is inadequate.

The Southern Railway System, which pays three million dollars per annum in school taxes, voices not only its own best interest but the ambition of its 60,000 employees in respect to the future of their children and their section when it expresses the view that greater rewards should be offered the men and women who are building Southern citizenship of tomorrow.

Man-Making

We are blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if
It does not make the man.

Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilted goes?
In vain we build the work, unless
The builder also grows.

I thought, and prayed, and wondered as I thought,
Might I not have, like those of long ago,
Some glimpse, as in a sudden sunbeam caught,
Of Christ, the Master, passing to and fro?

And as I prayed, it seemed the vision came,
The Master looked upon me, grave and sweet;
And I, in mingled ravishment and shame,
Bent my bold eyes, all lowly, to His feet.

"And would'st thou see me?" graciously
He said;

"Thou hast the picture; thou may'st always see;

"Search thou the Scriptures thou hast always read.

"For they are they that testify of me."

The Great Teacher.

L. C. Cummings.

There is but one teacher, Christ. We are all pupils and children in the great school of life. He has told us many things. Much has been kept from our human knowledge, probably because of our human limitations.

We are told to let the dead past bury its dead, to live in the spirit and teaching of the great Master.

The dead hand of the past fenced about with man-made observances and conventions shall never lead the way across the Dead Sea to the promised land of brotherhood in Christ, to which His teaching pointed.

The limitations of human knowledge and capacity are also divinely ordained and we are plainly taught, where faith begins.

It is true that men could see the right, but they pursued the wrong. Our

Everyone who is troubled with deafness in any form will be interested in the announcement of the Dictograph Products Corporation, Suite 610-E Commonwealth Building, Philadelphia, Pa., that they have at last perfected a device which will enable every one whose auditory nerve is not entirely destroyed to hear as perfectly as one whose hearing is normal. To test it thoroughly they sent it to a number of people who had been deaf for years and they report most gratifying results. Many state that they hear the slightest sound with perfect ease and that their natural hearing has been greatly improved. The manufacturers are so proud of their achievement and so confident that every deaf person will be amazed and delighted with it, that they offer to send it to any one by prepaid parcel post on ten days' free trial. They do not ship
C. O. D., nor do they require any de-great Teacher, though He lived at a period when the prevalent system of religious faith had become a complication of irrational dogmas and doctrines, penetrated instead to the seat of the affections in man and touched the springs of human actions. He laid more stress on purity and thought than on knowledge, outward appearance and formulae. It will always be the glory of Christianity to be superior to its most devoted adherents, who can never rise to the height of its teachings.

Let us reason together and realize that as no one man is capable of completely comprehending Christ in "His fulness," so no one branch of His Church has alone ever represented it.

There is but one teacher—Christ
Whose wisdom and greatness transcends all human doctrines and measures. Let no man deceive himself in his own wisdom, but seek for "a ful-ness in Christ," which exceeds all Church symbols and standards of requirement, and find the brotherhood which is in Him.

O Lord God, Our Governor, we beseech Thee, of Thy mercy, that we may see the heavenly vision, and behold things as they seem unto Thee, that the turmoil of the world may be seen by us to be bringing forth the sweet peace of the eternal years, and that in all the troubles and sorrows of our own hearts we may behold good, and so, with quiet mind and inward peace, careless of outward storm, we may do the duty of life which brings to us a quick heart, ever trusting in Thee. We give Thee thanks for all Thy mercy. We beseech Thy forgiveness for all our sins.
We pray Thy guidance in all things, Thy presence in the hour of death, Thy glory in the life to come. Of Thy mercy hear us through Jesus Christ Our Lord.—
Amen.

Not long since a woman friend said to the writer: "I was a Christian for two weeks once. It was when I was in the Yosemite. There my heart was continually crying out, 'The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him!'" But the real Yosemite was in her own soul. Deep was calling unto deep at the sound of the waterfalls, because there was a transcendent deep in the worshipping spirit of a good woman, that made wonder glorious. Through God to nature is a better formula than "Through nature to God." Human nature is the holy of holies in the temple of deity.—
Selected.

Let us never forget that the rush of rescuing ships to the shores of stricken Japan, the pouring out in great tides of treasure to be used for helping these helpless ones, the breaking down of all racial and national barriers by this great tide of sympathy—all these constitute an eloquent tribute to the glory and power and far extended influence of Jesus Christ and His gospel. The world knew nothing like this until He came to it with His message of light and life and love.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Saul of Tarsus might have been famous; Paul the apostle was truly great.

Whenever you make a mistake, make it teach you something.

The only hopeless things to Jesus were the cold things.—E. M. Cross.

No matter what our environment may be life cannot be a failure if we do our best.

It was not those who lived nearest to the temple who were the first to follow Christ.

We do not need tomorrow's supplies: that day has not yet dawned, and its wants are yet unborn. When Our Father does not give us more, we should be content with His daily allowances.—C. H. Spurgeon.

I ask, what was Christ's errand into the world? For surely our errand into the world must be deeply connected with Him. The noblest thing a man can do is just humbly to receive, and then to go among others and give.—John Duncan.

Life affords few opportunities for doing great services for others, but there is scarcely an hour in the day that does not afford us an opportunity for performing some little, it may be unnoticed, kindness.—Bowes.

The Christ-Child is the one in Whom all the streams of prophecy converge and all the glowing lines of history radiate. In this humble home at Bethlehem all the hopes of Abraham, the dreams of David, and the visions of Isaiah are realized.—S. L. Blougher.

"Blest. is the man whose heart and hands are pure,
He hath no sickness that he shall not cure,
No sorrow that he may not well endure;
His feet are steadfast, and his hope is sure."

It is known now that there are no such things as laws belonging to nature. These so-called laws are our own invention. They are for convenience of speech, and they mean no more than that the universe is a cosmos, an orderly system, which we may depend on for what we do.—Expository Times.

"The classic example of one who tried to be an 'unofficial observer' is Pontius Pilate. 'This is no business of mine,' he whimpers, as he washes his hands the third time. And to that specious plea of innocence the world has thundered back for nineteen centuries its answer, 'Crucified by Pontius Pilate!'"—H. E. Luccock.

On one day, at least, we know that peace will come among the nations, goodwill between capital and labor, love and happiness to the heavy-laden. On one day, at least, we do our little part by losing our private lives and thoughts in those of others. On this day there is no stranger. Everybody is our mother or father or child or friend.—A. C. E. A.

No. 4.

THE TRUE SPIRIT IN THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION

In the theological controversy which has of late been going on in the Church, the matter of supreme importance is that all those who in any wise participate should remember the spirit of Him in Whose name they mean to speak. In the end, this discussion, like every other, will be determined not so much by what men say about the Creeds as by the way they show Christ.

Among the conservatives and defenders of tradition, the ideal should be that loyalty to what are regarded as the standards of truth should include also a wide sympathy with all the fellowship of truth-seeking men. Truth itself is not vulnerable. It can be trusted to maintain its own integrity. What is needed is that those who would be its defenders should not in the exaggeration of their zeal become bitter and uncharitable toward those whom they believe to be in error.

The liberal, on the other hand, must remember how sacred are those ties of old associations by which many minds and hearts are bound to forms of belief which the liberal may think to be no longer necessary. He is guilty of wrong if by any flippant utterance he hurts the reverent belief of any soul. Whatever he would do in the direction of what seems to him legitimate and necessary re-interpretation of truth, must always be constructive. In his faith there may be liberty, but in his liberty there must be also love.

An admirable example of the spirit in which theological differences should be treated is furnished in a report made last week by a committee of the New York Presbytery in the matter of complaints against the preaching of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. The committee frankly regretted certain phrases in one particular sermon of Dr. Fosdick's, and particularly the unnecessarily provocative title, "Shall the Fundamentalists Win?"; and the wide circulation of the sermon by an agency for which the Church was not responsible. "The members of session," says the report of the committee, "deeply deplore the distress thus given to many devout souls who had to judge the preacher by the printed sermon instead of judging the sermon by what they knew of the preacher." But they go on to say: "To the elders and congregation of the First Church it was not an isolated utterance, but a regrettable incident in the ministry of one whom they had learned to love and honor for his loyalty to Christ and His spiritual power. In expressing, as we do, our sorrow that occasion has been given for unrest and conflict in the Church which is dear to us, we desire to emphasize the fact that the sermon in question was exceptional. The preaching in the First Church is ordinarily uncontroversial, but searching, inspiring and full of the spirit of the Gospel. It is devoid of sensationalism and deals almost exclusively with the great themes of evangelical religion—the reality of God, the Deity of Christ, His incarnation, sinlessness and vicarious sacrifice, His resurrection from the dead and His indwelling in believers; the sinfulness of sin, fulness of sin, the call to repentance, the necessity for a new birth and the beauty of the new life in the Spirit."

In the statement of the committee there is included also this letter from Dr. Fosdick himself, written on the twenty-eighth of last December to Dr. Work, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Session:

AN APPEAL FOR GOODWILL IN 1924.

Unanimously adopted by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches at its recent annual meeting in Columbus, Ohio, drafted by Dean Shailer Mathews of Chicago.

"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America appeals to its constituent churches to consecrate themselves anew to Christ's Spirit of goodwill. National enmities, economic injustice, class conflicts, racial prejudices, pagan devotion to pleasure have brought, and promise to bring, discord and sorrow. Goodwill among men is the one motive for human life which has never been tried whole-heartedly. Yet it is at the heart of the gospel of Christ. To love one's enemies is to be like the Heavenly Father.

"We call upon the churches, therefore, to emphasize constantly and unequivocally the power, the practicability, and the inevitable success of good-will as the message of Christ Himself, and to condemn all distrust of the applicability of Christ's teaching to human affairs.

"The churches must do even more than preach this truth. They must help their members to see that the Christian must help pay the cost of installing goodwill. Christians must be ready themselves to take the initiative in making the concessions and sacrifices which goodwill involves. It is idle to hope for international peace so long as Christians cherish enmities in their dealings with each other. In the future as in the past only misery can come from hatred, acquisitiveness and the relentless pursuit of one's rights.

"Christ's message of goodwill is more than the presentation of a duty. It is a promise of success. Since God is love, goodwill can overcome disorder.

A Christian settlement of every dispute can be found provided men are ready to make the sacrifices justice may demand. No other proposal contains such promise. The victory of the strong may mean the triumph of wrong. The triumph of goodwill brings happiness.

"Let the Churches as the Body of Christ practice goodwill rather than controversy; let their journals and all their publications be dominated by an ironic spirit; let them inspire their members to begin the reign of goodwill on earth by themselves setting up programs of mutual helpfulness, in the family, in business, in politics, in diplomacy; and above all, let them pray for that courage and contagious faith that will enable them to know that they who labor in the spirit of their Lord do not labor in vain."

"I welcome the opportunity which the appointment of your committee affords me to express my attitude toward the theological controversy in the Presbyterian Church which, in part at least, has centred in me.

"For many months now I have been the object of attack and until this letter I have made no public reply. Nor do I write this in a controversial mood. Any gentleman dislikes to be a cause of disturbance in a neighbor's household, and as an ordained minister of another denomination preaching in a Presbyterian pulpit I am profoundly sorry that contention has arisen because of me. For this reason I already have resigned my position there only because of the unanimous desire of the Church's Session and their insistence that withdrawal would do more harm than good.

"In spite of sharp differences of opinion between two prevalent schools of theological thought, and in spite of the unmistakable fact that I am committed to the side called 'liberal,' I confess that I have been surprised at the misinterpretation of my position which has been spread broadcast. If I did not regard myself as an evangelical Christian, I certainly should not be preaching in an evangelical pulpit. Nor was there ever a day when one in earnest about his faith would wish his unqualified Christian allegiance to be more manifest than now. These are days when the Christian faith is being resolutely assailed, when materialistic naturalism is presenting a perilous problem, when many are in doubt, when Christianity faces alike one of its supreme crises and supreme opportunities. These are days when every man who seriously and deeply believes in the gospel of Jesus Christ wants to be counted on that side and not on any other. It goes hard with me, therefore, to find myself and whatever influence I may possess rated as against things I really am for and for things I really am against.

"I am in the ministry of the evangelical churches because I belong there and nowhere else—reared in evangelical Christianity, converted in it, convinced of it, and ready to live and die for it. The liberty I claim to think through the gospel in terms real and cogent in our own time is, I am sure, not a denial of the gospel, but one of the most precious and sacred privileges and responsibilities which our evangelical forefathers claimed for themselves, fought for and gloriously used.

"Personally I have no patience with an emasculated Christianity that denudes the Gospel of its superhuman elements, its redeeming power, and its eternal hopes. I believe in the Personal God revealed in Christ, in His omnipresent activity and endless resources to achieve his purposes for us and all men. I believe in Christ, his deity, his sacrificial saviourhood, his resurrected and triumphant life, his rightful Lordship, and the indispensableness of His message to mankind. In the indwelling Spirit I believe the forgiveness of sins, the redeemed and victorious life, the triumph of righteousness on earth, and the life everlasting. This faith I find in the Scriptures and the objective of my ministry is to lead men to the Scriptures as the standard and form of religious experience—the progressive self-revelation of God in the history of a unique people, culminating in Christ. To the proclamation of the Gospel with such elements of abiding experience at the heart of it I am giving myself—trying to translate it into terms that will penetrate the intelligence and challenge the conscience of the oncoming generation.

"I am not, therefore, an enemy of the Gospel of Christ, a denier of the profound experiences and convictions which in all ages have been the glory of the Church, the substance of her creeds and the source of her power. Nor, as I understand it, are those who like me are called Liberals. We are men at the centre of whose life is a profound faith in God revealed in Christ for man's salvation, and we are facing with passionate earnestness the needs of this disturbed, doubting and often wistful generation, endeavoring, as our fathers did in their days, to interpret the everlasting Gospel to our own time in terms that our own time can understand.

"The joy of my ministry is now, as it always has been, to lead men into vital relationship with Jesus Christ, to bring them under the spell of His Mastership, and to inspire them to make Him and all that He stands for dominant in the life of the world. Never did this ministry seem so much worth while, never were its fruits more manifest, and all my days I hope to give myself to it in the freedom with which Christ set us free."

In its beauty and impressiveness that letter speaks for itself. It is a very noble summing up both of the necessity for liberal thinking in these great days in which the world now lives, and also of the spirit in which alone liberal thought can be justified.

The conclusion of the report by the committee of the Presbytery might well be pondered and accepted by men in churches of every name.

"The Presbytery affirms its belief in the Bible as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and in all the doctrines of grace and salvation that belong to evangelical Christianity. The Presbytery further declares that it sorrows deeply over controversy and strife, and that it is its desire and intention to address itself to prayer and the ministry of the Word, to the building up of our churches, to the work of evangelism, soul-winning and social welfare, in this great city, and to the propagation of the gospel of Jesus Christ at home and abroad."

"BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM."

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. 5:22.

The spirit counts her harvest fruits,
And spreads them to the wondering eye
Of weary wanderers of the world;
A treasure they would gladly buy.

Here's love, whose blessings will not cease,
And holy joy that never tires;
Whose heavy boughs give rich increase
Of kindly deeds and pure desires.

Here clustered grapes of patience grow
With wine of meekness freshly stored;
Where pain and sorrow lend their glow
Transfigured by a suffering Lord.

Here, fragrant with the summer sun,
Of ripened age and hardy truth,
The loaded vines of goodness run,
With gentleness that bloomed from youth.

Here faith and temperance spread their sheaves
For the great harvest of their King;
While care and sadness fall like leaves
Before the song God's reapers sing!

EPIPHANY.

The Kings still come to Bethlehem,
Though nineteen centuries have fled;
The Kings still come to Bethlehem
To Worship at a Baby's bed;
And still a star shines in the East,
For sage and soldier, king and priest.

They come not as they came of old,
On lordly camels richly dight;
They came not bearing myrrh and gold
And Jewels for a king's delight.
All battle-stained and grim are they
Who seek the Prince of Peace today.

They bring not pearls and frankincense
To offer Him for His content.
Weary and worn with long suspense,
With kingdoms ravished, fortunes spent,
They have no gifts to bring but these—
Men's blood and women's agonies.

The kings still come to Bethlehem,
With broken hearts and sobs sore vexed;
And still the star is guiding them
Through weary nights and days perplexed.
God greet you, Kings, that you may be
New-crowned at His Epiphany.

CHRISTIANITY AND MODERN LIFE

By Gamaliel Bradford

I HAVE long been convinced of two things. First, that modern America needs nothing so much as God. We have automobiles and telephones and aeroplanes and prohibition and votes for women. But in the speed and bustle of these crowded days the average American man has dropped God out of sight, and hardly knows where to find Him, or even how to look for Him.

Second, I profoundly believe that the vital value of the Christian religion for humanity lies, and has always lain, in the distinct, supernatural, divine personality of Christ.

Modern liberalizing Christianity evades this issue as much as possible. Unitarianism long ago abolished it altogether. But even the Evangelical sects reduce it, attenuate it, avoid it. Emphasis is laid upon the ethical beauty of Christ's teachings and the purity and elevation of the gospel picture of His life. His example is held up as a human example of what men may aspire to and achieve. Divine? Oh, yes, of course He was divine. So are all of us, all have the divine touch in us in greater or less degree, and Christ, as a religious teacher, was perhaps more richly endowed than the rest. But the Bible is a curious and elaborate and complex literary and historical document, which grew and developed with the history of the Jewish people, as the poems of Homer did for the Greek. The miracles are touching, significant, impressive. What difference does it make whether they ever happened or not?

So says liberalizing Christianity. But it was not any such mild accumulation of ethical apologies as this which healed the sorrows of millions for fifteen hundred years. What gave the Christian Church its original power, what maintained its hold upon the hearts of men and women was simply God made man, that supreme, supernatural figure, which clothed in earthly shape, endured privation, suffering and sorrow, and underwent the cruel death upon the Cross that sinners might be redeemed from their bondage. He took upon Him the sins of the whole world, that the whole world might taste of salvation, if it would. It was the consoling influence of that gracious Presence, the ineffable healing touch of that gentle Hand, that brought light and comfort into the cruel, hard drag of lives that could find light and comfort nowhere else. Ethical teaching is all very well; but no ethical teaching can give what was diffused through millions of tortured hearts by the abiding belief in a supernatural Saviour. Men are not saved, nations are not saved, worlds are not saved, by a sugar-candy Christ.

So the question arises, whether this original Christian conception which has slipped so far away from many of us, can ever be brought back. You may or may not approve of Mr. Bryan's attacks upon Darwin and Evolution. Scientific truth may or may not have the first claim upon scientific intelligence. The fact remains that the Darwinian theory changed insensibly the attitude of vast numbers of human beings toward the Bible and the Christian religion, or any form of supernatural belief. As the French critic, Edmond Scherer, who had himself been brought up in the strictest orthodoxy, once wrote me, "in my opinion the world of the future will fix a great gulf between the systems of thought that preceded Darwin and those that came after him." That was in 1890 and since that time Darwin's ideas have been riddled and shaken by scientists in many of their aspects. Yet the mind of the average man has got a rooted hold upon the notion that the world has developed, from the lowest form of life, to the highest humanity, according to certain fixed physical laws, and this notion leaves little place for the Bible or the Christ of a hundred years ago.

Whether this notion can be gradually got rid of, whether the average American—and I confess that in this, as in most other points, I myself am an average American—can ever be brought back by profound spiritual need to the attitude of his forefathers, is a problem to be settled by wiser heads than mine. But I repeat my conviction that the Christianity that counts is the Christianity of Christ, as it was, and that no humanitarian or pink-tea substitutes can ever accomplish the smallest portion of what that Christianity did.

In this connection a phenomenon of intense interest is the appearance and huge success of Papini's "Life of Christ." Papini's book is violent and melodramatic. It treats the whole subject of religion with the furor and something of the hysteria that belong to the Latin attitude towards such matters, a tone which one would expect to be very foreign to stolid Anglo-Saxon common-sense. Yet the book has sold thousands and thousands of copies and is selling more and more. And it treats Christianity from precisely the traditional standpoint that I am insisting upon. Christ is divine, touches our hearts with divine comprehension, heals our wounds with divine potency—or He is nothing. That is the message of Papini, and it is evidently finding a most eager response all over this hurried, busy, material United States. Why? Unless from the working of this very profound need of God which I emphasized in beginning? Telephones, automobiles, prize fights, golf, will not wholly take the place of God; are men beginning to find it out?

But I should like, above all things, to know who is reading Papini's "Life of Christ."

WHERE IS CHRIST?

A Sermon Preached in Grace Church, New York, on the Sunday After Christmas, 1923.

By the Right Reverend Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D.

THEY say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.—St. John 20:2.

The Mary of whom these words were written was visiting the tomb of the wondrous Master who had changed her life from misery and sin into joy and saintliness. No one could have ascribed to Him higher titles than her love and gratitude would desire to give Him. She had worshipped Him with all the outpouring of a soul consciously redeemed. Now she came with all reverence to His tomb. He had been her Saviour, but He was dead.

When she reached the tomb, she found it empty, and began to weep. Asked why she wept, she answered, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." Then she turned about, and saw the living Jesus standing near her. But she was so intent upon finding the dead Christ that she did not recognize the living Christ.

"And suddenly His face was like a star!
He spoke; she knew—a blaze of happy tears;
Then 'Master!' . . . and the word rings down the years!"

I take this solemn incident in the Gospel story this morning and ask you to apply it to your own search for the Master. For a good many of us, I am quite sure, the quest of Him is as of one who is dead. Certain time-honored associations concerning Him are disturbed, and we cry out that some enemy has taken the dead Master far away from us. Meantime, if we had eyes to see and ears to hear, we should know that the radiant living Lord is so close that our trembling fingers might touch Him. And sometimes I fear we go away, still weeping, and never know how inestimable has been our privilege.

I would preach to you this morning how we shall transcend the search for a dead Christ and find indeed the Christ Who is gloriously alive for evermore.

In this new Christmastide, we are thinking again of the coming of Christ to the world and to our individual hearts. There are many going out to meet His coming. Where shall we find Him? Where is Christ?

I.

Are there indeed today any who devoutly seek a dead Christ? And if so, are they, like Mary, in tears, when they discover that the dead Christ has been taken away from the place where they feel that they have every right to expect to find Him? I fear it.

I yield to no one in my respect for Christian theology. I have spent a large part of my life seeking its help and I hope to keep on seeking its help. I yield to no one in my respect for what today we call the historical method, by which we try to discover by careful scrutiny just what the most ancient documents of Christianity really reveal when they are read in the light of their own time and with all possible critical apparatus. I hope to keep an open mind to this truth-discovering method. But I know that systems of theology and a keenness to uncover the exact history of the past have a very dangerous power over certain minds. They sometimes put Christ in a tomb, seal that tomb, and proclaim Him for ever to be what their systems and discoveries have found Him. Some daring spirit pries open the tomb, and Christ is not there. They who buried Christ are aghast. They believe that all its lost. They have been trying to find not Him, but only such an one as they think He ought to be.

We must all speak with humility. No man may accuse his neighbor. I may be the worst of sinners in this effort to bury Christ and keep Him buried. But I do from time to time hear men trying to defend Christ's honor with such harsh and bitter words that I know that it is not the loving Christ Whom their acid strictness would confine. I know that He has vanished from the tomb where they believe that He must for ever lie.

Theology is for us what the law was for the Jew of St. Paul's day. St. Paul said that the law was a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. So also theology is a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. You may abide so long with the schoolmaster that you never reach Christ. It is the end of the journey that is important.

Or we may say that theology is like the little tug-boat which tows the great ocean sailing-vessel out of the harbor. The sailing vessel is meekly guided on its way by the small steamer till the mouth of the harbour is passed and the great ship is out on the open sea. Then the tug is cut loose; the winds fill the sails of the ship; the depths of the sea are a safe path; and onward goes the vessel to its appointed haven, sure of its own ability to catch the power of God's winds. Theology is to the soul of a man who is in search of Christ what that tug-boat is to the ocean vessel. It is to start him, inspire him. Then he feels the winds of the Spirit of God blowing him on, he knows that he shall find the Living One, and he shall know Him for himself, and he shall know Him face to face.

II.

Now let us turn to the end of Mary's story. She wept because she could not find the dead Christ; and lo! He was alive and stood near. She did not know Him at first, but, when He spoke her name, she suddenly recognized Him. She discovered with unbounded surprise the living Christ.

I preach to you this morning the surprising joy of finding the living Christ. With preconceived notions of what He should be, with hearts often cold as steel, with what we think a relentless logic, we go in and out of the tombs seeking the dead Christ; that is, the Christ we think ought to be there; and He is not there. He has snapped our little conceptions of Him with the power of His reality. He stands by us alive, doing new and surprising deeds, saying glowing words which men never heard till today, giving men filled with Him such victory as the world never before has known. In one great word, He is alive.

We forget, if we ever thought about it, the surprise of the Gospel. Christ never let His followers in Palestine get used to Him. He appeared before them when they least expected Him. He changed all their old ideas of glory when He pointed to the flowers of the field. He touched with scorn their inherited meticulous rules, and gave clean and fresh and loving principles of living. He discounted the eloquent prayer of the Pharisee and praised the stumbling prayer of the publican. He was contemptuous of the selfish priest and levite, and held up a gracious Samaritan for the commendation of the ages. He pictured the gate of heaven with the throngs of respectable people turned away, and throngs of humble, timid people admitted, on the basis of what they had not done, or what they had done, for the least of His brethren. We still read, "Inasmuch as ye have not done it unto one of the least of these my brethren," with a shudder, wondering what surprise He holds in store for us. Men thought Him a poor peasant, and He was transfigured before them. They thought He had died, and straightway He lived as no one in all the ages had ever lived.

Any one who thinks that He may hold Christ in the tiny shell of His own definitions knows little of the Four Gospels. The gospels are a constant series of surprises. You must be ready to know the Christ Who will utterly surprise you, if you know Him alive. He may turn your world upside down; He may upset all your favorite theories; He may throw all your fancied virtues to the winds; He may accept in you that which you have ignored and despised. But you will know Him.

"Where one heard thunder and one saw flame,
I only knew He named my name."

The serious problem for each one of us is to know how we shall come really to know the Living Christ. That is the supreme test of life. If our fellowship in the Church, if our search for accurate knowledge, if our reverence for the truth discovered by the past, do not lead us to Him, they are vain and worse than vain, for while we commend ourselves for our faithfulness or our orthodoxy, others, without our privilege, are seeing Him and knowing Him and in Him are finding eternal peace. How then shall we know Him alive?

First, we must learn the reality of loving men and thereby loving God. "If," said a great soul of the first century,

"we love not man whom we have seen, how can we love God Whom we have not seen." Love is not a mere emotion. It is an overwhelming desire to please the beloved. He who loves God, desires to please God. The truth is not an abstraction, separated from the warmth of life. It is the result of love. "If any man," said Jesus, "will do the will of God, he shall know of the doctrine." Do you love God enough, do you love man enough, to have a really receptive heart and mind, so that the Life of the Most Loving, the very Christ, He Who is both God and Man, shall indeed come in and find in you a congenial home!

From time to time, men eager to protect Christ, denounce their neighbors as men outside His fellowship. They bring up their measures and rules and tests, and threaten to cast out those of defective faith. I wonder if He is not waiting on the edge of the mob to receive the man who is cast out, exactly as He waited one day two thousand years ago, to receive a man cast out by His complacent countrymen. Only the other day I read such a denunciation; I searched; the document had in it not one word of love. Some way I felt that Christ was not there.

If you desire really to find Christ, you must love. And you must be patient with all else. You know how in Galilee He passed by excellent and correct lives, and became friends with loving hearts. You may dare to do anything rather than to forget the place of love in the Gospel of Christ.

One other means of help towards finding the Living Christ I give you. You must remember the mystery of His greatness. When Simon Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God," Jesus answered, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father Who is in Heaven." So in the record of the talk with Nicodemus we have the sublime words about the mystery of Him who is born of the Spirit. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." And one generation later cried, "No man can call Jesus Lord but by the Spirit."

Once you have really had even a glimpse of the Living Christ you will not be inclined to say what cannot be. You will be done with neat rules of logic. You will only crave the utmost of your experience in that shining presence. You will not ask that every one tell the same account that you try to tell of that transcendent Face. You will say what you can, and then you will listen reverently to what others may say. Some will speak in hard prose, some in the language of poetry, some will burst forth into song. And no one will say all, and all together will not say all. The mystery of His greatness will go beyond all that you and the rest of mortal men have said or ever shall say. After all, you will not be so bent upon the description of Him as you will be determined to tell the world that you have seen Him of whom the prophets and saints have spoken, you have seen the Lord Christ. You have seen Him not as He was in Palestine, not as He was to St. Francis, not as He was to your mother, but you have seen Him as He is today to you—in all His love and in all His mystery. You will cast no one out. You will only pray that all may have the joy that has been given you.

Last summer I heard this story in a little village Church in France. A new pastor had come to the village, and called at a certain cottage. When the husband came home from his work, the wife said, "The new pastor called today." "What did he say?" asked the man. "Oh," she answered, "he asked, 'Does Christ live here?' and I didn't know what to say." The man's face flushed: "Why didn't you tell him that we were respectable people," he said. "Well," she answered, "I might have said that: only that isn't what he asked me." "Then why," pursued her husband, "didn't you tell him that we said our prayers and read our Bibles?" The wife replied, "But he didn't ask me that." The man grew more vexed: "Why," he continued, "didn't you say that we were always at Church?" The poor woman broke down: "He didn't ask that, either: he asked only, 'Does Christ live here?'" This man and woman pondered for many days what the grave pastor meant by his question. Little by little their lives were changed. Little by little they grew to expect Christ—not dead, but gloriously alive. And some way, they knew not how, through great love, and through a willingness to be surprised by the mystery of His radiance, they knew Him. He did indeed live there.

Dear friends, under the devout leadership which has been given you, may you enter the new year conscious that beside you is the loving and mysterious presence of the Living Christ!

CONCERNING "WHAT IS THE MIND OF THE CHURCH?"

Mr. Editor:

Your editorial on "What is 'The Mind of the Church'?" strikes a simple-minded layman like myself as going perhaps too far in the direction of the right of living men in a living Church to develop their own living ideas about the historic facts of the Incarnation. At bottom, where is the difference between this and the Newman idea of development fructifying in such dogmas in the Roman Catholic Church as the Immaculate Conception and Papal Infallibility?

Surely, if we Episcopalians have a right to develop theological ideas beyond or apart from those specified by the Creeds of the Church, so have the Roman Catholics. Indeed, on your editorial ground, isn't the Roman Catholic Church quite a live church when it can go ahead and frame up such decidedly living dogmas as suggested above? Carry this further, why not let us all go pell mell into the Roman communion on the theory that it is so far from being a dead church of the past that nobody can foretell what it may frame in the future. Talk about a living Church! What more of a living church do you want than that?

The trouble with the Roman Catholic Church is that it has entirely too much life in it and because of this might break loose on some other non-creedal tangent, and, essentially, that is the trouble with so-called "modernism." My point is simply this: go slow on your logic of a "Living Church," or the first thing you know you might have to come out and compliment our Roman friends for being so lively as to invent something wholly unknown to any Creed in Christendom.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

Mr. Editor:

The questioning that the Virgin Birth does not come from unbelievers only. There are Christian men who claim that it does not affect the belief in Christ's Divinity, and ask that it be left in open question for the relief of doubt. This hazy attitude is a gross mistake. In the long run it must affect belief in the Divinity. During the lifetime of Our Lord the question was never thought of amongst the Disciples. Until they had realized the Deity of Christ such a thing would have seemed absurd, preposterous, incredible. . . . Jesus was received by the Disciples as a Man. That was evidently the Divine purpose. It was only as the end drew near that He began to reveal Himself. It was not until after the Resurrection and the mysterious Forty Days, and the Ascension, and the Coming of the Holy Ghost that, with adoring awe they realized that "the Word was made Flesh and dwelt among us."

This was quite irrespective of the Virgin Birth. Most of them knew nothing about it. "We know that the Son of God is come." But what a delightful confirmation and rounding off of their belief when the long-guarded secret was revealed in the atmosphere thus fitted to receive it. It would have had no meaning before. It cleared away perplexities from the mystery of the Divinity. It fitted into the Incarnation as the key fits into the lock, as the lost piece fits into the broken puzzle.

It came, of course, from the Virgin Mary direct or through her intimate circle, probably St. John and the holy women, her companions. "Mary the Mother of Jesus was with the brethren." It was written down by St. Matthew, and more fully by St. Luke. Here is the Roman baptismal Creed, about the year 100: "Born of the Holy Ghost from the Virgin Mary." Only when they recognized the Deity of Christ could the question of the Virgin Birth be discussed at all.

Professor Hamack, the greatest authority for this early period, himself not a believer in the Virgin Birth, admits: "It was the common property of Christians everywhere about the end of the First Century. The Church did not believe in the Virgin Birth because it was put into these Gospels, but it was put into these Gospels because the Church believed it. St. Matthew and St. Luke have the whole Church behind them."

Neither St. Mark, St. John nor St. Paul mentions the Virgin Birth. St. Mark is telling of the public life of Jesus. St. John knew that Virgin Birth was in his lifetime, accepted throughout the Church; his purpose was to supplement the other Gospels, to write what was not written already, and he tells us how Jesus came down from the higher world. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was made: Flesh and dwelt among us." St. Paul's disciple and close companion was St. Luke, and he wrote his Gospel; and it was St. Paul's teaching that the early Church called St. Paul's Gospel.

Infidels say "Virgin Births do not occur in human experience." Granted. But Christs do not happen either.

The question of the Virgin Birth is no new thing. It is as old as the Church, as old as the heretic Cerinthus, the opponent of St. John. It is a kindly attempt to make the Gospel easy to believe. But this can never be done. It is the most tremendous, the most incredible thing in the whole Universe, to believe that God became Man! That the Word became Flesh! The serious thing is that the doubt will make belief hard instead of easy. The doctrine of the Incarnation and of the Virgin Birth must stand or fall together. What the Bible asserts is that both happened once, and that one belonged to the other. Half-way measures can only lead to a minimized Christianity, and are never safe. As we think of the Christ Child in the dear old Christmas story, let us rest happy and peaceful in the simple old Faith, "The gates of Hell shall not prevail against it."

A EPOCH-MAKING EVENT

NOT often do epoch-making events come in pairs, as they did in Japan in December, when on the seventh Bishop Motoda was consecrated in the little Church of St. Timothy, Tokyo, the only one of our Church buildings surviving, and on the eleventh Bishop Naide's consecration took place in Christ Church, Osaka.

In the Oriental setting of a Japanese City, while motor cars and rickshas mingled outside, picturesque throngs of men and women crowded the two churches on the two great occasions, and before representatives of the English, Canadian, Chinese, Russian, Greek and American Churches, the two Japanese were consecrated by Bishop McKim, Bishop Heaslett and Bishop Lea. Indescribable emotions must have been felt, especially in Tokyo where despite earthquake and fire, poverty and death, the Church moves slowly but steadily onward.

The two services were in Japanese, except Bishop Gailor's sermons, which were interpreted.

An account of Bishop Motoda's Consecration has already been given in these columns.

Dr. Naide became a Bishop in the church of which he was long the rector, and which is now presided over by Rev. B. S. Ikezawa. It is interesting to note that this little church, located here in far-off Japan, has a listed membership of seven hundred and eighty-two native Christians, of whom two hundred and forty are regular communicants, and that it contributes annually to the support of the establishment the sum of 8,979 yen. This is in Japan, it is worth remembering, and not in the United States where outside of the large cities, not a few of our churches fail to do as well.

To the music of "Holy, Holy, Holy," the procession, preceded by a Cross bearer, emerged from the robing room to the rear, and proceeded slowly along a mat strewn pathway to the side entrance, from which the voices of the congregation were already issuing.

The long line of clergy, who were moving forward in another history-making event—the commissioning of another leader in the Army of Christ—a Japanese Bishop for the rapidly-mobilizing force of Japanese Christians—moved as follows: The Cross bearer, clergy of the new Osaka Diocese, visiting clergy, among whom were representatives of the Church in America, the Church of England, the Church in Canada, the Church in China, the Osaka Diocesan Committee, a chaplain, Bishop-elect Naide, the Consecrating Bishops, a Chaplain and Bishop McKim, presiding Bishop of the Church in Japan.

One felt the high privilege of being present on such an occasion. In lustrous voices the congregation were singing in Japanese the "Holy, Holy, Holy," led by a full voiced native choir in the little gallery above. A brilliant shaft of sunshine flooded the sanctuary.

As the service proceeded, the impressiveness of the whole scene deepened and fixed itself upon those who beheld it. There is an unwonted music in the Japanese version of "Bring Forth the Royal Diedem," "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," and "The Church's One Foundation," which were now rendered in the native tongue as the Consecration proceeded. And one who has seen hundreds of kimono-clad men and women, youthful and aged, kneeling, while in a strange tongue they recite what cannot be mistaken for anything but the Apostles' Creed, can never doubt the worth of the effort which is being expended off here in the work of the Master.

The Consecration personnel was the same as that which officiated at the elevation of Bishop Motoda, with the exception that on the latter occasion, the then Bishop-elect Naide read the Litany. Bishop Motoda read the consent of the Bishops. Incidentally, the formality of the presentation of these and other formal certificates had to be dispensed with at the Consecration of Bishop Motoda, since all of the documents were consumed in the great fire. At Bishop Naide's consecration, too, the robing of the new Bishop was done within the sanctuary, while at the consecration of Bishop Motoda this act was performed in the robing room outside.

It was an impressive moment when the robe which had been bequeathed by Bishop Williams was placed over the shoulders of Dr. Naide, and Bishop McKim, as Presiding Bishop, placed the Episcopal ring on his finger.

Immediately following the consecration, the party proceeded in motor cars to the Osaka Hotel, where the great banquet hall was thronged with five hundred people to welcome them.

"It is the happiest day of my life," said Bishop Naide, as he took his seat at the guest table where were gathered Bishop McKim, Dr. John W. Wood and Bishop Gailor; Bishop Heaslett, of South Tokyo, and Bishop Lee, of Kyushu, who acted as co-consecrators; Bishop Hamilton, of Mid-Japan; Bishop Scott, of Shantung; Canon Sydney Gould, representing the Church of Canada; the Governor of the Prefecture of Osaka, and the Mayor of the city among others.

Addresses were made by the new Bishop, Dr. Naide; by Bishop Motoda, Bishop Lee, Bishop Hamilton; Bishop Scott, Dr. Wood, Governor Nakagawa and Mayor Seki.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE NAME—AGAIN.

ONE of the problems which will press for an answer at the meeting of General Convention and perhaps before that time, if Provincial organization is soon effected, is the question of the name that the Society shall bear henceforth. One thing is certain, no name in existence today will please everybody, and nothing could be more futile than that this organized youth movement in the Church should be imperiled by partisanship.

Throughout the South the name "Young People's Service League" has been unanimously adopted. In the North and West "Young People's Fellowship." A case has been made for each designation. Some find fault with the title "Young People's Service League," because it does not mark a sufficiently abrupt transition or differentiate clearly from the "Church School Service League."

Our choice of nomenclature in the Episcopal Church has been singularly infelicitous: "Protestant Episcopal," "Nation-Wide Campaign," "Presiding Bishop and Council," "Church Service League," "Church School Service League." These are cases in point. Had the whole Church accepted the three-fold division outlined by the Department of Religious Education all might have been well, but frankly it has not, and indications point to the fact that it never will.

On the other hand, the name "Young People's Fellowship" is inadequate unless one reads into it Bishop Brent's definition: "Fellowship with God, and in God with one another." A name ought to be sufficiently explicit to need no further amplification. One must be brash indeed who does not admit that the emphasis upon the word "fellowship" has been to some extent unfortunate. Some groups have literally degenerated into a social club where cliques have arisen to scorn the very name upon which the organization is founded.

In season and out of season one must harp upon the same warning: The central motivation of the organization life of our young people must be religious. The spirit of the present age is self-seeking, aggressive, acquisitive. "Popularity" is the shibboleth worshipped, frequently without regard to finer moral considerations. Can we not take thought of some name which is self-explanatory, emphasizing the foundation principle upon which alone all progress is assured. Could we consider as a basis for united effort in the future a combination of the two names now most general? How about "The Young People's Fellowship of Service," or "The Young People's Service Fellowship"? The union of these two words sums up the central principle of the youth movement.

In a day when men are questioning the usefulness of all symbols it may very properly be asked, "What's in a name"? Yet one observes today that civic clubs derive their inspiration from a name which they interpret to be the measure of their responsibility and the basis of all enduring effort.

Regardless of our loyalty to the principles of Democracy, thoughtful young people look askance at the action of legislative bodies in the nation. We passed a sweeping prohibition resolution, to which many of our best citizens are utterly unwilling to commit themselves. In the Church, after mature and thoughtful deliberation, we accepted the Church's Program, and a large number of our dioceses feel no sense of personal commitment to the corporate action of our great legislative assembly. Let the various groups, therefore, address themselves to this question of a Name; one that shall offer our young people an individual and corporate challenge; one that shall be the basis of coherent and cooperative action; a banner under which all of the League can enlist.

In the providence of God it may be the young people who shall lead the Church into a National consciousness; who shall link up our National administration with the Dioceses by a functioning Provincial organization. As Diocese and Province are being organized let them take heed lest they commit themselves so utterly to a name and type as to endanger National unity of purpose and coherence of organization in 1925. Nothing could be so tragic as to have the leaders of this Youth Movement prepared to urge upon a relatively untrained group of delegates, by political intrigue, commitment to any name or principle which shall jeopardize an enthusiastic and vital convention.

PROGRAM.

February 4—Fourth Sunday After Epiphany:

Topic: Modern Amusements and the Church.

1. Hymn: "Lord Speak to Me."

2. Bible Reading: St. Matthew 13:24-30.

3. "Prayer to the Holy Spirit" (from Book of "Short Services," edited by J. W. Suter, Jr., 1 Joy Street, Boston).

(Standing)

M The Lord be with you.

P And with thy spirit.

M Let us pray.

(Kneeling)

Show us Thy mercy, O Lord,

P And grant us Thy salvation.

M O Lord, have mercy upon us.

P Have mercy upon us.

M O Lord, let Thy mercy lighten upon us,

P As our trust is in Thee.

M O God, make clean our hearts within us,

P And take not Thy Holy Spirit from us

M Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire,

And lighten with celestial fire.

P Thou the anointing Spirit art,
Who dost Thy seven gifts impart.

M Thy blessed unction from above,
In comfort, life, and fire of love.

P Enable with perpetual light
The dullness of our blinded sight.

M Anoint and cheer our soiled face
With the abundance of Thy grace.

P Keep far our foes, give peace at home;
Where Thou art guide no ill can come.

M Teach us to know the Father, Son,
And Thee, of both, to be but One;

P That, through the ages all along,
This may be our endless song:

MP Praise to Thy eternal merit,
Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

(Silent Worship)

M Let us pray:

O God, Holy Ghost, Sanctifier of the faithful, visit we pray Thee, this Congregation with Thy love and favour; enlighten our minds more and more with the light of the everlasting Gospel; graft in our hearts a love of the truth; increase in us true religion; nourish us with all goodness; and of Thy great mercy keep us in the same, O Blessed Spirit, Whom, with the Father and the Son together, we worship and glorify as one God, world without end.

P. Amen.

M God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost, bless, preserve, and keep us, and fill us with all spiritual benediction and grace; that we may have in this world knowledge of His truth, and in the world to come life everlasting.

P Amen.

4. Addresses:

(a) Modern Amusements and the Church.

Open Forum: (Reference book: "The Morality of Social Pleasures," by the Rev. Montague Fowler).

(b) What Can the Church Do Practically to Safeguard the Play Life of Her Young People?

(c) The Individual's Responsibility.

5. Hymn: "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

6. Sentence Prayers and Benediction.

Church Intelligence

Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund.

The movement to raise a great popular subscription with which to erect a memorial in St. Louis to Bishop Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, late Presiding Bishop of the Church, has crystallized and taken definite shape. The movement is to be world wide, and its organization is to proceed immediately.

The official name of this world movement is to be the Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund, and the date of the intensive campaign has been fixed at October 12 to 31. The memorial will be a great beautiful building to be erected in connection with Christ Church Cathedral, which was his Cathedral for thirty-seven years. Its purposes are to memorialize the life and work of Bishop Tuttle, to serve as headquarters for the Diocesan organizations, to serve the city of St. Louis, and particularly the dense population in the neighborhood of Christ Church Cathedral, as a social center for all sorts of community activities, and to be used for national gatherings.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Missouri, will be the national chairman, and W. Frank Carter of St. Louis, chairman of its campaign committee. Its committees will include prominent citizens, both in and out of the Protestant Episcopal Church in St. Louis and throughout the country.

Death of the Bishop of Florida.

The Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed, D. D., S. T. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Florida, died at 7:30 o'clock Friday night, January 18, at his residence, in Jacksonville, after an illness lasting over a year, which had its inception while he was returning from the General Convention in Portland, Oregon, in September, 1922.

The body was placed in St. John's Church at noon Monday, where it lay in state guarded by the clergy of the diocese until 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, when the funeral services were held, with the Bishops of the Fourth Province, officiating, and all the clergy of the diocese, vested, attending.

Surviving Bishop Weed are four children: Miss Margaret Gould Weed, of Jacksonville; Mrs. Pinckney Steiner, of Augusta, Ga.; Mrs. J. Russell Ingram, of Jacksonville, and Joseph D. Weed, of Jacksonville. All were present at the bedside when the end came. Mrs. Weed, who was Miss Julia M. Foster, of Augusta, Ga., died in 1908.

Bishop Weed was born in Savannah, Georgia, on July 23, 1847. He was the son of Henry D. Weed, of Noroton, Conn., and Sarah Dunning Weed, formerly Miss Sarah Dunning of Savannah.

He received his primary education in the schools of Savannah later taking an academic course at the University of Georgia at Athens, which was interrupted, however, by the War Between the States. In 1863, while still a student at the University Bishop Weed answered the call of the South and enlisted in the Seventh Georgia Cavalry, although only sixteen years old, and was later detailed as a member of the signal corps in the Confederate Army in which he served during the remainder of hostilities.

Following the conclusion of the war, Bishop Weed went to Europe, where he entered the University of Berlin. After graduating there he returned to this country and received his degree from the General Theological Seminary at New York, beginning his active work in the field of religious endeavor at Augusta, Georgia. He was ordained deacon in the Church of St. Luke at Darlen, Conn. in 1870 and in 1871 took orders as rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta, Georgia. The degrees of D. D., and S. T. D., were later conferred upon him by the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., and Racine College, in 1886 and 1887, respectively, the degree of D. D., by the former and the degree of S. T. D. by the latter.

For fifteen years Bishop Weed was rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, his first and only parish. In 1886 he was elected and consecrated as Bishop of the Diocese of Florida which, at that time, comprised the entire state. It was not until the convention of 1892 that the state was divided and the Diocese of Southern Florida set off. He removed to Jacksonville in 1887, where he remained until 1889 when he removed to St. Augustine remaining there until 1896, when he returned to Jacksonville, where he had resided since.

At the time of his death Bishop Weed was next in seniority to Presiding Bishop Garrett, of Dallas, Texas.

The death of Bishop Weed brings to an end a life consecrated to the uplift of humanity and the widening of the tenets of religious faith.

In addition to his active work as Bishop of the Diocese of Florida Bishop Weed was prominent in the activities of the United Confederate Veterans, of which organization he was a member. During the late war with Germany he was chaplain of the Duval County Home Guards, despite his age, and engaged in many other war activities.

During the yellow fever epidemic in Jacksonville in 1888 Bishop Weed devoted himself untiringly to the relief of the victims of the dread disease, being a member also of the relief board, and exposed himself so fearlessly in his work that he contracted the fever and came very near to dying from it.

Bishop McCormick Visits Churches In Europe.

The Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop of Western Michigan, sailed January 14 by the Steamship Empress of Scotland on a tour as Bishop in charge of the American Churches in Europe, and was accompanied by the Rev. Dr. William C. Emhardt. Conferences will be held with the English Bishops of Gibraltar, Egypt and Jerusalem, and afterwards visits will be paid to the authorities of the Holy Orthodox Church and other Christian Churches in the East. After visiting the Near East the Bishop expects to commence the regular Confirmation Visitations with the Church of the Holy Spirit, Nice, on March 9, and hopes to spend a few days in all our parishes in Europe, arriving in Paris in time for Confirmation at Holy Trinity on Palm Sunday, remaining there for Easter and holding Convocation on Wednesday in Easter Week. Visits will also probably be made to Budapest and Prague, and perhaps in Poland, and before sailing for home he will confer with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and will leave England early in May.

Stowe's Clerical Directory of the American Church 1924 Edition.

We are in the midst of gathering the data for the next edition of the Directory which in reality is a "Who's Who in the American Church." The Bishops and clergy are responding quite promptly to the requests sent for revision of their sketches or the original writé up of the same. We hope to be able to deliver this valuable book to the subscribers during the month of March, but in order to do this, the clergy must make immediate reply to the requests for information. We most cordially urge all to cooperate in the most hearty and enthusiastic way, by responding immediately with corrected data and also a subscription for the Book. The number of volumes issued will depend upon the subscriptions received. It is a great pleasure to have assumed this responsibility (amid many others) and our joy will be complete in this work, if all of the Bishops and clergy will be hearty and enthusiastic in their support. Hurry your sketches along.

"Church League for Industrial Democracy" Field Secretary in Ohio.

The message of the Church League for Industrial Democracy was presented to the students of several Ohio Universities and Colleges recently by the newly elected National Secretary, the Rev. William B. Spofford, and another trip into Ohio is planned soon, in order that he may visit other institutions which are anxious to hear of the work the League is doing.

The first visit was at Ohio Wesleyan, where Mr. Spofford addressed four classes—fully four hundred students in all—and where the response to the League message was most pronounced. From there he went to Gambier, where a four-hour smoker was held with the entire student body of Bexley Hall, as well as a meeting with the faculty and students the following day. In commenting upon this visit Mr. Spofford said: "The fellows seemed to be intensely interested in industrial problems, and are quite aware of the fact that they are receiving no training which will prepare them to cope with them. In fact at our meeting one of the professors asked if the League could not help in a movement looking toward the modernization of the canonical requirements for the ministry.

While at Gambier an address was also delivered on the Church and Industrial Democracy before a class at Kenyon College, made up of students specializing in social subjects.

The following day was spent at Miami University and Western College. In the afternoon Mr. Spofford explained the agreement in the Clothing Industry to the students of Western College, and that evening spoke at a large meeting which was attended by students from the three colleges in Oxford (Miami University, Western College and Oxford College).

The rest of the week was spent in Cincinnati, where interviews were arranged with Churchmen of the city to plan for future work. An afternoon was also spent at the Hebrew Union College, where Mr. Spofford addressed one hundred young students, who are training to be rabbis. "They know industrial conditions," said Mr. Spofford, "and most of them feel that radical changes are the only cure for the evils. I based my talk there entirely on the official resolutions which were passed at the Portland Convention—those which call for a fundamental change in the working of our social and industrial life. These future rabbis agree with us thoroughly and are giving a great deal of their time to the study of the problems involved.

Mr. Spofford also broadcasted on Thursday evening, January 10, from Station W. S. A. I.—the United States Playing Card Company—which is one of the most powerful sending stations in the country, and the manager said that considerably over eight hundred thousand people had listened to the ten-minute message on Industrial Democracy from the League Secretary.

Diocesan Executives Meet at Manitou, Colorado.

Twenty-one of the Dioceses and Missionary Districts of the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Provinces were represented by the Executive Secretaries or other executives at the Regional Conference, assembled under the authority of the National Field Department of the Church meeting at the Cliff House, Manitou, Wednesday and Thursday, January 9 and 10. Among those present were Bishop Johnson and Bishop Ingley, of Colorado; Bishop Beecher, of Western Nebraska; the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, Executive Secretary of the Field Department; the Rev. Mr. McKinstry, the newly-appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Department; the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, late of the China Mission and now on the Staff at the Church Missions House; the Rev. Louis G. Wood, one of the Field Secretaries; Dean Davis, the Domestic Secretary; the Rev. Mr. Reinheimer, of Southern Ohio; the Rev. Mr. Kemmerer, of St. Clement's, El Paso, representing New Mexico; the Rev. Mr. Hawken, of San Joaquin; the Rev. Mr. Weigle, of California; the Rev. Mr. White, of St. Louis, representing the National Department of Christian Social Service; the Rev. Mr. Lockwood, of Eastern Oregon; Dean Fleetwood, of Utah; the Rev. Mr. Clingman, of Texas; the Rev. Mr. Matthews, of Montana; the Rev. Mr. Corley-Carroll, of North Dakota; the Rev. Mr. Bunting, of Salina; Dean Walker, of Duluth; the Rev. Sherman Coolidge, of Colorado; the Rev. Mr. Ten Broecke, of Eastern Oregon; the Rev. Mr. Kirchhoffer, of Los Angeles; the Rev. Mr. McCollum, of North Texas; the Rev. Mr. Flockhart of Iowa; Rev. Mr. Bunting and the Rev. Mr. Bartlett, of Missouri; the Rev. Mr. Roberts, of Idaho; the Rev. Mr. Schmuck and the Rev. Mr. Boone, of Colorado; Mr. Spencer, of Oklahoma; Mr. Winnie, of Colorado; Mr. Keiter, of Minnesota; the Rev. Mr. Knickerbocker, of Minnesota; Mr. Gallagher, of Nebraska, and Mr. Erwin, of Western Nebraska.

The program began with a Celebration of the Holy Communion at St. Andrew's Church; Bishop Ingley being the celebrant, assisted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Mr. Boone. The Bishop-Coadjutor addressed a few most helpful words to those who were present, emphasizing the importance of the need in the world for the Christian Religion.

The conference assembled in the Cliff House and organized for business. Mr. Mitchell was elected chairman and Mr. McKinstry the secretary. A Committee on Program and Dispatch of Business and one on Findings, was appointed.

The Chairman called for reports as to the results of the Every Member Canvass; all of which were most inspiring and indicated an advance all along the line. The Rev. Mr. Weigle, Executive Secretary for California, told in a most thorough and interesting way how some of the suggestions from the Field Department, for the furtherance of the Church's work were being used in his diocese.

The Rev. Mr. Kemmerer, of El Paso, and formerly one of the National Field Secretaries, described in detail the workings of Parish Program Conferences, designed to make intelligent every member of the particular parish or mission.

Mr. Winnie, one of the laymen of Colorado, described the meeting of the vestrymen of the diocese, with the Rev. Dr. Patton two years ago. It was a picked meeting and the men went home after several conferences with Dr. Patton, realizing as never before, their responsibility towards the Church.

Group Organization in the parish was the subject of the conference led by Mr. Mitchell; this should follow as a rule, the Parish Conferences. Mr. Mitchell advocated a Chairman to organize the meetings and another one to act on leader. Bulletin No. 40 of the National Council, describes this in detail.

Mr. Keiter, laymen, Executive Secretary for Minnesota, spoke of the Vestry Approach and how it had been handled in Minnesota. He followed in detail the suggestions of the National Council—that is, the best plan.

The rector of the Church of the Ascension, St. Louis, the Rev. Mr. Bunting, told of his vestry and of their action in his plan to raise the quota of $8,500 as against the $400 the parish had been giving in the past. He gave them leadership and they responded to a man.

The subject of "Flying Squadrons" was ably handled by the Rev. Mr. Flockhart. These were principally for the parish or mission which did not get into the "Swing" of the Diocesan Movement. The Rev. Mr. Bartlett, rector of St. Philip's Church, St. Louis, and until recently of South Dakota, also spoke on this subject, telling of its use in South Dakota.

The Executive Secretary of Southern Ohio, Mr. Rineheimer, was a most valuable member of the "staff" of the conference. He told of how Southern Ohio had asked for four leaders to be sent into the Diocese at one time; of engagements having been made through his office for meetings in sixty places in the Diocese; every detail attended to, even to suggesting the kind of meeting to be held, etc.

A most helpful meeting was that conducted by the Rev. Louis G. Wood, of the National Staff, on the use of the final week before the campaign.

"The Follow-up During the Year" was the subject of the address by the Rev. Mr. Tenbroeck, now of Eastern Oregon, and at one time on the official staff of the Church. Have a definite program for the Church's mission all during the year.

The Rev. Mr. Knickerbocker, of St. Paul's, Minneapolis, told of his group organization.

The Rev. Mr. White, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, brought the greetings of the National Department of Christian Social Service. He referred to the annual conference to be held in Toronto June 21 to 25, and urged every Diocese and Missionary District to be represented.

"The Program for the Next Triennium," "The Bishop and Council Organization," "The Department of Publicity" and its work in the Diocese, were discussed at length, as was also the suggestion for the formation of a Field Department for the Eighth Department, in order that this great part of the country, so far from headquarters, might have more real help.

Dean Davis, the Domestic Secretary of the Department of Missions, whose experience as one of the leaders of the Church had covered a long period delivered a message of cheer and con-mism, urging his hearers to carry on in an ever stronger way.

One of the visible fruits of the labors of Bishop Whipple is the Rev. Sherman Coolidge, the full-blooded Indian, who was present throughout the sessions and an interested listener to all that was going on.

Provincial Conference of Young People.

The Rev. C. P. Sparling, in charge of Work Among Young People in the Province of Washington, has called a provincial conference to be held in Washington on February 9. This conference is the outcome of a meeting of young people's societies held last November in St. Margaret's Church during the time when the Synod of the Province of Washington was held in Washington.

Cable From Bishop McKim.

A cable received at Church Missions House January 16 from Bishop McKim in Tokyo says: "Severe earthquake. All are safe."

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Church Work at Fort Screven.

Christmas services were held at Fort Screven, near Savannah, by the Bishop of the Diocese, the Sunday after Christmas, in one of the buildings of the post. Bishop Reese preached on "Manhood." The Bishop is now sending the Rev. E. M. Bruce, of the Diocese of Los Angeles, who is spending the winter in Savannah, every Sunday for services at Fort Screven. A room is being converted into a chapel, and an altar rail and altar are being made at the Fort.

Christ Church, Savannah: Ten days after the Rev. David Cady Wright assumed charge as rector of Christ Church, the annual parish meeting was held. Six new vestrymen were elected, making two wardens and twelve vestrymen, and Mr. Wright outlined for his new plans to be put in operation at once, the group neighborhood system, organization of the men of the parish and the development of Bible classes.

Mrs. D. D. Taber, United Thank Offering Field Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, who is being loaned to the Diocese of Georgia for three months by the National Executive Board, began her tour of the Diocese in Savannah January 16 to promote the Program of the Church. Mrs. Taber has just returned from the District of Eastern Oregon, and an interesting coincidence developed that on the afternoon that she addressed the women of the combined parishes in Savannah on the work of Eastern Oregon, taking as the subject of her talk "Finding the Old Oregon Trail," the women of this missionary district were meeting to organize their district work. The Bishop of Georgia introduced Mrs. Taber and offered special prayers for the women of Eastern Oregon.

St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville, has had a very successful season with its boy choir of about twenty members, and at the vesper service every Sunday many relatives and friends of the boys who never before attended service have become quite regular. A very successful sacred concert was given at St. Thomas' in December when selections were given by all of the organizations of the town, and a chorus was selected from all of the choirs. The offering for the poor of Thomas County amounted to $100.

For Work Among Foreign Born Girls.

A mass meeting, under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Washington, was held in Epiphany Parish Hall on Wednesday evening, January 23, in the interest of Americanization and the social uplift of girls. The special speaker was Miss Harriet Dunn, Secretary for the Work Among Foreign-born Girls. Her subject was "The Stranger in Our Midst." This phase of work is new to the Girls' Friendly Society, but is in keeping with the ideals of the organization. All people interested in the subject and all branches of the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese were invited to attend this meeting.

The Annual Convention of the Diocese will be held in St. Thomas' Church on February 6 and 7. The Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith, rector of St. Thomas Church, and the Rev. D. R. Covell, Superintendent of the City Missions are in charge of the arrangements for the convention. The Rev. H. Allen Griffith, Secretary of the last convention, will act as Secretary until his successor is elected and Bishop Freeman will preside.

Bishop Howden Visits Old Parish: The congregation of St. John's Church, Georgetown, were rejoiced to have with them on Sunday, January 13, their friend and former rector, Bishop Howden, of New Mexico. That week marked the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Howden at St. John's Church, and it was a fortunate arrangement of his itinerary which made it possible for Bishop Howden to be with his former parishioners at that time. The rector of the church, the Rev. John S. Moses, had been rector of St. John's Church just two years that day, so that it was in a sense a double anniversary of significance to St. John's Parish.

New Chapel in Augusta County.

Plans are under way for the construction of a chapel near Brookewood, Augusta County. This work is very largely due to the initiative and splendidly constructive efforts of Mrs. Joseph Cochran. The lot was given by Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Rawlinson, who have also contributed the quarried stone of which the chapel will be built. Members of the congregation have promised to contribute largely of their time in connection with the work of construction. The chapel will be under the general charge of the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., rector of Trinity Church, Staunton. Plans are being considered and the erection of the building will begin in the very near future.

New Rector at Blacksburg.

The Rev. J. Hubard Lloyd has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Blacksburg, and will take charge immediately. Mr. Lloyd is a son of the late beloved Dr. John J. Lloyd, for many years rector of Grace Church, Lynchburg, and the first Archdeacon of Southwestern Virginia. The Rev. Hubard Lloyd has spent practically all of his ministerial life as a missionary in Japan, and will receive a hearty welcome when he comes as a rector in Southwestern Virginia.

St. Thomas', Abingdon.

The Rev. R. J. Stilwell of the faculty of DuBose Memorial Church Training School, Sewanee, Tenn., is temporarily supplying at St. Thomas' Church. This church has been without a rector since last May. The Rev. Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin did splendid work here for some months in the past summer, and the congregation is very happy in having for the present the Rev. Mr. Stilwell.

Business Women's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

During the year 1923 the activities of the Business Women's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church have been many and varied, the chief of them being the support of an orphan at the Purdy Home for Girls at Jarratts, Va.

In addition to this they have contributed to the Bishop's Emergency Fund; the Leper Mission; Archdeacon Stuck's Memorial Fund and the United Thank Offering.

On December 5 a corporate communion service was held in St. Paul's Church, the rector, the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., officiating, to which service all the Business Women's Auxiliaries of the city were invited.

At Christmas a box was sent to the Mountain Missions in Virginia and also one to the Orphan at Purdy.

Among the plans for the year 1924 are a Lecture Course by Dr. Sanger, of the Board of Education, and a Study Class during Lent.

The officers of the Auxiliary are: President, Miss Henrietta Crump; vice-president, Miss Jervy Fisher; recording secretary, Miss Harriet Aunspaugh; corresponding secretary, Miss Eileen McCausland; treasurer, Miss Moyra McCausland; custodian United Thank Offering, Miss Annie Bell McGary; chairman Membership Committee, Miss Jervy Fisher; supply secretary, Miss Melena Schaaf; social service secretary, Miss Bessie Walker.

Mission at St. John's, Ensley.

On Sunday evening, January 13, Bishop Beckwith concluded with the rite of confirmation, an eight-day teaching mission at St. John's Church. It was necessary to bring in chairs.

In the mornings the Bishop instructed his audience with expositions of the Book of Common Prayer, and at night, through a series of lecture-sermons on "The Fundamental Principles of Christianity."

Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Disciple ministers were present. On the last night, Sunday, one Presbyterian minister closed his church and brought the congregation. One day they all joined the Bishop at luncheon in the rectory, as guests of the rector, the Rev. Edmunds Bennett.

It is the rector's intention to follow up as best he can, these truly remarkable instructions.

At Eufaula, where the Bishop held a mission before coming to Ensley, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist ministers closed their churches on the last Sunday night, and attended with their people.

On Thursday the Bishop addressed the Kiwanis Club.

Interesting Meeting of the Clericus.

The Delaware Clericus held a most enjoyable meeting at the rectory of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, Tuesday, January 15, guests of the Rev. R. W. Trapnel, rector, and listened, with marked intensity, to an essay by the Rev. Abram L. Urban, from Pennsylvania, who took for his subject, "Modern Approach to Christ," assuring us, who believe in the Ancient Creeds, that we need not fear their losing their orthodoxy, even under the present-day efforts at depreciation. The flow of reason was followed by a spread of refreshments, all of which were heartily enjoyed. The Bishop of the Diocese was not present. He is enjoying a visit with friends in a former parish at San Antonio, Texas.

Having accepted an invitation from the Warden, the next meeting will be held February 12 in the Delaware Work House, where the Clericus will listen to an address by him.

* Of the twenty parishes in the Diocese eight met their quota for the past year and four of that number went above the apportionment; and of the nineteen missions eleven reached the top and six of them exceeded the amount.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Convention.

The second annual convention of the diocese closed, after a midnight session, at 1:30 A. M. on January 17. The meeting was held in the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, and is considered to have been a splendid meeting in every way. Every white clergyman in the diocese, save the Rev. J. H. Tillinghast, rector-emeritus of Zion Church, Eastover, was present, and with few exceptions the parishes and missions were represented by delegations. Prominent visitors and speakers were the Rev. R. W. Patton, D. D., Field Secretary and Campaign Director of the National Council who made an inspiring and convincing address on the constructive advance made by the Church in many directions during the past four years, through the Nation-Wide Campaign for the Mission of the Church. He spoke of the need for loyalty, on the part of the individual dioceses, towards the complete Program of the current triennium. Dr. Patton also made an address on the American Church Institute for Negroes, of which Auxiliary to the National Council he is the Director. He spoke particularly in regard to the Voorhees School, in Denmark, South Carolina, which it was proposed should be taken over as a joint responsibility of the Dioceses of South Carolina and Upper South Carolina in connection with the Institute. A report urging this action by the convention was made by a special committee (the Hon. R. I. Manning, chairman), which had investigated the school property and the proposed plan. Final resolutions were adopted through which, if the Diocese of South Carolina will take similar action, and the American Church Institute do for the school what it did in a similar instance for the schools at Fort Valley, Ga., Okalona, Miss., and others, it is hoped that this splendid institute will come under the control of the two South Carolina Dioceses within the ensuing year. This action was taken by unanimous consent and the general feeling of all present was one of congratulation and satisfaction.

The Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., rector of the Porter Military Academy of Charleston, outlined the history of the Academy from its foundation under the Rev. Dr. Porter, up to the present day, and appealed to the Upper Diocese to respond heartily to the campaign which would be set up in the near future for the raising of its share in the present $200,000 Campaign.

The Rev. Warren Way, D. D., of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, made a statement of the work of this School, which is the joint property of the Carolinas; and Dr. Gardner Tucker outlined the Provincial plans for the Department of Religious Education.

The Bishop's annual address showed remarkable growth throughout the various fields of diocesan work. There are, at the present time, four postulants for holy orders, three candidates, and two young men who contemplate studying for the ministry. One ordination to the priesthood has taken place and ninety-six persons have been confirmed. Notable in his report was an account of the young people's movement, which is growing rapidly, since a field worker, Mrs. Frank N. Challen, of Greenville, has been placed in the field and since the holding of the summer camp last June.

Under Colored Work, the Bishop reported a splendid meeting of the Colored Council last summer and the organization, at that time, of the Colored Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Special reference was made to the Vestrymen's Conference held in Columbia, with such signal success, last fall; and congratulations were offered to the Diocese on the splendid financial report of the treasurer. This report showed a total expenditure of $55,058.10, with a balance in the bank on December 31 of $2,235.84. The amount due the budget of the National Church was met in full and some couple of hundred was paid to the Priorities. In addition to this all appropriations within the diocese were also completed. The outlook for 1924 is not all that could be desired, but definite action will be taken by the Finance Department looking towards an increase in the pledges. These amount to date, to $46,158.86 on a quota of $62,719.

The project presented to the Convention to join with the Dioceses in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina, to establish a Summer Headquarters and Conference Ground and to purchase Kanuga Lake, just outside of Hendersonville, North Carolina, for this purpose, was referred to a committee of five, which was instructed to consider the whole proposition and to report back to the 1925 Convention, which will be held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia.

Routine business was disposed of and elections and appointments show little change from those of last year. One notable change was made in the personnel of the Executive Council, in that the President of the Diocesan Branch will, hereafter, be made an ex-officio member of that body. This action was taken in recognition of the organized work of the women of the diocese.

A revised constitution was adopted which must be ratified in 1925 before it becomes effective. Canons were adopted which become operative immediately, except where they are in opposition to the Constitution adopted at the Primary Convention in October, 1921.

The New Church Hospital for Children.

The proposed new Children's Hospital of the Diocese is to be located on a plot of ground three hundred by five hundred feet, in the neighborhood of the great General Hospital and Medical College, which are such a credit to the city. It will be directly opposite the Nurses' Home. The Administration Building will be six stories high with two wings, each five stories high. The total capacity will be two hundred and fifty beds, but for the present only one of the wings and the Administration building will be completed. This will give a capacity of one hundred and fifteen beds. The equipment will be very modern with considerable space given to heliotherapy. There will be experimental laboratories, X-Ray rooms and three operating rooms. A chapel seating five hundred and sixty persons is included in the plans. Stanley Matthews is the architect. He is a nephew of Bishop Matthews of New Jersey.

Mrs. W. H. Thayer, of Oxford, Ohio, who died recently and at whose funeral Bishop Vincent officiated, was a Churchwoman of the greatest energy and faith and it was largely to her efforts that Holy Trinity Mission in that beautiful college town was started. Her girlhood was spent in the parish of the Church of the Resurrection, Fern Bank, and the early part of her married life in the Church of the Advent, Walnut Hills. C. G. R.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Bishop Darlington Administers Confirmation in Hungarian Church.

By arrangement with Archdeacon Harold E. Schmaus, and invitation of the Rev. Aladar Jezernicky. Bishop Darlington visited the Coal Company's Chapel, situated between Mount Carmel and Kulpmont, and confirmed six persons of the Hungarian Reformed Congregation, which was gathered about a year ago by the minister above named.

The Magyar Reformed Church in this country was originally composed of two associations. During the World War, the Bishops and churches of this denomination in Austria ceased to send on their gifts for the support of their missionary clergymen in this country. The Western Conventus then voted to apply for recognition by the German Reformed Church in this country. The Fattern Conventus applied to the Episcopal Church, and at a meeting held at Princeton, N. J., an agreement was signed by which these clergy and their congregations should be taken under the care of the Episcopal Church. They already had our Catechism entire in their Prayer Book, and the Church of England had been for many years helping to train their theological students.

Mr. Jazernecky had to interpret the Bishop's address to the people, few of whom understand English. The singing is strictly congregational, and as every one sings, they do not need or wish instrumental accompaniment. According to Hungarian custom the candidates did not kneel, but stood while the Bishop laid his hands on their heads. The Venerable Harold E. Schmaus was present, and the congregation seemed to be very devout in their worship, and gave a generous offering for the Bishop's Charitable Fund.

Though desirous, Mr. Jazernecky has not yet been ordained a minister in our Church.

Lancaster: On Sunday after Christmas a beautiful new tile floor, placed in the nave and chancel of St. John's Church, Lancaster, was duly blessed and dedicated by the rector, the Rev. Henry Lowndes Drew. The preceding year has been a memorable one in the history of the parish. At least $10,000 have been raised and expended towards improving the church edifice. Among other improvements have been the veneering of the exterior of the church building, and the repainting of the side walls of the nave. Then there are also two memorial windows contracted for, and now being made in England. All these improvements have been paid for, and there is no debt outstanding. The confirmation class presented last year was the largest for some years back in the history of the parish.

A Young People's Fellowship has been organized recently in St. Luke's Parish, Altoona, the Rev. George R. Bishop, rector. Meetings are held in the church every Sunday evening, immediately preceding Evensong. Great interest is being shown by the young people, and new members are being received each week.

Appreciation.

The vestry of St. Paul's Parish, Centerville, desires to place on record its recognition and appreciation of the able, valued and efficient services rendered by the Rev. Ellis B. Dean, during the time for which he was invited as locum tenens of the Parish.

His personal attention to, and thoughtful consideration of the members of the parish, especially those who were unable to attend the services at the church, has been daily noted and appreciated.

The Vestry, therefore, again extends to him the assurance of their gratitude and high personal regard, and best wishes in his field of labor, wherever he may be.

NORTH TEXAS.

Bishop Temple.

In the death of Bishop Temple, the clergy of the Missionary District of North Texas feel a deep sense of personal loss. We loved him for the purity of his purpose; for the high aspiration that prompted and guided all his plans; for his strong hold upon the charity that is not easily provoked and thinketh no evil; and for his patience under suffering and pain, pointing us to the Saviour who entered not into glory till first He was crucified.

Bishop Temple watched over his clergy with a careful and a loving eye that made us know we could carry to him our perplexities and hardships, and he would give us abundantly his sympathy and help. And this feeling among the clergy was fully shared by the Laity whose chief shepherd Bishop Temple was. There was a cheerfulness in him that nothing could daunt, and a liberality that delighted to help all who were in need.

"July was in his sunny heart, October in his liberal hand."

And wherever he went, he never met a stranger; but everywhere, neighbors and friends, proud of him as their ornament and decoration.

"It matters not; for, go at night or noon,
A friend, when e'er he dies, has died too soon."

WEST TEXAS

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Capers Conducts Successful Missions.

Bishop Capers has recently conducted three Missions in his Diocese, one at Brownsville, covering dates from November 29 to December 2, at Gonzales from December 10 to 16, and at San Marcos from January 7 to 13. At each Mission the Bishop made the articles of the Apostles' Creed the subjects of his sermons, and in every instance the interest of the people was manifested by increasing congregations until the capacity of the churches was taxed. the utmost. Bishop Capers has greatly strengthened the parishes and missions of his diocese by being his own missionary. A week's stay at a Mission or a Parish in the Diocese gives the Bishop an opportunity of coming into close fellowship with the men and women and young people of the Diocese.

The Diocese of West Texas has for its ultimate goal absolute loyalty to the General Church Program, and the outlook for the coming year is most encouraging from every point of view.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Pittsburgh Assembly of the Brotherhood of Saint Andrew held a meeting in Trinity Parish, Pittsburgh, on Wednesday evening, January 16. Supper was served in the parish house at six-thirty, following shortened Evening Prayer in the Church. Later there were addresses by the Rev. Dr. Percy G. Kammerer, rector of Trinity Church, and Mr. Warren Hires Turner, National Treasurer of the Brotherhood.

The Annual Training Institute for Study Class Leaders and Parish Branch

Officers of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held under the auspices of the Educational Committee, in Trinity Parish House, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 4, 5 and 6. In the mornings there will be classes on "Creative Forces in Japan," by Miss Laura Boyer, of the New York office force, open to selected study class leaders. In the afternoons there will be conferences on "The Necessity for Emphasis upon the Devotional Side of Auxiliary Work," by Miss Charlotte E. Forsyth, Superintendent of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education; and Sectional Conferences for Parish Officers, by the Diocesan Auxiliary Officers, Mrs. Charles Bailey, Mrs. Marcellin C. Adams, Miss Margaret E. Phillips, Mrs. Robert S. Armstrong, Mrs. C. L. Peirce, Jr., and Mrs. Karl Emmerling. In the evening, there will be a second class on "Creative Forces in Japan," by Mrs. W. W. Wishart, Diocesan President of the Girls' Friendly Society.

Memorial Cross: It is proposed in the near future to erect in the churchyard of Calvary Church, a stone Celtic Cross, designed by Mr. Cram, to correspond with the architecture of the Church, of which he was the architect. It will be eighteen feet high, and around the base there will be bronze plates containing the names of the men from the parish who served in the World War, over two hundred in number.

The Diocese has a new Correspondent for the Church Periodical Work, in the person of Mrs. Thomas Fleming. She may be addressed at 5225 Pembroke Place, Pittsburgh.

Sunday-school Conference.

During the third week of December a Sunday-school Conference was held in All Saints' Mission, Guantanamo, Cuba, which lasted two days. Two conferences on the Bible were conducted by the Bishop of Cuba; the Rev. H. Jauregui spoke on the Training of Teachers; Miss Ashurst on the Christian Nurture Series of the Church School League; Miss Fite took charge of the meetings of the Young People's Society; and the school gave various exhibitions of hymn singing in Spanish. Three mystery plays were given, illustrating the Nativity and the Visit of the Wise Men. There were several meetings in the interest of the Missions in Cuba at which the speakers were the Bishop and the Ven. J. M. Lopez-Guillen, Archdeacon of the Oriente. Everything was in the Spanish language.

Christmas Services.

"Never were the Christmas Services in Havana better attended than they were this year. The number attending communion services was very large, especially at the Cathedral, and at the Service for the West Indians in Marianao, a Havana suburb.

On the day of the Holy Innocents the members of the Cathedral Sunday School held their Christmas celebration at the Cathedral. This consisted of a Carol Service with prayers and the offering of gifts for the members of another Sunday School in Havana, followed by a Christmas party at the Cathedral School in the Vedado.

On the Feast of the Epiphany the members of Calvario Mission in Jesus del Monte, Havana, had their celebration, consisting of a mystery play and a carol service in the chapel.

EAST CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Quota Paid In Full.

For the first time since the year 1920 the Diocese of East Carolina has paid in full its quota for the General Church work, according to an announcement coming from the office of the Diocesan Treasurer. In its annual council, which met in St. James', Wilmington, in May, 1923, the Diocese pledged full payment of its quota, both for the budget and priorities. It is gratifying to note that the treasurer was able to fulfil the pledge from current receipts applicable to that purpose.

In addition to the full payment of the quota assigned it by the National Council, the Diocese of East Carolina has met all of its current diocesan obligations. The fact that the Diocese has had this year such a good financial record is partly due to very favorable financial conditions in the State and partly to a growing sense of stewardship. This is also reflected in the pledges for 1924.

The Bishop's Ninth Anniversary.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina, celebrated the ninth anniversary of his elevation to the Episcopate on Epiphany. In the evening he preached at St. James', Wilmington, and in his sermon briefly reviewed the work of the Church during the nine years. No Bishop in the Church is more sincerely beloved by his people and clergy, and on this anniversary he received the felicitations of many friends. During his tenure of office the Diocese has made great strides. With the help of his clergy and people he has made East Carolina one of the banner Dioceses in the support of the work of the whole Church.

Encouraging Conditions.

A distinctly hopeful thing about the work of the Church in East Carolina is that there appears to be a new missionary enthusiasm which is reaching out to establish churches in new places, and serve neglected communities. In the growing town of Ahoskie the Church has owned a lot for some years, but there has been no organized work. Recently the Methodist Church building in Ahoskie, which had been vacated for a new building, was purchased and will be moved to the lot owned by the Episcopalians, who have there the nucleus of an aggressive mission. At Morehead City a portable chapel is to be erected on a lot owned by the Church, and a homeless congregation will have a shelter. Work is now being aggressively carried forward at Rowland, Lake Phelps, Wallace and several other places hitherto untouched.

St. Paul's Parish, Beaufort, made in the year 1923 what is believed to be a record for the Diocese of East Carolina. This parish, which in 1922 reported eighty-three communicants, had almost a fifty per cent increase. The rector, the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., presented thirty-nine persons to Bishop Darst for confirmation, though several of the number are to be credited to the mission at Morehead City. Dr. Lay, formerly rector of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, N. C., in addition to his duties as rector of this parish, is head of the Department of Religious Education in East Carolina.

Almighty and everlasting God, mercifully look upon our infirmities, and in all our dangers and necessities stretch forth Thy right hand to help and defend us, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Christ in the Universe.

With the ambiguous earth

His dealings have been told us; these abide;

The signal to a maid, the human birth,
The lesson, and the Young Man crucified.

But not a star of all

The unimaginable stars has heard
How He administered this terrestrial ball
Our race have kept their Lord's entrusted word.

Of those earth-visiting feet

None knows the secret, cherished, perilous—

The terrible, shame-fast, frightened, whispered, sweet

Heart-shattering secret of His way with us.

No planet knows that this

Our planet, carrying land and wave,
Love and life multiplied, and pain and bliss,

Bears as chief treasure one forsaken grave.

Nor in our little day,

May His devices with the heavens be guessed,

His pilgrimage to thread the Milky Way,
Or His bestowals there be manifest.

But in the eternities

Doubtless we shall compare together, hear

A million alien gospels, in what guise
He walked the Pleiades, the Lyre, the Bear.

Oh, be prepared, my soul!

To read the inconceivable, to scan
The million forms of God those stars unroll

When in our turn we show to them—
Man.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Parable of the Two Sons, and the Parable of the Vineyard.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The interview with the Chief Priests, elders and scribes reminded Our Lord of a story of two sons. He applied His own illustration. The first son typifies the publicans and harlots, the second the Chief Priests and elders. The overwhelming weight of comment sees in the first son the Gentiles, in the second the Jews. Our Lord may have had in His mind some secondary application; but this interpretation obscures the absolutely certain primary one. What did the publicans and sinners do concerning John and that kingdom John preached which the Chief Priests and elders did not? They joined it. They confessed that they were sinful and were baptized. The literal truth of Our Lord's words is often forgotten. So far as a solemn outward act of joining can make anybody members of anything the publicans and harlots were members of the kingdom and the Chief Priests and elders were not. John's baptism, being for the remission of sins, involved public confession of sin, which the Chief Priests and elders had not made.

This is so often forgotten that it cannot be stressed too strongly. It needs undue emphasis to rescue it from undeserved oblivion. There was a loosely-knit semi-fraternal body, an informal society, constantly mentioned through the Gospels as "John's Disciples." Our Lord was a member. Initiation was by baptism which, by John's ruling, meant confession of sin as well as desire to join the coming Kingdom of God. In Our Lord's case and in His only, the first requirement had been suspended. John announced that He needed no purification from sin. A vast number of publicans and harlots were members. The elders and Chief Priests were not. Most of the Apostles were; so were some of the Pharisees. The bulk of the Pharisees and the Scribes were not. The line of cleavage lay along admission or denial of sin. It lies there yet.

This has been so subtleized and allegorized and spiritualized that it will be news to many that there is a hard practical common-sense core to it. The publicans and harlots had joined an organization created to prepare members for the kingdom of God. The Chief Priests and elders had refused to join.

That organization has ceased. The Church absorbed it. No one is baptized today with the baptism of John. It was never highly crystallized. But it hung together, asked questions, influenced public opinion and had a definite form of initiation. Our Lord and hundreds of His hearers belonged. The Chief Priests did not. That these facts are glanced at in Our Lord's speech we believe. Not that the spiritual interpretations are wrong. He stated a general principle, and every general principle has many applications. But the primary application seems forgotten by comment.

Questioning the authority of Christ provoked a rich-brocaded, quaintly-embroidered, gorgeous, eloquent, impassioned and terrible oration. With the rush of a mountain-torrent, the swing of a great sea-tempest, Our Lord spoke; a one-speech, not a series of detached remarks. His counter-question concerning John merged into the parable of the Two Sons, which passed into that of the Wicked Husbandmen, the Marriage of the King's Son and the story of the cornerstone. It was one speech, knit together and interlocking; the trilogy of doom, addressed to the assembled religious leaders of the nation. He told the parable of the Vineyard and the Wicked Husbandmen, which ends: "What, therefore, shall the Lord of the vineyard do to those husbandmen when he cometh?"

Some said to Him: "He will miserably destroy those wicked men and will let out His vineyard to other husbandmen who shall render Him the fruits in their season." And others, when they heard it, said: "God forbid."

A vineyard, a fig-tree, or a fig-tree in a vineyard meant Judea. As Our Lord, under the similitude of the fig-tree, foreshadowed the destruction of Judea, so, under the similitude of the husbandmen he foreshadowed the destruction of the rulers of the Jews. He Himself is the Son, and Israel the vineyard, the Prophets the servants cast out and His own impending death the climax. Nothing in ancient literature approaches this in simplicity and pathos. It would have convinced any unprejudiced hearer. It did convince hundreds. But the Chief Priests and elders had pre-judged Him. They were officials of God's Church. Of that they were sure, and they were right. Attack on it was attack on God. Supernatural attack on it was attack by Satan against Jehovah. The reasoning is simple, plain and (except in one point) quite true. Christ attacked them, as they felt through every shamed and tingling fibre. Therefore they said that He attacked God's Church; therefore, that He was evil, therefore that He held supernatural power from Satan, therefore that He was a devil. Strange as it seems to us who, even when we disbelieve and disobey, count Christ good, many men who faced Him believed Him Satan incarnate. The phrases are on record. The comments survive.

This alone would prove the narrative authentic. It represents Jewish authorities as calling Christ demonized. This is the logical position, if Christ be not good. If Christ be only a man He was not good. If He were man and only man, then He was a megalomaniac, violently insane, "Demonized." If sane, kind, unselfish, wise, loving—then He is God.

There are other rulers than the Scribes and Pharisees. The vineyard is larger than Judea only. Know ye not that this present world is under the domination of angels? From centre to circumference the Spiritual Universe must have thrilled. Out of the mouth of some unnamed bystander Our Lord had drawn sentence of doom concerning those spirits which preferred their own way to God's. They shall be miserably destroyed. God grant that we be not involved in that destruction.

The Best Preparation.

A new head was needed for the school lunchroom—some one to prepare and serve the hot lunch that was supplied to the pupils at cost, for their own good. It must be some one skilled in the preparation of a tasty and wholesome menu. It must be some one who liked children, and who could handle them firmly, yet with genuine friendliness. A dozen possible names were discussed and dismissed for one reason or another. Finally one was decided upon and the woman interviewed.

"But how did you ever come to think of me?" she asked; for she was a quiet little housewife.

"Your little daughter is really responsible," laughed the woman who had come to see her. "She is a rosy sample of your good care and feeding. We have gathered, from what she says, that you are the one we want."

So there came to one woman, not rich in worldly goods, the opportunity she needed to add to her income by a congenial work. That opportunity came because she was prepared for it.

Perhaps daily life is a bit dull and humdrum for most of us. Looked upon as preparation for the great unknown demand that may await us just round the next corner, it can hold new interest, new thrill, new beauty. You never know what minute that wonderful demand may come. Be prepared—and the commonplaces will be better done and the dull days all the brighter for the thought and the aspiration.—East and West.

Revelation.

Wilbur Clarence Ammon.

I watched the sun set yesterday
In a riot of crimson and gold;
It seemed to me that God was there
In His glory and power untold.
I saw His chariots of purple and pearl—
His banners in broad array;
I saw the glory of Heaven revealed
At the close of mortal day.

It seemed to me I heard a Voice
As I stood there, mute and still,
A Voice that spoke in such a tone
My very soul to thrill:
"O mortal, can you look upon
This Glory which is Mine,
And still deny there is a God—
A King of man, divine?"

Mary of Bethany, the Understanding Friend.

Occasionally we find in the same household two characters so utterly different that, like discordant colors, the one mars the beauty of the other. Such a case we find in Mary and Martha, the sisters of Bethany, loyal followers of Jesus. When we study them together, the possible faults of each stand out in bold relief. Let us forget the busy Martha for today, then, and fix our attention on Mary of Bethany, the understanding friend.

Mary possessed, in an unusual degree, those priceless gifts which we express in that lofty and often misused term—"my friend." Her first qualification for the exalted place of friendship was that beautiful woman's gift called intuition. Three times we see her face to face with the Master; and each time she stirred His mighty soul to the depths. On two of these occasions, Jesus came to her in great need; and her rare and unselfish insight won from the usually quiet Man of Galilee an outburst of almost limitless praise. He came first to the quiet home in Bethany from a season of intense activity in the cities of Galilee. He came exhausted in body and doubtless depressed in spirit; for though the throngs still followed Him, He knew that all was not well. The Pharisees criticized His teachings with subtle scorn; the Samaritans had closed some of their villages against Him; those who thronged His path for bodily healing, went away without the healing of the soul; those who listened to His delightful stories, failed to grasp their deep and vital meaning; even His Disciples so often failed Him in the great, throbbing crises of His life! How few, how few there were who understood!

But there, in the cool depths of that inner room at Bethany, was one who saw and met the need of His burdened soul—one who sat at His feet and received His passionate message with eager and understanding heart. Ah, what cared He whether the table held but one simple dish or groaned with many, when He could pour out His very heart to an understanding friend—when

He could feel the renewing strength that comes from a sturdy and sympathetic heart! What wonder that He cried out earnestly, "Mary hath chosen that good part which cannot be taken away!"

The third time Jesus came to Bethany, His need was greater still. It was "six days before the Passover"—less than a week before that terrible day that saw Him stretched upon a Roman cross. His anguished eyes, looking steadfastly toward Jerusalem, saw clearly its great, black shadow across His path. The carpins of the Pharisees had become a rumbling menace in His ears; the fickle mob swayed recklessly this way and that; His obdurate Disciples, still dreaming of a gorgeous earthly kingdom, refused to see the coming suffering of their Lord. How His great soul longed for an answering heart that could comprehend the depths of His mighty struggle!

They made Him a feast in Bethany, heavy with food and noisy with good cheer; but all of their feasting could not lift that gaunt, hideous shadow that lay before Him. In the midst of the feasting, when the pressure upon His soul had seemed almost greater than He could bear, He was conscious of the stirring, uplifting influence that comes from an understanding heart. It was only a quiet woman who had slipped unnoticed to the foot of His couch and was pouring upon His feet a flask of precious perfume, so precious that it was doubtless her greatest treasure, kept to lay at her husband's feet when the wedding morning came. No need to tell the Master the meaning of this seemingly lavish gift. In the eager, earnest eyes, in the tense, white face, in the redolent perfume filling the house with sweetness, He read the welcome message that here was a woman that saw and shared the depths of His heavy grief. Dimly or clearly, she too saw the great, black shadow. She would not wait to pour her offering upon His bruised and mangled body; she would pour it instead on His living, throbbing feet, love's silent token that another heart could share the bitter irony of His own. "Why this waste!" the thoughtless disciples cried; but Jesus, exalted in the presence of one who could share His grief, exclaimed, "Wherever this gospel is told, they shall speak of her who anointed me beforehand for the burial!"

We see in these two instances that Mary possessed not only the intuition that sees the need, but the power of companionship to meet the need that must ever be a part of the truest friendship. Scarcely a spoken word of hers is given in the gospel story; yet each time, the generous appreciation of the Master leaves us with a sense of worthy service done. "Our intellectual and active powers increase with our affection," says Emerson; and must we not all recognize that one of life's greatest offerings is to love and understand? O, wives and mothers, daughters and sisters, women with busy hands and throbbing, straining nerves, let us not forget that what our dear ones need the most of all is the warm companionship that loves and sees and shares!

One reason why Mary could enter so intensely into the experience of the Master was because she herself possessed a wealth of deep emotion. The second time that Jesus came to the village of Bethany, Lazarus, Mary's brother, had lain in the grave for four weary, interminable days. When Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she hurried out to meet him; but Mary "still sat in the house." Was she too benumbed with grief to follow? Or had she a faith in Jesus that could quietly wait and trust? We do not know; but we do know that the sympathetic friends remained with Mary, sensing her deeper grief. When at last, urged on by the active Martha, she too went out to meet Him, and Jesus looked earnestly into her sorrowing face, He lost His quiet poise for the moment and the great, unbidden tears came stinging into His eyes. Jesus, the God-man, fully conscious of His power to heal and to restore, wept with the weeping Mary—a wonderful tribute to the depth of her grief. Those who feel most keenly have power to share most deeply the feelings of others when, like Mary, they keep unselfish love upon the throne of the throbbing, passionate heart.

Another quality of the real friend which Mary possessed was the willingness to sacrifice when sacrifice was needed. A mere idler she seemed to the superficial onlooker at first, sitting at Jesus' feet while Martha toiled in the kitchen. Yet the woman who was willing to be misunderstood that she might give the companionship her Master needed most, was capable of rising to heights of service when service was really needed. When we remember that woman had practically no earning power in Mary's day and a dowerless bride was almost a shame to her husband, we can realize more fully the depth of Mary's sacrifice when she poured her rich treasure freely, almost recklessly, on the sorrowing Master's feet. What cared she for loss to herself so that her suffering Friend might be soothed and strengthened? And as the perfume of her offering filled the house with sweetness, the redolent memory of that sacrifice is living still, stirring many a woman to pour out her treasures freely for the same dear Lord and the yearning, sorrowing world He died to save.—May Van Voorhis, in Presbyterian Banner.

Sociable Scot, Exclusive Englishman.

Many are the stories that humorously illustrate the differing traits of the Englishman, the Scotchman and the Irishman. According to one story—which, however, relates to only two of the three nationalities—four separate wrecks had cast up four men on a lonely island of the South Seas. Two were Scotchmen, and two were Englishmen. After several years a passing American steamer hove to and took the four aboard. Sandy and Donald found their way to the skipper's cabin, and in telling of their experiences Sandy said:

"It would grieve you, mon, to see the Englishmen. Never a word did they speak to each other all the time they were there; they were not introduced."

"And how did you lads make out?" inquired the skipper.

"Aye, mon, the dee I found Donald on the beach we organized a Caledonian Society, a golf club and a Presbyter-ian Church."

Our Lord's prayers are not only an example, but an instruction. We learn from His prayers that God hears prayer. He prayed at the baptism, and the Holy Ghost came upon Him; He prayed at the Transfiguration, and He was Transfigured as He prayed. He prayed in Gethsemane, and an angel appeared from Heaven to comfort Him. He prayed on the Cross, and Pentecost was the answer. Oh, yes, we can remember as old Gurney said, "Praying breath is not wasted breath," that no faithful prayer was ever lost at sea, but just as ships which make the longest voyage bring back the richest cargo, so those prayers which seem longest in being answered bring back in the end the greatest blessing!—Christian World Pulpit.

Live Christ!

Live Christ.—and though thy way may be
In this world's sight adversity,
He who doth heed thy every need
Shall give thy soul prosperity.

Live Christ.—and though thy path may be
The narrow street of poverty,
He had not where to lay His head
Yet lived in largest liberty.

Live Christ.—and all thy life shall be Peggy's Cookies.

The morning after Peggy's mother had cleaned the living room and hung the fresh, clean curtains, she found that she had such a bad headache that she must lie down immediately after breakfast.

"I am so glad," said Peggy, "that to-day is Saturday, so that I shall be home from school and can make the kitchen tidy for you."

"Saturday!" exclaimed her mother. "Why, so it is, I had forgotten that. Dear me, then it is baking day! I was going to make cookies for your school luncheons next week. But I'm afraid they will have to go."

Now if there was one thing that Peggy liked more than another to eat it was cookies, even the teeny, weeny ones that mother made, Peggy had often wished that mother would make them larger, but she never did. Way down in her heart the little girl wondered how it would feel to have, really and truly, all the cookies she could eat. As for a school luncheon without a cookie, well, she did not like the thought at all.

"I don't see why I can't make the cookies, mother," spoke up Peggy. "I've watched and watched you till I'm sure I know everything to do."

"You are pretty small," replied her mother, "but if you like you may try. Be sure to wash your hands very clean before you begin. Do not light the gas to heat the oven until you are almost ready to roll your cookies out. Then you won't be hurried by the fear that you are wasting heat and so make mistakes. Your oven will soon get hot enough even for cookies, which need a quick heat."

Peggy promised that she would remember both things. After she had washed the breakfast dishes and made the sink shine, she brushed her hair back neatly, washed her hands and tied on a big, fresh pinafore.

Then for a long time she was busy with the mixing bowl, which she set in the middle of the white kneading board. She found that by standing on a footstool she could reach it easily.

"I think this is the sistency that mother makes it" said Peggy at last, when she had lighted the gas for the oven she tiptoed to the door of her mother's room. Her mother's hand was moving on the counterpane, so Peggy knew that she was awake.

"Mother," she called softly, "may I put a raisin in the middle of my cookies?"

"Indeed you may. You may make them precisely as you please in every way. They are your cookies, Peggy."

Her own cookies—to make in any way she liked! Peggy had not thought of them in just that way before. She considered a whole minute while her eyes widened in astonished pleasure. Then she danced all the way to the kitchen and quickly rolled and cut her cakes. In the centre of each one she carefully placed a large, fat raisin and slid them all into the hot oven.

It was noon by the time the cookies were out and laid on a fresh cloth on the pantry shelf to cool. Peggy thought that she would toast some bread and take it to her mother with some tea for lunch.

"My cookies rose almost as well as yours do," she told her mother, "and I did not burn one."

Peggy's mother was much pleased and said that she believed that she could go right to sleep, since Peggy had taken everything off her mind so completely.

After that Peggy ate her own lunch and made the kitchen tidy.

She felt proud of her cookies, and when they were cool she packed them away in a clean, covered pan. But by that time she was a tired little girl. She had scarcely begun to tell it all as a story to her dolls, Annabel and Theresa, when she fell sound asleep and did not wake until her mother called her to supper.

"I am quite over my headache because of the rest you gave me," said her mother. "But Daddy has come and wants some of your cookies for supper. Where are they?"

You should have seen Peggy's father and mother when Peggy brought on her plate of cookies! One cookie covered the entire bottom of the plate so that the others had to be stacked on it, the raisin in the centre of one lying directly over the raisin in the centre of the one below it.

"They're as large as griddle cakes," exclaimed Peggy's mother. "Child, whatever did you cut them out with?"

"I—I used my lunch-pail cover," answered Peggy. "You—you said, mother, that I might make them in any way I liked."

"Indeed I did. And your cookies are lovely. I can make no better ones myself." Peggy's mother laughed as if she thought it very funny. Peggy's father took Peggy on his knee and declared that he was quite of her mind about cookies—he had never seen any so much to his fancy; and all the time he was laughing just as Peggy's mother had laughed.

And the next week when Peggy took her cookies to school in her lunch pail the children laughed too.

"Next Saturday I shall cut my cookies with your cutter," sighed Peggy to her mother, "small, with notches on the edge. Freddy Black warned me to watch out lest my cookie fall on my toes. And the girls—mother, I'm sure they envy me my cookies. But—I think—I think it is because they are not just like other people's—"

"I understand," said Peggy's mother. "Perhaps it would help out if we cut them as you say, small, like mine, with notches and a raisin, and perhaps you could have more than one cookie—"

"Oh, that would just suit me!" said

Peggy, hugging her mother, "and Daddy too, I'm sure. And—I wonder how it is that mothers always think everything out just right?"—Youth's Companion.

Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain Gives Thanks.

All day long for almost a week Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain sat in the shade of his tepee making something. And this was very astonishing! Not that he should be sitting, for sitting, as you must now hear, is an art in which Indians can excel beyond almost any people. But that Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain should be making something, working with his hands—oh, this was indeed surprising. For the whole tribe acknowledged that a man who was a great chief, whose shoulders were now bent by many winters, and whose cheeks were wrinkled by many summers, had a perfect right to bask in idleness forever and ever. Yet here he was with a little knife and a piece of wood, whittling something all day. But to neither man, woman or child would he show the thing that he was whittling.

Many an Indian questioned Big Chief's squaw as she weeded his vegetable patch: "Red Beads," they whispered softly in her ear, "what is the use of living in the same tepee with the Big Chief if your eyes cannot see the thing he whittles with his knife?"

"Poof!" grunted Red Beads, shrugging her shoulders, "What good does looking do? You should see poor Red Beads craning her neck and stooping her back and straining her eyes, but always Big Chief's hands covers the thing he carves. But this is what it seems like: like some great medicine to help the tribe! What else should it be—so precious to him?"

"Oh!" the Indians nodded, "Red Beads thinks it may be some new God—"

"Perhaps!" she said. And you can't blame her for thinking this, since Big Chief certainly seemed to worship the little thing he was carving exactly as the whole tribe worshipped the wooden gods—those queer carved bits of wood, brightly painted, to protect the tribe from evil.

But on the day when the whittling was finished you can imagine the mingled terror and pride of two young Indian boys, Brave Heart and Strong Legs, whom Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain summoned to his tepee. Poor Brave Heart's heart was flopping faster than any Indian's heart should flop, and Strong Legs' legs were wobbling more than any Indian's legs should wobble. Yet there they stood, the two of them, as straight as arrows, while the old chief peered out from under his beetling brows—and it is a fact that his eyes seemed to pierce straight through them.

"Brave Heart," said he, "and you Strong Legs, as time flies, twelve years have you lived in the tepees of your fathers and played childishly at the edge of the desert, until now the time has come for you to prove yourselves men. Full well you know the Indian customs, to send you out alone into the lonely wilds to suffer ordeals and testings and to starve until into your minds strange visions from the Great Spirit may come. No doubt you have already both dreaded these coming ordeals, yet welcomed their approach, wanting to be proven even as brave and as strong as the names you bear. Is this not true?"

Brave Heart nodded his head and Strong Legs mumbled that he did feel just that way.

"Very well then," continued Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain, "I now lay an ordeal on the two of you. See, in my hand is something I have been carving many days from a piece of wood. Look at it well—then tell me what it seems to be."

Eagerly the two boys leaned near and examined the carving which had been arousing much curiosity in the village. A little square thing it was, with something jutting from the top.

"Strong Legs, he thinks maybe it is a new tribal god, of powerful medicine to protect us," said the first boy, merely voicing the opinion of the entire village, of course.

But Brave Heart saw the Big Chief shake his head, so when his turn came he said: "To Brave Heart the carving looks like the stone tepees of the pale-face tribe of men; only the thing that juts out from the top of the tepee is something which Brave Heart never saw before."

Big Chief grunted approvingly: "You have spoken well, Brave Heart, and now I will tell you my wish. Far across the desert from here there is a village where long years ago there was an Indian pow-wow and sun dance to which all the braves of our tribe went. And as if it happened only yesterday there is the surprising memory that half of the Indians in that village refused to take peyote or dance in the sun dance as they used to do, because they had begun to 'walk the Jesus road.' Doubt not that instantly there was great curiosity in the heart of Chief Thunder-on-the-Mountain regarding this Jesus road, and he asked many questions and heard many answers and saw many sights. But the sight he remembers best after all these years is the cobblestone tepee where the Indians met to walk this Jesus road together and to sing songs and to hold their peaceful pow-wows. So now here is that tepee carved in wood exactly as Big Chief remembers is. Take it, brave boys, so that you may recognize it when you go over the desert to find this village. And when once you get there show this carving to the Pale-Face-Man from the tribe of white men who live in that village to teach these Indians to walk the Jesus road. Tell him that after all these many years poor Old Chief Thunder-on-the-Mountain is still waiting for a Pale-Face-Teacher to come to teach his tribe about the Jesus road. Tell him that during all these weary years of waiting the cheeks of Big Chief have become wrinkled and his back has become bent, and his eyes have become dim, and his legs have become feeble, until if he waits much longer to walk this Jesus road he will have to be carried like some helpless little papoose upon the backs of strong young braves. Ask this Pale-Face-Teacher if that other tribe of Indians is the only one that needs to learn to walk the Jesus road, while all the rest of us grow up and die in ignorance. All this, remember! And tell him that your ordeal of manhood is to bring him back to us. Now go! And until you find this village-of-the-stone-tepee and give your message, you shall not eat or drink."

So over the desert they went, the two of them. And they neither ate nor drank until they found a village with a stone tepee and a tower jutting out on top of it. Very weak from lack of food and water, they sought the Pale-Face-Teacher in the mission house and showing him the carving of that mission they gave their message.

You may be sure that even as the Apostle Paul once heard a voice calling, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," so to that missionary the small carved object was as a voice calling, "Come over the desert into our tribe and help us." You may also be sure that he went.

Moreover, the Christians in that cobblestone mission church which he left behind him raised enough money to buy Bibles to teach their Christless neighbors how to walk the Jesus road. So that when Brave Heart and Strong Legs went back over the desert they carried those Bibles with them, traveling beside the missionary.

And Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain, sitting in the shade of his tepee, saw the three of them approaching and called to his squaw: "Red Beads. Red Beads. Stop grinding the corn, and go tell every squaw and every brave in all this tribe that a Pale-Face Teacher comes across the desert to teach them how to walk the Jesus road. Hurry!"

So Red Beads stopped grinding the corn to spread the message through the village. And Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain gave thanks that he who had hungered and thirsted for righteousness was about to be filled.—The Baptist.

A Little Girl's Victory.

Two little girls were playing together. The older one had a beautiful new doll in her arms, which she was tenderly caressing.

The younger one crept up softly behind her and gave her a sharp slap on her cheek.

A visitor, unseen and unheard, was sitting in an adjoining room and saw it all. She expected to see and hear another slap, a harder one, in retaliation. But no; the victim's face flushed and her eyes had a momentary flash of indignation. She rubbed her hurt cheek with one hand while she held the doll closer with the other. Then, in a tone of gentle reproof, she said, "Oh, Sallie, I didn't think you'd do that!"

Sallie looked ashamed, as well she might, but made no reply. "Here, Sallie," continued the older girl, "sit here in sister's chair. I'll let you hold dollie awhile if you'll be very careful."

Sallie's face looked just then as if there were some "coals of fire" somewhere around, but she sat down with the doll on her lap giving her sister a glance of real appreciation, although it was mingled with shame.

The hidden looker-on was deeply touched by the scene. It was unusual, she thought, to see a mere child show such calm dignity and forgiveness under persecution. Presently she called the child and questioned her. "How can you be so patient with Sallie, my dear?"

"Oh," was the laughing reply, "I guess it's because I love Sallie so much. You see, Sallie's a dear girl," excusingly, "but she's got a quick temper, and —Sallie forgets herself sometimes. Mamma said if Sallie should do any angry thing to me, and I should do angry things to her, we'd have a dreadful time, and I think we would. Mamma said I should learn to give the 'soft answer,' and I am trying to."

The lady took her in her arms and kissed her. "My little dear," she said fondly and earnestly, "I think you have already learned the lesson."

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Selected.

A Clever Tailor Bird.

Did you know that there was a little bird so clever that he could sew; could make a bag?

Yes, it is true. He is a native of India, and he bores tiny holes with his bill in the edges of a leaf and then sews it up with shreds of fiber, which he strips from the trees or leaves.

If you were to sew up a leaf, you would find that you had made a "sweety poke," shaped just like the pretty ones you see on the Christmas tree filled with candy.

Well, the clever tailor bird makes a bag out of a leaf, or sometimes two if they are small ones, then fills it with soft scraps to make it warm, and that is his nest.

The little tailors like it very much, and look very cunning peering out of such a funny home.—Jean McIntyre.

The Sweetest Things of Earth.

What are the sweetest things on earth?
A fragrant rose that hides no thorn;
Riches of gold untouched by scorn;
Lips that can praise a rivals' worth,
A happy little child asleep;
Eyes that can smile, though they may weep;
A brother's cheer, a father's praise;
The minstrelsy of summer days.
A heart where anger never burns;
A gift that looks for no returns;
Wrong's overthrow; pain's swift release;
Dark footsteps guided into peace.
The light of love in lover's eyes;
Age that is young as well as wise;
A mother's kiss, a baby's mirth—
These are the sweetest things of earth.

A Trustworthy Boy.

"You will be careful of it? There is a cheque inside," said Robert's mother.

"I'll take it right to the postoffice and mail it before I do the other errands," was the reply as he went his way.

Aunt Mary, on a visit, shook her head dubiously and said, "I wouldn't trust the best boy living with such a letter."

"Perhaps you would if you had already trusted him many times and found him trustworthy every single time," said the mother with a smile serene and thankful as she thought of her trusty boy.—Exchange.

Martha's Quarter and What It Bought.

Martha had earned a quarter of a dollar all by herself. One afternoon she received ten cents for taking care of little Dorothy Williams while her mother went to the dentist's. Another afternoon she received ten cents because she stayed in from play to wait on her mother, who had a bad headache. Then the lady who lived next door gave her five cents for running to the postoffice with two important letters. Now she was wondering how she would spend the twenty-five cents, which was the very first money that she had ever earned.

"May I go to the toy store on the corner and buy something I want for twenty-five cents?" she asked her mother.

When her mother said yes she gayly went hippity-hop to the corner shop to buy—well, she did not know what. She spent a great deal of time looking at toys for a dollar, toys for fifty cents and finally toys for twenty-five cents, for of course twenty-five cents was all she had. At last she found exactly what she wanted. It was a box of toy furniture to be cut out and made from sheets of cardboard. There was a rose-wood piano, a davenport, a library table and chairs for the living-room, a side-board, a table and chairs for the dining room, and the dearest little gas stove and table and sink for the kitchen. There were also dressing tables and beds for the two bedrooms. Martha's paper dolls would fit the furniture beautifully.

She told the smiling clerk that she would take the box of furniture, and then she suddenly remembered that she had not brought her twenty-five cents. So home she went to get it. Her mother changed her two dimes and her nickel into a shining quarter of a dollar and told her to hang on to it tight.

She had almost reached the store when she stumbled. Out flew both hands and down went the quarter into the street. It rolled along and rolled along until it came to an iron grating in the sidewalk and there it fell through.

"Oh, there goes my toy furniture!" wailed Martha right out loud.

"Where?" asked a big boy who happened to be standing near her.

"Down that grating," said Martha mournfully.

The boy bent over and looked down. "I don't see any toy furniture down there," he said.

"It isn't there because I have not bought it yet," replied Martha.

"But you said it was down there," said the boy.

"My quarter to buy it with is. Oh, I can see it," she cried.

The boy took hold of the grating lifted it, jumped down and brought up Martha's quarter. She thanked him with a beaming smile and tripped along to the toy store. She reached the candy shop that was next door to the toy shop and then she stopped again. A wee bit of a girl stood there crying.

"Now, what is the matter?" asked Martha, sympathetically.

"I had an ice cream cone and the top of it slipped right off," said the child.

Martha looked, and sure enough! The little girl was holding an empty cone in her hand, and the ball of ice cream was on the sidewalk, slowly melting and running into the gutter.

"Haven't you any more money?" asked Martha.

The little girl shook her head.

"Then come with me," said Martha with a sigh. She took her into the shop, passed over her quarter and received two dimes in change. The little girl smiled happily through her tears when she held another ice cream cone in her hands.

Martha entered the toy store and stood long before the toy furniture. "Would you like to buy a box of it?" asked the clerk.

Martha slowly opened her hand. "I had twenty-five cents," she said, "but I have only twenty cents left. I—had to spend five cents for something else."

A woman who had been buying toy clothespins looked at Martha. "Aren't you the girl that just bought an ice cream cone for the child who was crying?" she asked.

Martha nodded. "She dropped hers in the dirt," she said.

The clerk looked over all the boxes of toy furniture. "Here is one that costs only twenty cents," she said, "because the box is broken a little. Would you like it?"

Would Martha like it? Her eyes shone. A broken box would not hurt the toy furniture in the least. She ran home with it clasped tight in her hands.

"Did you get what you wanted?" asked her mother.

"Yes, I did," answered Martha, running for her scissors, "but I almost didn't."

And before Martha went to bed that night the bedroom furniture was all done and four paper dolls slept soundly in their little beds.—Youth's Companion.

A Boy's Prayer.

I pray, whatever wrong I do,
I'll never say what is not true;
Be willing at my task each day,
And always honest in my play.

Make me unselfish with my joys,
And generous to the other boys;
And kind and helpful to the old,
And prompt to do what I am told.

Bless every one I love, and teach
Me how to help and comfort each;
Give me the strength right living brings,
And make me good in little things.

If I Were a Boy Again.

After the death of a great college president somebody found the following among his papers:

"If I were a boy again I would try to find out from good books how good men lived.

"If I were a boy again I would study the Bible even more than I did. I would make it a mental companion. The Bible is a necessity for every boy.

"If I were a boy again I would more and more cultivate the company of those older whose graces of person and mind would help me on in my good work. I would always seek good company.

"If I were a boy again I would study the life and character of Our Saviour, persistently, that I might become more and more like unto Him."

This man was a great and good man and if he felt that he would do certain things if he were a boy again. Certainly the boys of today will do well to think about these things.

"Pronounce It."

Any number can play this game. Some one acting as leader calls out slowly and distinctly the letters, in inverse order, of any word—e-m-a-g, for instance. The players, without pencil and paper or any other aid, must mentally put the letters in proper order and as soon as possible pronounce the word, in this case, of course, "game." The first to pronounce the word then becomes the leader and calls out the next word. To increase interest some one may be appointed to keep score, the player successfully pronouncing the greatest number of words being acclaimed winner.

Another good way to play the game is to divide the contestants into two "sides." The leader spells out a word backward and the side that pronounces it first scores a point besides winning a player from the other side. The original leader may continue in that capacity or the player on either side who first pronounces a word may become leader and pronounce the next, and so on.—Lutheran Herald.

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-it-Off.

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-it-Off

They had to go a mile.

"I'll rest," said one, "now I've begun."
Said one, "I'll wait a while."

Resting and waiting, they planned their trip,

And lo! at set of sun,

They rubbed their eyes in great surprise,
For neither mile was done.

And I heard the old clock on the shelf

Set up a sorry chime:

The wee hand told the seconds,
And the long hand told the minutes,
And the short hand told the hours,
And they all told Father Time.

Hate-to-Hurry and Put-it-Off,

You didn't mean to shirk,

You just went slow where you had to go,
You just delayed your work.

But he who rests by the busy road,

And he who hates to start—

They take poor place in any race,
And play a sorry part.

So next time let the old clock tick

A merry, cheery rhyme:

When the wee hand tells the seconds,
And the long hand tells the minutes,
And the short hand tells the hours,
And they all tell Father Time!

—Nancy Byrd-Turner.

A Guileless Child.

The late Bishop of Norwich, says the Father, was walking one day in a quiet street when he heard the piping voice of a little girl saying, "Please, sir, would you mind opening this gate for me?"

He at once went to her assistance and held back the gate while she went in, but, noticing on closer inspection that she was older than he had at first thought, he asked her pleasantly why she herself had not opened the gate.

"Well, you see, sir," she said with a smile, "the paint is wet, and I should have got it all on my hands."

A hasty examination of his own hands convinced the bishop of the truth of her statement.

The penalty of neglect has always to be paid. The evasion of a difficulty by the Church means the uprising of a heresy. If the Church of Christ through cowardice, or a safety first policy, or simply inertia, is content to leave some part of its inherited truth unexpressed, others are certain to over-express it. The penalty of neglect is—exaggeration. Those who disturb the balance of their faith on the one side must expect others to disturb it on the other. The historic heresies were all of them visitations upon the church, when it loved ease more than truth, or when it lost some secret from its treasury.—Christian Century.

Waiting upon God will give thee ample strength to keep pace with the swiftest and most exacting circumstances, waiting upon God will give thee power to go slowly on a tedious road, because when thou art walking the bleak, cold way, thou shalt walk it in the wonderful companionship of God.—J. H. Jowett.

Eternal rest grant unto her, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon her.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE WOMAN'S CLUB OF PETERSBURG.

Whereas MRS. E. C. VENABLE, who recently passed away in Baltimore, was one of the two original founders of the Woman's Club of Petersburg and for many years the sole hostess of the Club; and

Whereas the long and useful life of the Club has been largely due to the impress and influence of her strong and noble character and her sincere love of literature and her interest in all that makes for true womanhood; Therefore be it

Resolved (1) That the death of Mrs. Venable brings to each and all of us a sense of personal loss and also brings back to us the bright memory of our beloved leader through many years, who combined in herself the grace and courtesy of distinctive womanhood and the strong qualities of mind and character that she derived from a distinguished ancestry and that made her easily the leader and the inspiration of this group of women.

(2) That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and that a copy be sent to her family, with the assurance of our tender sympathy and of our love and reverence of the memory of one who has left to us so precious a legacy of generous courtesy and high thought.

MRS. CORNELIA CAROLINE NELSON.

Entered into Eternal Life on Sunday, November 18th, at 10:30 P. M., in Richmond, Virginia, MRS. CORNELIA CAROLINE NELSON, daughter of Dabney Cosby and Margaret A. Curd. Born at "Woodside," Halifax County, Virginia, June 16, 1847, she was educated at St. Mary's, Raleigh, North Carolina, and in early womanhood was united in marriage to Captain Jefferson D. Van Benthuyssen, C. S. A., of New Orleans, Louisiana, who died in 1872. Some years later she married Captain Frank W. Nelson, C. S. A., who survives her, with four children of their marriage, Frank W., Jr., of Colorado, John G., of Newport News, Virginia, Mrs. N. D. Ivey, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. George Campbell, of Dumbarton, Virginia, and three grandchildren. She is also survived by one daughter of her first marriage, Mrs. Murray M. McGuire, of Richmond, Virginia, and one granddaughter of that marriage, Cornelia Van B. Harris.

Mrs. Nelson was a woman of unusual strength of character, loyal and faithful in every relation of life; ever ready with her sympathy and means to help when called upon or when help was needed, she showed her loyalty to Him in whom she believed by unswerving devotion and unfaltering service. Attractive in person, with warm sympathies, and deep attachments, she made many friends wherever her lot was cast. Her influence was always for the highest and best; a ready friend and helper, and a staunch Churchwoman, she will be missed in her community and the little church of her love—Emmanuel, Henrico County, Va.

And her work, is it finished? Nay: "Lay it aside, say not her work is done; No deed of love or goodness ever dies—But in the lives of others multiplies; Say it is just begun!"

With every faculty unimpaired, knowing and loving her dear ones, she gently breathed her life out and fell asleep like a child. Those who were privileged to look on her beautiful face at the last can never forget the ineffable, the heavenly peace resting there; nor can they doubt she had indeed met her "Pilot, face to face," and received the glad words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!" And so "We shall find once more, beyond earth's sorrows,

Beyond these skies,
In the fair city of the sure foundations,
Those heavenly eyes!

With the same welcome shining through their sweetness

That met us here,
Eyes from whose beauty God has banished weeping

And wiped away the tear."

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

MRS. EMMA CATHERINE REID.

On the early afternoon of Monday, December the 3d, 1923, there passed peacefully away from earth to the paradise of God, EMMA CATHERINE REID of Alexandria, Va., in the 86th year of her age. She was the relict of the late gallant Lieutenant Colonel Legh Wilber Reid, C. S. A., a gentleman of high Christian character, honored and beloved by all who knew him.

Mrs. Reid is survived by her sister, Miss Annie Jackson, of Baltimore, Md., a daughter, Mrs. Emmett C. Dunn, of Alexandria, Va., and two sons, Professor Legh W. Reid, of Haverford College, near Philadelphia, and Commander James H. Reid, U. S. N., retired, of Crozet, Va., also by four grandchildren.

Just one year before her death Mrs. Reid fell and broke her hip, an accident so common to persons in advanced life, which greatly restricted her activities, compelling her to remain within the bounds of her room for the larger portion of her time. But her spirit, with its unconquerable energy, still sustained her interest in her work, so that she was able to keep in constant touch, as president of the Board of Lady Managers, with the Alexandria Hospital, to which her heart was devoted in untiring service until almost the very end of her life. For on Thursday, November the 30th, being Thanksgiving Day, called Donation Day at the Hospital, she was able to be rolled up there in her chair and enjoyed the pleasure, as was her wont in the years past, of receiving the gifts and contributions which were brought in company with other members of the Board, and meeting on this occasion a number of her friends who rejoiced to see her again, as it happened in God's order for the last time on earth.

Mrs. Reid was born on the 10th of April, 1838, in the historic town of Fredericksburg, Va., her father being William A. Jackson, Lieutenant-Colonel, C. S. A., son of William and Elizabeth Minor Jackson, both of Fredericksburg. Her mother was Mary Cassandra Riely, daughter of James and Cassandra Chappleear Riely, of Winchester. Thus she was of old Virginia descent on both sides.

In her latter years Mrs. Reid published an interesting pamphlet of her life and lineage for her own family, but honored a few of her closer friends with copies of it. This gives a graphic account of her experiences during the War between the States. She was brought up in her girlhood and the earlier years of her womanhood in the charming relationships and refinements of the old days of Virginia, but these were now about to pass into more stirring times in which she bore her part.

She met her future husband just before the outbreak of the War in what is now West Virginia. Her father had settled in Charleston and Mr. Reid was engaged in the practice of his profession near that place. War was now inevitable and her father and two brothers, as well as Mr. Reid, immediately joined the Confederate Army and as Mr. Reid was a graduate of the Virginia Military Institute he at once received a commission. When the Confederate Army retired from Western Virginia Mrs. Jackson and her daughters left Charleston, Miss Emma riding on horseback with the army to Pulaski County, a distance of 300 miles, while her mother and sisters traveled by carriage, and from this place they came to Lynchburg. When serving with General Early in the Valley Campaign Colonel Reid suffered the loss of a leg on the 9th of October, 1864, and was brought to Lynchburg, where his parents were then living. There he remained until the end of the War, having attained his reward of sacrifice and glory with many others in defence of those principles for which they would willingly have laid down their lives, as thousands of their compatriots had done. On the morning of the 10th of April, 1865, Colonel Reid and Miss Jackson heard of General Lee's surrender and accordingly hastened to obtain a marriage license so as to avoid taking the oath of allegiance to the United States and were at once married by the Rev. Dr. Kinkle, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Lynchburg. This marriage is of interest, as it was certainly one of the last, if not the very last, solemnized under a license issued by the authority of the Confederate Government in Virginia.

Colonel and Mrs. Reid in due time made

Alexandria their home, where they remained all the days of their respective lives. They soon took an honored place in that time of new beginnings when all, young and old, were fellow laborers together in upbuilding the life and seeking the welfare of the old city after its long period of military occupation. They became communicants of St. Paul's Church under the ministry of its beloved rector, Dr. Norton, whose consecrated life and work remain as a cherished possession in that congregation.

Mrs. Reid was a lady of earnest Christian character in all the relations of her life, of marked ability, strength of purpose and recognized leadership, yet possessed of those graces of true womanhood, which won the love and loyal devotion of her many friends and fellow-laborers in the service of Christ and humanity. Yet through it all, as a faithful, loving wife and mother her home was the center of her heart's affection and life. Her motto surely was "Whatever thy hand"—and we would add thy mind—"findeth to do, do it with thy might," and these inspiring words, come down from the ancient Scriptures, enabled her to accomplish all she did. She took a leading part in the work of her beloved Church, and was an efficient member of the Woman's Missionary Society, and its president for some years. Another institution of Alexandria, the Anne Lee Memorial Home, received much of her fostering care and to it she donated the present attractive porch, designed by her son-in-law, who is well known for his architectural gifts. She was a devoted member of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and, as president of the 17th Virginia Regiment Chapter, was deeply interested in the commemoration of the cause in the justice of which her faith had never wavered. We have already referred to Mrs. Reid's untiring service for the Alexandria Hospital as a member of the Board of Lady Managers and its President for a number of years. To this institution she gave of her best, as we can truly say, in faith and prayer and service, relying upon the blessing of God which has been abundantly poured out upon it.

Her work on earth is done and she has entered into the joy of her Lord. As her many friends and her fellow-workers, men and women connected with the Hospital met together in the church of her love for the last service over all that was mortal of her, how appropriate seemed Keble's paraphrase of the closing verse of the lesson:

Then cheerly to your work again
With hearts new braced and set,
To run untired love's blessed race
As meet for those who face to face
Over the grave their Lord have met.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

Archdeacon B. M. Spurr, of Glendale, completed the thirtieth year of his institutional work in the Diocese of West Virginia on December 3. The Archdeacon has accomplished unusual results in his ministration to prisoners, in his management of the Church Hospital, in raising funds, and in promoting the work of social service in the Diocese. His many friends throughout the church are extending to him their congratulations.

Robert E. Lee Service.

Sunday afternoon, January 20, St. Andrew's Church, Canton, observed the birthday of General Robert E. Lee by special services. An orchestra played the music and a vested choir of thirty-five voices rendered the old hymns, among them General Lee's favorite, "How Firm a Foundation." The rector, the Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, preached on "Robert E. Lee, a Study in Spiritual Values." Professor Robert L. Madison, of Cullowhee State Normal School, spoke on "General Lee As I Knew Him," and Mrs. James M. Gudger, Jr., of Asheville, gave a talk on "The Dixie Highway," and presented to the church a picture of Lee on "Traveler," and also a handsome silk Confederate Flag. The church, adorned with Confederate flags, was crowded with delegations of United Daughters of the Confederacy and patriotic societies. The Mayor of Asheville gave a "word of greeting" and the city officials and many generals and army officers were in attendance.

The many Christian services at this Church were very beautiful, largely attended and created much interest. Epiphany was observed with a special "Service of Lights."

The Rev. Wm. R. Savage, although on the pension list, offered his services to the Bishop "free of charge," and has been placed in charge of the little church at Glendale Springs, where he is residing at the Mission House.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. K. Lloyd, D. C. L., formerly army chaplain at Paris, France, and later in New Mexico, is now stationed at Carlisle Barracks, Carlisle, Pa.

The Rev. Charles F. Odell, late of New York, has become Chaplain of the Penitentiary of Western Pennsylvania, located in Pittsburgh. He has had twenty-one years experience in prison work.

The Rev. Mr. King, a Canadian clergyman, has accepted a call to St. Johns Church, Crisfield, and St. Paul's, Marion, Diocese of Easton, and will occupy the rectory at Crisfield, Md., during the latter part of January.

The Rev. A. R. McKinstry, who has for the past three years been rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Cleveland, Ohio, has been elected Corresponding Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council, and brings to his new post a successful parish experience and a thorough working knowledge of the Nation-Wide Campaign. He will share the responsibilities of the office administration and will also be available for field engagements from time to time.

Upon the completion and dedication of the new church which the parish has built under his leadership, Mr. McKinstry will assume his new duties, which will be about February 1.

The Rev. Messrs. W. R. Noe, Executive Secretary, and Theodore Partrick, Jr., a member of the Executive Council, represented the Diocese of East Carolina, at a conference of the Field Department of the National Council, in Atlanta, Ga., on January 9 and 10.

The Rev. Jerome Harris, curate of St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., entered upon his work as curate of Christ Church, New Haven, Conn., on January 1.

The Rev. R. B. Drane and Mr. C. C. Chadbourn, representing the Diocese of East Carolina, attended a meeting in Raleigh, N. C., on January 7, called to consider the erection of a new building at St. Augustine's School, of that city.

The Rev. Lewis H. Huber, of St. James' Church, Bedford, Pa., who accepted a call to become rector of St. Luke's Church, Westville, N. J., is now in residence at the Rectory, Third and Highland Ave.

The Rev. Alexander Miller, rector of St. Paul's, Wilmington, was appointed by Bishop Darst as a representative of East Carolina at a meeting recently held in Western North Carolina to discuss the purchase of grounds and the establishment of a Southern Assembly.

ORDINATIONS.

In Grace Church, Memphis, Tenn., on the Fourth Sunday in Advent, December 23, 1923, Messrs. Lyle G. Kilvington and Stanley Young were ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee. Mr. Kilvington was presented by the Rev. Charles T. Wright, rector of Grace Church, and Mr. Young by the Ven. Benjamin F. Root, Archdeacon of West Tennessee. Bishop Maxon preached the sermon and Mr. Kilvington read the Gospel.

The Rev. Mr. Kilvington is from Grace Church, and the Rev. Mr. Young is from St. Mary's Cathedral Parish, and they will assist in the services in their respective parishes, and also in the missionary work of the Convocation under the Archdeacon.

In Emmanuel Church, Memphis, Tenn., on Saturday, December 22, 1923, Bishop Maxon ordained to the priesthood the Rev. George Allen Stams, the first native Tennessean of the Negro race to enter holy orders in this Diocese. Bishop Demby presented the candidate, and said the Litany; and the Rev. Arthur Howard Noll, LL. D., Secretary of the Diocese, preached the sermon. Bishop Demby and all the priests present joined in the Imposition of Hands.

The Rev. Mr. Stams will continue for the present as priest in charge of St. Paul's mission at Mason, where he spent his diaconate.

In Grace Church, Providence, R. I., on St. Thomas' Day, December 21, 1923, the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. James deWolf Perry, D. D., ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Arthur G. W. Pfaffko, in charge of the Missions at Brookhaven, Long Island, and the Rev. Irving A. Evans, in charge of St. Thomas' Church, Greenville, and Calvary Church, Pascoag.

Both gentleman had been brought up in St. Peter's Church, Manton, and had been ordained deacons there within the year past, and it was most appropriate that the rector of that parish, the Rev. Alva E. Carpenter, should preach the sermon and present them to the Bishop for ordination. Twenty or more of the clergy, vested, served as a choir for the occasion. Others of the clergy were in the large congregation present.

On Sunday, December 23, the Rt. Rev. John Chamberlain, Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. T. Winfield Rochelle in St. Paul's Cathedral, Erie. The candidate was presented by the Very Rev. Francis B. Blodgett, Dean of the Cathedral, who also preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Rochelle, who has been serving on the Cathedral staff, will continue in that work.

Oh the depth of meaning in that word "Saved!" Saved from the guilt of sin, saved from the love of sin, saved from the power of sin, and one day, when He comes, we shall be saved from the presence of sin!

Blessed are they who have the gift of making friends for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but above all, the power of going out of one's self, and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another.—Thomas Hughes.

A man's faith is what he lives by. The opposite of faith is not doubt or denial. It is in moods like this: bitterness is the opposite of faith, impatience is the opposite of faith, censoriousness is the opposite of faith, suspicion is the black opposite of faith.

The faith that God can undertake for us is one of the most consoling and cheering thoughts; but it is more than a thought, it is a power; it makes all things possible. Few enjoy the mighty privilege; but Paul did; hear his words, "I can do all things through Him which strengtheneth me." Some of us sorely need Paul's faith. Many of us need to remember Isaiah's cry in time of trouble, "O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me."—V. G. Burns.

I have played the rover,
Dreaming as I went;
Laughed and loved and neighbored,
Wept and suffered pain,
With the throng I've labored,
With them shared the rain;
But for all the trouble,
And for every tear,
Life has paid me double
In fellowship and cheer.

The Lord is on the side of those who do not return evil for evil.

A better thing than being a giant is not to be afraid of one.—Ex.

The man who has begun to live more seriously within, begins to live more simply without.—Phillips Brooks.

No man has a right to set up for himself, or for others, a standard any lower than Jesus taught His Disciples to pray for.—Ex.

There are two spirits of prayer: one that prays to get what it wants; the other to know what God wants it to get.—Selected.

Religion does not tell us to give things up, but rather gives us something so much better that they give themselves up.

"We used to regard the foreign missionary as trying to save brands from the burning. Now we can see he is also putting out the conflagration."—Shailer Mathews.

Thanksgiving had a large place in Jesus' prayers. He gave thanks to the Father not only for granted requests and for wants supplied, but for God's ordering of all things.—Ex.

Open our eyes, that we may see

And know the workings of Thy plan,

History is full of the wrecks of unrealized utopias. All have omitted human regeneration. To be the center of the universe is misery; to have God as the center is happiness.—E. S. Woods.

Surely the work must be done," we think, "though it does crowd and hurry our prayer time some." "No," the Master's practice says with intense emphasis. Not work first, and prayer to bless it. But the first place given to prayer, and then the service growing out of such prayer will be charged with unmeasured power.—S. D. Gordon.

Facing a great crisis men turn instinctively to a power without themselves, desiring help against the hour of need. When the crisis is past, they lean once more contentedly upon their own strength and discernment. Jesus, however, followed the great events of His life by prayer.—Robert E. Speer.

No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I have come into the world to do; he may do a higher work, a greater work, but he cannot do my work. I cannot hand my work over to him, any more than I can hand over my responsibilities or my gifts.—John Ruskin.

Spend your time in nothing which you know must be repented of; in nothing on which you might not pray for the blessing of God; in nothing which you could not review with a quiet conscience on your dying bed; in nothing which you might not safely and properly be found doing if death should surprise you in the act.—Baxter.

WHY BE AFRAID?

We are thinking today as we write these words, of all the wide family of the Southern Churchman readers. We are trying to visualize them and to wonder what they, as individual Christians, think concerning all the discussion which inevitably has been reflected in the Church papers of late. The bond between a paper so long established as the Southern Churchman, and its readers, is a very sacred one. Men and women will scan this page who have been familiar with the Southern Churchman all their lives. It came to their homes long ago when they were children; its stories and its religious messages were read to them by the voices of their fathers and mothers in years long past. They have been accustomed to think of the Southern Churchman as standing for the sweet, strong faith which they inherited from an earlier generation. They love the old forms of religion, the old phrases and the old words, and because the Southern Churchman is a part of their religious heritage, they want the paper to echo the old phrases, too.

Then among our readers there is another group. There are young men in the seminaries looking for an interpretation of Christianity which shall meet the difficulties of our world today. There are students in colleges perplexed by many questions and seeking to have their questions answered in forms that will fit into the vocabulary of their need. There are young ministers, and thoughtful laymen, who realize that we live in a different world from our fathers, and that we must somehow express the old, unchanging religion in a way that shall satisfy the peculiar difficulties incident to this age.

If the Southern Churchman, therefore, is to reach all its readers and bring to them all a message, that message must be a wide one. It ought not to leave out any element which is precious to any group. It must never touch with anything but reverence the sensitive religious instincts of the older generation, nor yet must it fail to go forward with living approach, to help, if it may, the restlessness and disquietude of the new. Because it must bear in mind not one type of reader only, but very different types, it cannot say that, and only that, which will exactly square with the preference of one as against the other. But it must try to proclaim Christ in all His fullness, so that if its message should ever be faulted at all, it should be faulted in the respect that it is wider and more inclusive than any one particular preference, in order that it may embrace whatever is Christian in the desires of all.

One of the dangers against which we need to guard is a tendency to think of people according to labels, and not according to their very human and very distinctive realities. The impatient teacher of some new idea calls his opponent a "reactionary," and to that opponent of whom he may know little, he forthwith attaches all the conceptions of stupidity and stubbornness which it pleases him to mean by that term. The conservative is thrown into a panic by the man with a new suggestion, and promptly brands him as a "radical" and henceforth has no slightest perception of the other man as he is, but thinks of him as a sort of dangerous anarchist and destroyer of religion which any one who is labeled as a "radical" is supposed to represent. In the feverish atmosphere of religious controversy, people who in most things would think with clearness and discrimination, do not think at all. They simply feel, very hotly and intemperately and break out into instinctive reactions, this way and that. They read newspaper headlines which all their calmer judgment would teach them to distrust; they pick up some distorted rumor, or the twisted and unfair report of some alleged utterance; and allow themselves thus to be made the sport of sensation-mongers who are not at all averse to destroying the peace of the Church.

Another danger is that in our concern about religion we forget what religion rests on. We grow so anxious to maintain our side in a debate and assume so vehemently that God's cause will collapse if we cannot drive home our own particular argument defending it, that we lose, meanwhile, our faith in God Himself. The realities of religion are stronger and more permanent than any little clamor that rages round them. What we all must do today is to lift the great verities up above discussion, and to know that there are certain things which at all times are equally plain. If, in a time of controversy, Christian men and women can keep sweet-tempered and confident, and go about their business under the guidance of the spirit of Jesus, they will reveal the absolute sufficiency of their blessed Lord in a way that no arguments can ever detract from, and very few arguments can increase.

Why then should any of us be afraid? The so-called "radical" influences in the Church cannot take away the mighty facts of God in Jesus Christ. "What dost thou chiefly learn in these articles of thy belief," the catechism asks us, and the beautiful reply comes: "First, I learn to believe in God the Father Who hath made me and all the world; second, in God the Son Who hath redeemed me and all mankind; thirdly, in the Holy Ghost Who sanctified me and all the people of God." Like mountain peaks above the fog in the valley, these mighty certainties rise unchallenged and invincible. No lover of old things, no man or woman clinging to the beautiful simple faith of a generation that has gone before, need have one moment's uneasiness that faith in these is for an instant shaken.

On the other hand, why should any whose spirit is conservative be distrustful of the questionings through which young minds of the present generation may need to pass?

It is true that sometimes in this questioning there is a flippant note,—and for our part we should rather have the spirit of some humble old disciple who with little learning from books maintains the simplicity of a childlike faith, than to have the vaunt of the proudest intellect which proves itself a fool because it has no reverence. But much in the questioning of today is the earnest hunger of living hearts for a fuller faith. Why can we not trust

God to answer it, even if sometimes it be in terms that men and women brought up under different conditions would not choose, and do not need to choose, for themselves? God's Holy Spirit is greater than our limitations. It will not suffer any true faith to be set at naught, nor any real desire to go unfed if only in humility and charity the Church will let the Spirit speak.

Why then should any of us be afraid?

GOOD COUNSEL FROM THE BISHOPS

All good causes have their wise and their unwise spokesmen. Doubtless it was disappointing to many Church people to read in the newspapers a few days ago that Bishop Paul Matthews of New Jersey said (if indeed he really said it and the newspapers did not make it for him) that the Church is not big enough for himself and Bishop Lawrence at the same time. Such a statement as that would be the antithesis of the truly catholic spirit. It would show the sort of unhappy prejudice which so often has cut the Church into warring sects instead of keeping it as the living body of Christ within which many different members might function in the unity of its Head.

But even if any such thing as the newspapers proclaim was really said, it is not typical, but rather the exception to a very much finer type of message which has been coming from the Bishops of late. This is the time of year when many of the diocesan conventions and some of the provincial synods meet. The Southern Churchman mail, therefore, has contained many addresses made by the Bishops at these gatherings, and repeatedly we have been impressed at the fine tone of generous and understanding fellowship which some of the Bishops, and among them some of the ablest and best known of all, are voicing. We shall publish in the Southern Churchman shortly, as soon as space permits, two installments of a long message from Bishop Brent, under the title "The Spiritual Value of the Virgin Birth." He sets forth very ably and eloquently the value of the traditional belief, but not less striking than his defense of the doctrine is his recognition of the unbroken religious unity which can bind together men of different minds.

"These are days, then, as I view it," the Bishop said, "in which we must strive to bear testimony to our belief in Christ in terms of affirmative and dynamic faith and not of partisan fever and mutual recriminations. Only so shall we be able to peer into the great depths of truth—not through a storm-lashed and murky sea, but through a calm surface which at once reflects in its bosom the glory of the heavens and forms a sunlit approach to the splendors of the ocean's floor. There is no haste in this matter: The Church which of old could bear, without breaking, the pantheism of a St. Francis, the modernism of an Aquinas, and the nominalism of an Abelard, can afford to be patient, at a moment of singular unrest, with the antinomies or seeming antinomies of the day. A Church pulled to bits is of as little use or beauty as a stone pile. If we must needs quarrel let our differences continue to be family quarrels, which are at once the best and the worst there are. At any rate, the inherent unity for which the family stands is a restraining influence in debate, and furnishes a common table for the discussion of varying minds."

At about the same time at which we received the manuscript from Bishop Brent, we received from a diocese widely removed from that in which Bishop Brent spoke, the message of another Bishop. In South Florida Bishop Cameron Mann devoted a large part of his convention address to this same matter concerning the creeds to which we have just referred. He also marshals the reasons for the traditional belief, and then he goes on to say:

"If a man avouches his acceptance of the Fact consummated in the Virgin Birth, if he avouches his access to God through Jesus Christ, if he avouches his vision of Divine Love on the Cross and beyond the Tomb, if he avouches his determination to inculcate the Lord's Prayer, and the Sermon on the Mount, and the 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature',—why then, I think we may say to him, 'Stay and do this; teach that positive Christianity you hold so dear; you need dwell no longer on your negatives; you have explained your position; you are no hypocrite; for you and us there is a vast message of truth to deliver; may God help us both to be faithful in our service.'

"Ah, but,' somebody may protest, 'how about the Church's witness to the whole truth, the entire Gospel with its Christmas Story! Is that to be tossed aside from many congregations?'

"Answer not at all. The Church's teaching will continue from the lecturn and the altar, even though some syllables are not heard from the pulpit. There need be little fear about the instruction of a congregation which says every Sunday 'conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary,'—which sings every Sunday 'thou didst humble thyself to be born of a Virgin,'—which prays each Christmas tide to One 'given to take our nature upon him, and as at this time to be born of a pure Virgin,' 'who by the operation of the Holy Ghost was made very man of the substance of the Virgin Mary His Mother'.

"Lex orandi lex credendi, the rule of prayer is the rule of belief.

"But there may be words from the pulpit minimizing and obliterating the Prayer Book phrases! Yes, that is possible; it will sometimes happen.

"And some in the congregation will not accept those phrases! True; but some do not accept them now.

"And I incline to think that one cause of the doubting and dissenting has been the rigid insisting of the orthodox that the Virgin Birth can be forced upon our intellect by proofs, and their assuming that, because logically it comes first, it must come first in our acceptance.

"But this was not the way of the Primitive Church. It did not open its message with the Virgin Birth, but with the Crucifixion and the Resurrection. 'I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received,' says St. Paul, 'how that Christ died for our sins, and that he rose again.'

Later on floated out, from the home where it was remembered and pondered, the beautiful and noble story of the Birth. And the lovers of the Lord, Who died for their sins and rose again for their justification, said joyously one to another, 'So it must have been!'

Once again, therefore, as in the preceding editorial, we would say to troubled spirits,—Why should we be afraid?

WHAT RELIGION MEANS TO ME

By Margaret Prescott Montague

RELIGION means to me the fullest expression of life, the possibility of realizing here and now, in my small way, that existence of awakened spirituality and awareness of God, of which our Lord gave us the supreme example, and in which He besought all mankind to participate. When He said, "I am come that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly," He was offering to all who should believe the opportunity of recreating the personality upon higher levels of the spirit. He proclaimed that we have within us larger capacities than we dream of, that we are, indeed, bigger people than we suppose, and He called upon all to lay hold joyously upon this life more abundant, which it was the good pleasure of the Father to give us. Our spiritual self is temporarily captive to our mundane self; how to release it, and make it imperious master of itself, dedicating its tremendous powers to the service of God and of mankind, Christ set forth in His example and teachings. That the Christian religion exemplifies many other things as well, no one will deny; but it is on this aspect of the life more abundant that I wish to dwell here.

Religion then means to me that I—the real I—am not the commonplace person, clothed in an uninteresting body subject to fatigue and disease, that I appear to be, but rather that I am, together with the rest of the people going to and fro in this world, essentially a spiritual being, who did not first begin to live when my physical life began here, and who will not cease to exist when that physical life ends. It means to me that I—the real I—am truly a dweller in eternity rather than in time, a spirit temporarily encased in matter, who will most certainly continue to exist, after matter has been discarded in that experience, which we call death, but which is more probably fruition, the ripened growth of our life here. Let me digress a moment to state that when I say I expect to live hereafter, I mean exactly that I expect to survive in my own personality, carrying over into the next world the remembrance of my experience in this, and probably recovering there a much larger memory, which was laid aside when my spirit decided to take a plunge into matter, traveling for a span of years in this world of flesh. I believe that the soul after death, not only keeps the personality that was incarnate here, but that it also reunites once more with its much larger self, which self has been veiled from it—though glimpsed occasionally in great moments—during its life in the world. I specify thus definitely my belief in the survival of the personality, because I would not be classed with the people who when they say they expect to live after death, mean that they expect their physical bodies to return to life in roses, or some other natural growth, while their souls will be absorbed into the infinite—whatever they may mean by that. This, to my mind, is no life at all, and is neither spiritually, intellectually nor scientifically, on a par with the belief in the survival of the personality, in spite of the fact that those who entertain it have for some unknown reason an air of superiority, as though their belief were more strong minded than the Christian hope of many mansions awaiting us. Their air of superiority in this matter is as arbitrary and as amusing as the belief that some people entertain that to feel the cold is rather ill-bred, but to suffer from the heat is perfectly good form. Now I like the idea of my body, when I am done with it, going to make roses, or any other green thing upon the face of the earth, but I do not believe that I shall be absorbed into the infinite, my chief reason being that I do not think the infinite wants me. If it did why was so much pains taken to differentiate me, and send me forth with a distinct personality? I trust I shall not shock any one, if I say I can well imagine the infinite saying upon the return of these supine souls who expect to be reabsorbed into it, and so rid themselves of all further responsibility, "What, back again? Where is your individuality? No, you can't snuggle into me, a separate soul you were given, and a separate soul you have got to keep."

But I am amusing myself in by-paths of reflection, and must return to the main road once more, for after all what religion means most vitally is not a vague looking forward to a celestial life after death—although that is a part of the whole—but the realization of the possibility of living the celestial life here and now. Heaven may be our home, as the hymn tells us, but we get no good by dreaming too often of returning to it, but rather by endeavoring vigorously to bring it into the present. The wistful other worldly people with their thoughts continually centered upon heaven, are like children at boarding school who are too homesick to learn their lessons. No, we should give ourselves whole-heartedly to the spiritual life in the present existence, realizing as ardently as our capacity permits, that we are eternal spirits, temporarily encased in matter, working out by our presence here some divine plan, a plan of infinitely more importance than it is permitted for us to know at this time. Our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, as our Lord assured us, and the more we can dwell upon this in our thoughts, and lives, the more we shall be freed of the limitations of the flesh, the more we shall be in harmony with the divine plan, and shall look upon life with fearlessness and joy. It is this enthusiastic realization of the indwelling spirit that makes for a life of vividness and power, so that we may with Browning "Welcome each rebuff that turns earth's smoothness rough," knowing that often out of the roughness comes more spiritual vigor than any amount of smoothness can engender. This power also should make us vigorously antagonistic to all spiritual limitations whether of sin or of sickness. Resignation to wrong conditions is a disloyalty to our divine birthright, a denial of the Holy Spirit within us. A bitter attitude toward misfortune is, of course, worse than useless, but an enthusiastic and hopeful struggle against it is the very life of the spirit. It is God's good pleasure to give us the Kingdom, but even He cannot give it to us if we are too supine to reach out for it. No, we must seek, and knock, and wrestle with the angel until dawn if we are to receive the gift.

So religion means to me a great vitality, and the possibility of realizing here in this world a larger life than we usually dream of. It means also the thrill and excitement of a great adventure, the greatest adventure that existence has to offer, that of manifesting in this material world the life of the spirit. We all come into physical life blindfolded, as it were. We bring with us from the spiritual realms a divine spark, but for most of us this spark is so deeply overlaid by matter that we fail to enter into the realization of its presence. The adventure then is to discover this hidden power, to breathe it into such shining vitality, that from having been submerged in matter it becomes triumphant over it. The flesh then becomes subordinate to the spirit, instead of being its great stupid master. But this triumphant fruition does not come without hard work through self-discipline, faith and prayer, and love wrought out in unselfish service. Nor should we lose sight of the value of meditation. This great spiritual exercise has gone through a period of neglect, but now devoted seekers are coming once again to realize its inestimable worth, and to know that good works alone are not sufficient, but that they must flower forth from an inner life made deep and strong through periods of prayer, of meditation and of silent contemplation. Evelyn Underhill says in her summary of Ruysbroeck's teachings, "The soul, then, turned in the direction of the Infinite, 'having God for its aim,' and with her door opened to the inflowing Divine Life, begins to grow. Her growth is up and out; from that temporal world to which her nature is adapted * * * * to that eternal world to which the 'spark' within her belongs * * * * Is not this adventure enough! To begin here and now 'to grow toward God!'" The mystics of all ages have taught us what a marvelous undertaking it is. They are the great explorers, and the great conquerors. Through unceasing effort and self-discipline, they have conquered flesh and explored the realms of the spirit. Their triumphs were never for themselves alone, but for all mankind, for they grasped a vision out of eternity, and bringing it back, displayed it in time, in their lives, of devoted service, and in their words of inspired truth, so that all the lesser folk of the world might behold it. We smaller ones listen to their good news, with a thrill, for hearing it the spark within us responds, and we seem also "to remember our august abode," and to feel "that haply we know somewhat more than we know."

Besides this sense of adventure, religion also brings serenity. It teaches that we are children of eternity, and need not therefore be too hurried, or too disconcerted by the exigencies of time. "To be carnally-minded is death, to be spiritually minded is life and peace." So to realize that we are truly living in eternity rather than in time, makes for tranquility and fearlessness. The pleasures and comforts of this world are, no doubt, very delightful, but they are not eternal, nor essential to salvation, indeed sometimes they seem to be quite contrary to salvation; therefore if they fail us in any particular, we dwellers in eternity need not be too concerned. The loss of money may be regarded in time as misfortune, whereas in eternity it may be registered as good fortune, for out of it may come some enlargement of the spirit which might never have been achieved had all the temporal existence been padded about with affluence. This sense of dwelling in eternity makes for a happy fearlessness, and flexibility, a readiness to face whatever fortune may offer, and to win out of it some celestial triumph. It makes also for a feeling of leisure, especially valuable to the creative artist, making it possible for him to do his best work without being over anxious for an immediate and popular appreciation. If we are servants of eternity rather than of time, the thing that matters is that our work should be done as sincerely and as beautifully as we can do it, and whether or not the approval of the world is won, either in our own day, or in a future generation, is not the essential thing; the essential thing is that through the artist's devoted effort beauty and sincerity should somewhere, somehow, have been served in the divine scheme.

To sum up, then, religion means to me a fullness of life that nothing else can possibly give; it brings a sense of vitality, of fearless joy, of leisure for sincere work, of adventure, and of zest for whatever fate may offer, and a knowledge as well that this life more abundant is lived in the presence of the Great Companion, Who is the Inspiration of it all, Who understands all our efforts and all our failures as no human entity can ever understand, and in Whom we live and move, and have our being.

ARE THE GERMANS HELPING THEMSELVES

Ernest Lyman Mills, Director, Emergency Appeal of the Federal Council of the Churches for German Relief.

THIS is a fair question and one which must be answered before many large American gifts for feeding German children can be expected. I will answer specifically from observation and from facts ascertained by careful observers.

I recently made a trip through the Ruhr. When I reached Essen one of the first things to catch my eye were copies of a particularly striking poster displayed in conspicuous places. As you looked at it the first sight was shocking; a skeleton with the scythe of death stood out in white and black letters on a red background. Here is what this poster said:

"One nation, one distress. Terrible distress overwhelms the children, weak adolescents, old people! Do not say, 'We cannot help any more'. If not you, who else? The impoverished Government? The overburdened city? Charitable foreign countries alone? No relief is possible except through a money campaign among all who are still spared from bitterest need." Then follows a list of charitable organizations of every conceivable sort, Jews, Catholics, and Protestants all joining in the appeal.

I visited Dr. Fischer, the city physician in Essen. I have never met an American physician in the same position who knew more of the needs of his city or seemed more eager to solve the problem thrust upon him by a mass unemployment and by increasing sick lists in the community. First of all he told me in no uncertain tones of the dangers which this situation caused to the city's health. Dr. Fischer said:

"Health conditions in the town of Essen have grown worse and worse in connection with a progressive rise in prices. The number of ills of all kinds is increasing, so is the death rate in general; in many cases, starvation is the reason for an early death."

"But," I interrupted, "what are you doing to relieve this distress, what is the city doing and what are the rich merchants?" I verified his reply by conversation with other prominent citizens. The previous day the workmen of one of the great mines had donated a day's work of ten hours to the city of Essen's poor relief. They had gone into the mine for a long day's work and had not received one paper mark for themselves, but had dug out one hundred and forty tones of black diamonds for the poor of the city. That coal had been distributed by the city and was the reason why I found many of the houses in the poorer section warm—one room only! "That was the workingmen, Doctor," I said, "but what of the merchants and industrialists?" You will recall that Essen is the headquarters of the great Krupp works, the real heart of the old militaristic Germany. "Are the leaders here helping?" "Yes," he responded and with enthusiasm told me of the splendid cooperation of the merchants, who had given rooms for the municipal feeding stations, fat and foods of all sorts in real generous fashion. The city physician and a district Judge gave us facts and figures showing what had been and was then being done to meet the distress in Essen. Later in the day I talked with one of the Directors of the Krupp works who assured me that the unemployed would not be turned out of the dwellings which were owned by the firm. Then I asked him about the old employees' colonies with their little houses and plots of land for the workers who had, in cooperation with the efforts of the firm, made sure of a comfortable ending of their days under ideal conditions. He said to me, "These colonies, the dwelling for workingmen which you saw and saw to be excellent, all of these social works, were undertaken in the successful days when we made money. The funds were then set aside, but," he added, "those funds have been exhausted and we are now taking money from the business to help support them. Just how long under the present collapse of industry we can continue to do that is a question."

At Essen I had long talks with Superintendent Bekker of the Lutheran Church. Owing to the worthlessness of the mark the parish had been forced to discontinue their children's home and had let it to a business firm as an office building. Their hospital was about two-thirds full; funds had failed and they could not run at full capacity. It struck me that American generosity could not do better than to enable them to reopen that greatly needed Children's Home and to fill their hospital to its limit. One of the nurses said to me, as she walked through an empty, cold, unheated ward, "I've been here thirty-five years and I never saw this ward unoccupied before." Why? Failing funds had failed and they could not run at full capacity. Well-to-do friends are now unable to help. But this church and other churches of Essen were straining every resource to meet the dreadful want which their poster proclaimed threatened their city.

The German cities have practically all put on such campaigns. I have before me a poster from Nuremberg, which, in free translation, reads about as follows: "Fifty-six per cent of Nuremberg's population receive public allowance! Our economic life is in a terrible way this winter. A large part of the Nuremberg population hungers, freezes and goes with ragged clothes. Diseases are overwhelming; especially is the health of our children severely menaced. The poor old people and children without shoes are no longer seen on the streets. They crawl back into their hovels, depressed and helpless. Municipal welfare and organized private charity cannot meet the daily increasing misery. The allowances are insufficient and numerous welfare institutions are facing financial breakdown. Will we see them perish or shall we try the utmost to help them over the winter's distress? Half the population still earns more or less money. We call on them to do all they can. Give real money to buy food; take over the care of a specially needy family whose address the Nuremberg Relief Committee can give; have a hungry child eat at your table. You can learn of the address of such children daily from the Nuremberg Child Relief. Help! All!! Make this plan work." The poster is signed by representatives of commercial industries, banks, peasants, doctors, attorneys, artists, newspapers, Catholic, Protestant and Jewish Churches.

These posters are typical and they show organized, persistent effort on the part of German relief agencies to solve their own problem.

Mr. Gilbert L. MacMaster, after making a careful study to find out what the wealthier Germans are doing for the needy, reports to the American Quakers as follows:

"I have learned, for instance, that the German Government levied a tax on all large fortunes and incomes, the proceeds of which should go toward cheapening bread for the poorer people. This levy must have amounted to considerable because the proceeds are now being used, not only to cheapen the bread, but also to cheapen milk and to carry on child feeding. The Government appropriated five million gold marks of this money to carry on the feeding of 500,000 children a day for five months, so that the present child feeding in Germany is being carried on from a direct levy on the wealthy.

"I understand that one-sixth of the children sent from the city to the country this year were taken care of by the farmers without charge. This means that one-sixth of all these children received a three-months' vacation at the expense of the farmers.

"In order to give the institutions as much assistance as possible, the Government agreed to carry all gifts of food for these institutions freight-free on the railroads. "Freischeine" or free freight tickets are issued to the organizations, or cities supporting these homes. At the annual meeting of the United Committee for Foreign Relief Organizations, both the representatives of the Catholics and the Protestants brought out the fact that they were receiving more support this year from the farmers than in any previous year, and that they were having difficulty in getting enough "Freischeine" for these gifts.

"I find that the Berlin Exchanges signed up for $70,000 one day for child feeding in Berlin. I hear that the same was done in Frankfurt.

"We hear that there are far more than one hundred kitchens (I have been told one hundred and seventy) in Berlin for the needy.

"A business man from Hamburg told me this week that the better situated families in the neighborhood of an old ladies' home there were each inviting one of the inmates twice a week to dinner. A school girl told me that each class in her school had adopted an 'alter Rentner' and had taken it upon themselves to look after this person."

Mr. Wilbur K. Thomas of the American Friends' Committee, in a personal letter to me regarding this whole matter, says:

"In this country some of the German-Americans have supported the work most generously since we began in 1919. In fact, a few of the German-Americans have been our strongest support, such as Mr. Horst, Mr. Thun with Mr. Oberlander and Mr. Janssen of Reading, Mr. J. P. Frenzel, Mr. Valentine Bachman of Indianapolis, Dr. Eitel of Minneapolis, Dr. Otto Schmidt of Chicago, Mr. Heide, and such men as Mr. James Speyer, Mr. Felix Warburg, Mr. Paul Warburg and others of the big German bankers in New York City.

"I have no way of knowing what this would amount to, but am convinced that the German-Americans have been doing more than could be expected of them. When we have been able to put on campaigns in local cities we have had the hearty cooperation of the German-Americans.

"After we officially withdrew from the child feeding in 1922 a strictly German-American committee took charge and raised about $900,000. This came almost entirely from German-Americans. They deserve great credit for putting on a campaign like this."

For my part I think we should recognize that many of the Germans, a very great many, are doing their utmost. Whether all of the industrialists or all of the profiteers are evincing Christian concern is a question which does not weigh with folks anxious to do a humanitarian deed. I think we might well take as our standard a recent statement issued by Mr. Herbert Hoover:

"The breakdown in currency and the rapidly spreading unemployment in Germany is such that hunger and undernourishment are already spreading in Germany among the poorer classes in the large towns and manufacturing districts.

"It is always the children who are ground in the mills of international disputes. I know that many will feel it is a fault of one side or the other, or of some person or another that these things have come to pass amongst the German people. Whoever may be at fault, it is not the people who must go hungry, and honest charity inquires no further than that."

INACCURATE CHURCH HISTORY.

Mr. Editor:

"The World Book," published by W. F. Quarrie & Co., of Chicago, is a juvenile encyclopedia, and is purported to be a mine of knowledge. But in Volume Four, page 2,043, a writer whose name does not appear, vouchsafes to impart the following items of historic misinformation:

"In 597 Pope Gregory, who had been attracted to some Anglo-Saxon Slaves exposed in the market place in Rome and had vowed to carry Christianity to the land from which such beautiful youths came, sent St. Augustine to Britain, and the religion which had centuries before gained a hold in the island, but had been entirely rooted out (black ours), spread rapidly."

Is it possible that the writer of this article has never heard of the Venerable Bede (673-735) and his "Ecclesiastical History"? According to Bede, even Pope Gregory, who sent St. Augustine to Britain, was aware of the existence of a duly organized hierarchy in the British Isles. The Pope's mandate to St. Augustine reads as follows: "Your brotherhood will moreover have subject to you all the Bishops of Britain" (Beda 1. 29). Not only this, but Bede also states that St. Augustine had two conferences with the British Bishops at what was probably Down Ampney, near Crickdale, on the Severn. There he was met by Bishops from Cornwall and Wales. St. Augustine pressed three points of conformity on the British Bishops, namely: the time of keeping Easter, the mode of administering Baptism, and the evangelizing of the Saxons. Bede gives the answer of the British in these words: "We will do none of these things, nor receive you as our Archbishop." There is some evidence to show (Wakeman, p. 9, "History of the Church of England") that there was a Bishop of London as late as 580, and a congregation at Glastonbury in 640 A. D. Even if the hierarchy of the British Church had been compelled to flee before the heathen invader, their position would not be unique in Christian annals. The Roman Church of the present day consecrates "Bishops in partibus infidelium" for sees which formerly existed, but which have been lost to Christendom (Vide Addis & Arnold's "Catholic Dictionary," p. 95). Surely in writing of well-established historical facts, care should be taken not to out-Romanize the Romans.

Another choice bit of misinformation appears in the same work on pages 2,064-2,065, vol. 4:

"EPISCOPAL CHURCH, a religious sect in America, known as the Protestant Episcopal Church, which separated from the Church of England in 1789 and prepared a constitution of its own. The Prayer Book adopted was nearly like that of the English Church, and in belief and organization the sect remained much the same."

The first formal mention of the name "Protestant Episcopal Church" occurs in "A Declaration of certain fundamental Rights and Liberties made at a meeting or convention of the clergy at Annapolis, Maryland, on August 13, 1783, 'Wherefore we, the Clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Maryland (heretofore denominated the Church of England as by Law established).'"

The same declaration states further:

"That as it is the Right, so it will be the Duty, of said Church, when duly organized, constituted, and represented in a Synod or Convention of the different Orders of her Ministry and People, to revise her Liturgy, Forms of Prayer, and Public Worship, in order to adapt the same to the late Revolution, and other local Circumstances of America; which it is humbly conceived may and will be done, without any other or farther departure from the venerable Order and Beautiful Forms of Worship of the Church from whence we sprung, than may be found expedient in the Change of our Situation from a Daughter to a Sister-Church."

It is likely that parents will prefer to furnish their children with a more reliable and unprejudiced reference work.

FREE LENDING LIBRARY.

Mr. Editor:

May I call the attention of your readers, laity as well as clergy, especially the younger clergy and those of limited means, to the advantages of the free lending library of the Sisters of the Holy Nativity, Fond du Lac, Wis. Here are 1,600 volumes of standard Churchly literature, including the library of the late Bishop Grafton, strong in Church History and the English Church, especially, and being added to almost daily, just waiting for readers, who will be at no expense except return postage. A catalogue will be sent to any one for the asking.

THE NEED OF PERSONAL RELIGION.

Mr. Editor:

The average intelligent Christian of today is confused as perhaps not before, by the opposing doctrinal schools of thought now vocal in the Church.

He does not believe that Christianity is dependent upon any material or external proof or authority; or that by subscribing to certain tenets of belief, permits thereafter the neglect of Christian duties.

The average man believes the spirit of Christianity—is to make Christians; that the essential proof of God in Christ, is in his life, to be discerned by the spiritual insight; that the cornerstone of the structure is freedom to interpret and worship God; and that exact knowledge puts faith out of the question, for faith is trusting and believing.

The average Christian is striving to reorganize his belief and make it tenable—to shape a course in the storm of life, without concentrating upon the seemingly vulnerable non-essential points, now dividing the Church, in the belief that the era of forced acceptance of theoretical dogmas and doctrines is past, and that Truth can no longer be identified by Tradition alone, but that it must be found and interpreted by his own spiritual insight and human intelligence, though expressed in an ancient science and an archaic philosophy.

In fact, education has taught the average Christian to discern in the Church disputations—a tendency to focus upon the non-essential, which cannot be helpfully incorporated into his life, and experience.

The average man is seeking in the Church (or if must be out of it) for light in his confusion, for a presentation of the divine message which convinces convicts and transforms to Christian action and in terms which he can understand and translate into his own daily life.

Where shall he find it today?

READ "A CONVERSATION WITH CORNELIA."

Mr. Editor:

I am wondering how many people will read "A Conversation with Cornelia," by Stuart P. Sherman, in the January number of The Atlantic Monthly. Of this I feel sure, that not only parents, but all who are distressed and disgusted with the erotic drama and novel of the present day, where sex is smeared over every scene, should read it.

For a good while, but particularly since the war, there has been a tendency to "take sex relations away from the protection of Church and State and commit them to the whims of individuals"; until we are troubled and perplexed as to what we should say and do. Mr. Sherman has said something which, I feel, contains much more than "a crumb of comfort," I would say at least half a loaf.

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE CREEDS.

Mr. Editor:

The present controversy concerning the Virgin Birth of Our Lord does not necessarily include such topics as the alleged errors of the Bishops, or the excesses of "Catholics" in doctrine and ritual. The "Catholics" may believe too much and violate some of the rubrics, but so far I have not heard of one denying any of the statements in the Creeds.

With the exception of the clauses concerning the Birth of Our Lord, many of the statements in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds could be interpreted in a sense different from the very words without positive denial of the facts which the Creeds are intended to proclaim. But the clauses concerning the Virgin Birth of Christ are unequivocal. I do not see how they can be "interpreted" so as to satisfy the honest scruples of those who deny the fact.

If my point of view is correct, it would seem that subscription to find and recital of the Creeds must be made optional, with the permission of alternate forms, and many radical revisions must be made in the Prayer Book. Are we prepared for this?

If these changes be not made, it is possible that hundreds of really conscientious clergy and laity may leave the Episcopal Church.

COMMON PRAYER.

It is for all of us, this Common Prayer.

Line upon line the workers never turned Aside. Some gave their bodies to be burned
And knew no fear amid that scarlet flare;
They yielded up their lives without despair,
The martyred throng, while, we the crude unlearned,
Pass lightly over things for which they yearned
And sweated blood to save us from the snare.

The Book inviolate, beloved from birth,
Few things exist so innocent of flaw;
Its mellow jubilates breathe of mirth,
It fans the wheat and casts aside the straw,
By faith it gives us back to Mother Earth,
Thus Love is the fulfilling of the law.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

The Young People's Group and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew Suggestions for Cooperation Between the Two Organizations From "St. Andrew's Cross," January, 1924.

A FIELD FOR COOPERATION.

THE rise in many parishes, of young people's organizations (variously called Young People's Fellowship, Service League, Society or Association) brings to the Brotherhood additional opportunities for cooperation in work for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. Particularly does it bring this opportunity to the Advanced Junior section, the section most closely allied to the Fellowship in matter of age and therefore of interest and activities.

With the Young People's Fellowship there is a close community of interest since its objects are in the same general direction as that of the Brotherhood, and since, because of its special field and activities, it is so admirably adapted as a medium through which and with which the Brotherhood can work.

The Special Opportunities in the Fellowship.

The Fellowship is a good medium for bringing older boys and girls together, in various forms of parish life and parish work. It can do a wide work in planning special church services directed to helping the youth of the community. It perhaps can best express and crystalize in words and actions the viewpoints, ideas and ideals of the combined youth of the parish. It can work out and set up standards of life and conduct for youth which are likely to be more binding and more helpful to youth than standards which might be set forth by any group not so thoroughly representative of youth.

Advantages of Cooperation.

In the work of the Fellowship the Brotherhood can cooperate to great mutual advantage. The Brotherhood often needs a "setting" for its work. It frequently needs outlets. It can use the opportunities afforded by the Fellowship as a means of interesting young men whom it is trying to reach, particularly those not yet brought to the Church. It can use the Fellowship as a gathering and holding agency. It can join with the Fellowship in holding young people's services in the church and in various institutions. It can join in advancing the work of the Church School of Missions, and of study groups.

In all these things the Brotherhood's cooperation should be especially helpful. Having specialized for so long a time in personal work with boys and men, it naturally has special possibilities and should be specially effective in such work.

Methods of Cooperation.

The Chapter should not operate as an outside or unrelated body. Its members, or the majority of them, should also be members of the Fellowship, and therefore the Chapter to a great degree would function as an integral part of the Fellowship, cooperating and supporting its work from within, but without assuming any role of direction or authority.

In its particular field, the Chapter should attain to that efficiency and effectiveness which workers in any specialized field naturally develop, and thus provide experience and examples which should be helpful and stimulating in the other fields of work.

The correlation of the activities of the two organizations can most naturally be accomplished in the Fellowship by assigning to the Brotherhood members who are in the Fellowship those sections of work or responsibility which the Brotherhood could naturally best undertake. Such assignments can be made en bloc by the Fellowship and be handled in detail by the Brotherhood members at their Chapter meeting. The Chapter should largely look after the boys' side of the Fellowship's activities.

There is another possible element of effective cooperation on the part of the Brotherhood. The Fellowship reaching both sexes covers a broader field and reaches a greater number than a specialized organization; and where the possibilities are wide and the membership is also wide, the tendency is to follow the line of least resistance and to allow entertainments and social functions to predominate to the gradual submerging of other things. In this connection, the Brotherhood members in the Fellowship can contribute toward maintaining a spiritual level and a balance in the Fellowship's activities, and by these means can lend an added influence toward the permanency of the Fellowship's parish life and toward really productive results.

Mutual Strengthening.

The cooperation of the two organizations should lend added strength to each. It should be the means of arousing an increasing interest in the parish which itself will help to bring out increased and more effective support. More young people will be brought in; the work will progress and grow stronger; and because of the greater numbers from which to draw and because of the increased opportunities for training, the supply of available leaders for both organizations and for others should keep pace with the increased need.

In a Few Words.

The particular field of the Fellowship covers all those activities which directly touch the combined older boy and girl life of the parish, or which utilize the joint service or consideration of older boys and girls, or which are largely of a social or entertainment character.

The particular field of the Brotherhood is logically the personal work of boys with boys, individually and collectively, and with their self-development and self-training along the lines originated by the Advanced Junior Program.

The Brotherhood is particularly gratified at the increased interest in Young People's groups. It welcomes this opportunity for effective cooperation. Brotherhood leaders everywhere are earnestly urged to take advantage of these opportunities to the fullest extent, and to aid in the formation and maintenance of Young People's Organizations, wherever possible.

It is always helpful to suggest lines of cooperation and it never was more timely. The tragedy of the present day is the emphasis upon organization. If the Service Leagues and Fellowships cannot federate the existing groups, confusion will be worse confounded. Their claim to two things ought to give them the privilege and responsibility of federation—the fact that both boys and girls are in their membership, and the inclusiveness of their sphere of activity and service. If competition is to be the order among the organizations for boys and girls in the Church, "split loyalty" is the inevitable result. Regardless of our eagerness to find complementary relationships as between these National and Diocesan groups, there is no question but that they are covering similar territory and addressing themselves to a common need. The very earnest pronouncement quoted above shows the fine spirit of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, but it indicates misapprehension of the central emphasis in the Service Leagues according to the motive of the leaders who have tried to think most deeply as to the proper basis of the Young People's Movement of the future. The suggestion in the last subdivision of this paper, that the Service Leagues are concerned with activities largely of a social and entertainment character, and that the Brotherhood must, as a group, do the personal work of the League, destroys the very character which the Leagues are trying to establish. We have delegated too largely in the past, fundamental Christian responsibilities to specialist Organizations. Personal work is essentially involved in the profession of every normal Christian. It does not belong to any specialist group. That League will fail which does not train every member in "brotherhood" service. Assignments made en bloc to Brotherhood members would seem to destroy the very goal for which the Leagues are striving. Those who know the work of the Junior Brotherhood are grateful for the experience and the loyalty which its members have shown in regard to the central rules of Prayer and Service, but beyond their experience and their example as units in the whole, they should not assume any group responsibility. The great number of our young people are impatient at the over-emphasis of the social side of the Leagues' life. It may be that what is intended

NO NEED TO BE DISCOURAGED.

A little girl was very impatient over having her hair brushed, and her Mother's patience was rapidly reaching its limit.

"Keep still," she finally exclaimed, "you wriggle like a monkey."

"Oh, Mother! that reminds me I have been intending to ask you for some time, do you believe in resolution?" Another child waiting for the final touches to be put to the one in the hands of her mother, exclaimed:

"Oh, Harriet, it isn't resolution, it is revolution!"

So the discussion goes, reaching from the pulpit to the nursery, and including the office, the shop, the study and the parlor.

To some it seems that the little girls are not so far wrong, after all, and that it takes a great deal of "resolution" to face the "revolution" produced by evolution and kindred topics.

Whichever view we may take of it there is one thing certain, and that is that far more people are talking religion today than has been the case for many years. Leading magazines are running special articles about it, cosmopolitan newspapers are devoting departments to it, and theological discussions can be heard on the street cars. Some think it may produce disruption of the churches, while others assert that it will bring about a more steadfast faith.

In the World's Work Rollin Lynde Hart is writing a series of articles suggesting the possibility of the result being the establishment of two great churches, one Liberal and the other Traditional. This, of course, may be possible, but it is more likely that when the smoke clears and the heat of argument subsides we shall be found dwelling together peaceably in the same households again, if we will only keep our heads and remember that other people have as much right to their own opinions about religion as they have on any other subject, and that, because they differ from our own it does not at all follow that they are insincere or held for ulterior motives.

According to Mr. Hart in the World's Work for December:

"The country over, interest in Christianity redoubles. Recently, when a newspaper syndicate announced Dr. Henry Van Dyke's miniature sermons, forty papers subscribed immediately. Another syndicate distributes daily Bible verses. Printed in many hundreds of papers, they bring a response altogether unprecedented.

"War in the churches has not hurt religion; it has helped it. During the last statistical year, a year of such conflict as Christianity has not seen since the Reformation, the Churches of the United States made the greatest gains in their history. Figures given out by Dr. E. G. Watson, statistician of the Federation of Churches show an increase of 1,220,438 members over the year before—an increase approximately fifty per cent greater than the average annual growth for the preceding five years."

Also Commissioner Estill of the Salvation Army is quoted as saying, "When you see a bulge on a man's hip, do not jump to conclusions; it is as likely to be a Bible as a flask, for the Bible is fast becoming the most popular Book in New York."

So let us not feel disheartened by the discussion, but remember that it is a discussion, and let us exert every effort of broadminded, high-spirited generosity to keep it on the plain of discussion, and not let it descend to the personalities of controversy.

MEETING OF THE SOCIAL SERVICE COMMISSION OF THE PROVINCE OF WASHINGTON.

Bishop Davenport Presides.

The Social Service Commission appointed by the last Synod of the Province of Washington convened in the Diocesan House in Baltimore on January 30.

Bishop Davenport of the Diocese of Easton is chairman and presided over the meeting. Those present were the Reverends Carlton Barnwell of Lynchburg, Romilly F. Humphries of Baltimore, R. W. Trapnell of Wilmington, Del., R. Cary Montague of Richmond, Va., F. Orr Johnson of Pittsburgh, Deaconess Jean W. Colesbury of Philadelphia, and the Rev. Thomas J. Bingham of Pittsburgh, who was elected Secretary and Treasurer of the Commission.

Motions were adopted on the following subjects:

A recommendation to the Diocesan Commissions on Social Service that Study Classes be held through Lent, using as a text-book, "The Social Opportunities in the Parish."

Urging the investigation of City and County Institutions for the care of prisoners and the indigent, to be carried out either through Parish Social Service Commissions or inter-church organizations.

Requesting the Diocesan Commissions to call the attention of their clergy to the importance of closer cooperation with State Boards of Health, public welfare, and rehabilitation bureaus, with a view to holding clinics and more efficient relief of individuals through these agencies.

The importance of circulating libraries on the subject of social service being maintained in Diocesan offices was stressed, and a resolution adopted urging this in every diocese. The address of J. C. H. Sauber, Church Rooms, Trinity House, Sixth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Penn., was given as one competent to furnish lists of books for such a purpose.

Doctor Humphries moved that lists of agencies prepared to care for girls seeking employment in the cities be compiled and forwarded to rural clergy in each diocese.

Bishop Davenport called attention to the practical efficiency of Miss Carpenter of the National Department of Social Service in surveying church institutions, and offering helpful suggestions in regard to their management and building and a resolution was adopted urging that Miss Carpenter be consulted on these subjects through the Diocesan Commissions.

The last resolution adopted which called forth considerable discussion was to the effect that the Social Service Department of the Church is especially interested in respect for and enforcement of the laws, and that campaigns of education looking to this end should be attempted.

Bishop Davenport appointed the Rev. Messrs. Thomas J. Bingham and J. Orr Johnson a committee to draw up a suggestive outline for the guidance of diocesan commissions, based on the resolutions and conclusions of this commission.

It was felt by all present that the session of the commission, although brief, was well worth while and had accomplished a good deal of practical value.

The commission was entertained at luncheon by the Diocese of Maryland, with the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries acting as host.

A PRAYER FOR 1924.

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me find in Thine employ
Peace that dearer is than joy!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

Church Intelligence

A Building Every Four Days.

This is the record for 1923 as shown in the Reports presented at the Annual Meeting of the American Church Building Fund Commission. To forty-three dioceses and districts loans amounting to $162,300, gifts amounting to $29,975, and grants amounting to $3,700 were paid out by the Commission, which stands ready to pay further promised loans of $90,100, gifts of $13,100, and grants of $7,500, whenever covering papers are presented.

The permanent fund has been increased during the year by $27,864.85, of which $25,000 was the gift of an individual for the purpose. Such an increase is most gratifying, but only because it enables the organization to handle a larger share of the requests for help that are presented. This is the basis of the desire and effort of the Trustees for the increase of the permanent fund. The Commission is functioning in one hundred per cent usefulness since its present resources are fully utilized. When the Church really wants it to fill the larger role which her requests call for, gifts of individuals, offerings of parishes and missions, and remembrances in legacies will flow in to afford the necessary equipment. The Year Book of 1923 will set forth what this department of the Church at work has done, is doing, and yet can do to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes in the way of physical Church extension. Copies of this booklet may be had on application to the Corresponding Secretary at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

The Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society.

The Annual Report of the Trustees of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society just published shows a continued work of this most helpful organization. Its membership consists of two hundred and seventy-five annuitants and two hundred and seventy-one other members who have completed or are continuing their payments, a total of five hundred and forty-six. To the annuitants of 1923 the sum of $28,141 was distributed, being a return of twenty-five per cent of the gross payments which they had made in annual dues during the period of their active membership. Inasmuch as new members are no longer received and increases of holdings are no longer possible to present members, the Trustees are assured, on actuarial examination, that the Society has within itself the power annually to function along the lines of the past year, and to protect its last surviving member. The report shows annual dues received in the sum of $4,056, gifts for the year of $360.23, and invested funds amounting to $376,472.04.

Returning From Japan.

Bishop McKim, whose diocese is now officially "North Tokyo," and the Rev. J. J. Chapman, president of the Council of Advice in the District of Kyoto, returned from Japan with Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood, arriving in San Francisco on the S. S. President Wilson about February 7.

They go to Pasadena, where the consecration of Dr. Refsnyder as Suffragan of North Tokyo takes place on February 12, with Bishop McKim as one of the consecrators. The event is one of marked interest, so well known and so highly esteemed has the suffragan-elect become throughout the Church since the disastrous days of the earthquake.

A week after the consecration, the next meeting of the National Council, occurs in New York on Feb. 20, delayed in order that thorough study of the situation in Japan might be made and complete information brought back by Bishop McKim, Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood.

Sewanee News Letter.

The several Southern Dioceses will be interested to know that Sewanee will have a faculty representative at their January Convention. It is hoped, that through this effort, Sewanee will be brought into more personal and intimate contact with those Churchmen who should know Sewanee better, and realize their ownership the more. Dean George M. Baker, of the College of Arts and Sciences, will represent Sewanee at the Louisiana and Mississippi Conventions; the Rev. Prof. George B. Myers, at Alabama; Prof. W. H. MacKellar, at Texas and at Oklahoma, and Vice-Chancellor B. F. Finney, at Tennessee, at Kentucky, at Missouri, and at Southern Florida.

The Board of Regents held its regular winter meeting on February 6, and in March Sewanee will be host to the Provincial Meeting of the Student Council, at which convention, plans will be effected for the higher and better realization of the religious life in the various colleges in the South.

The Vice-Chancellor has received recently two substantial bequests: one from the late Mrs. Thomas O'Connor of Knoxville, for $10,000, of which the University feels it should make grateful public acknowledgment. The Diocesan Convention of Tennessee, this week, appropriated $700 to the Theological Department, to be used at the discretion of the Dean. Another appreciated contribution was the gift from the Rev. Dr. C. T. A. Pise, of Goshen, New York, of two hundred books and several rare and valuable volumes dealing with the Church life during the Confederacy and the early life of Sewanee. The donor's father was one of the charter members of the first Board of Trustees of the University of the South.

Another member of the Theological School was ordained to the Diaconate this month. Mr. Eugene Hopper was ordered Deacon, Friday, January 18, at Trinity Church, Clarksville, Tenn., by the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee. The Rev. George O. Watts, Trinity Church, Clarksville, presented the Candidate and the Rev. Prentiss A. Pugh, of the Church of the Advent, Nashville, preached the ordination sermon. It is interesting to note that both Messrs. Watts and Pugh are Sewanee men.

A Statement From Mr. Franklin.

It is a pleasure to announce to the Church that the accounts of the Missionary Society for the year 1923, on the basis of estimates of final returns from distant fields, will be closed with a small balance of income over operating expenses.

The receipts from the dioceses in December were not up to the amount which it was estimated would be needed, but income from other sources was larger and the expenses smaller than estimated. An exact statement of expenditures cannot be made until final reports from all the mission fields are received.

While it is gratifying that there will be a surplus for the year, it must be remembered that there would have been a deficit had it not been for legacies of over $300,000 available for current expenses. If every diocese had met its share of the budget as a minimum, these legacies could have been used to provide much needed new equipment in the field, and in addition more than $400,000 would have been paid on the existing debt. Let us hope and pray that better results may be achieved in 1924.

Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

Death of Bishop Keator.

The Rt. Rev. Frederic William Keator, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Olympia, died from heart disease Thursday night, January 31, at a hospital in New Haven, Conn., where he had gone a little over a week ago to visit his son at Yale. He was taken ill shortly after reaching New Haven. Funeral services were conducted Monday afternoon from St. George's Church, New Haven, by the rector, the Rev. C. C. Kennedy, and the Rev. Stewart Means, D. D., rector-emeritus, and the body was taken to Tacoma, accompanied by Mrs. Keator, who arrived in New Haven on Saturday, February 2.

Bishop Keator was born in Honesdale, Pa., October 22, 1855, and was the son of Jerman Samuel Keator and Mary Chapman Baldwin Keator. He graduated from the Western Theological Seminary in 1891 and was ordained deacon and priest the same year by Bishop McLaren. His first charge was the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, of which he was rector from 1891 to 1896, going from Chicago to Freeport, Ill., to take charge of Grace Church, where he remained until 1899, when he accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Dubuque, Iowa, remaining there until elected to the Bishopric. He was consecrated Bishop on January 8, 1902, by Bishops McLaren, Hare, Nicholson, White, Morrison, A. Williams, Anderson and Taylor.

He received from Yale the degree of B. A., in 1880, LL. B., in 1882, and D. D., in 1905; and from the Western Theological Seminary the degree of S. T. D. in 1902.

Bishop Keator was a deputy to the General Convention from Chicago in 1898, and from Iowa in 1901; was a member of the Board of Missions of the Province of the Pacific in 1915, and was a member of the Executive Council of the Church, representing the Province of the Pacific. He was president of the Annie Wright Seminary, Tacoma, and Overseer of Whitman College, Walla Walla, Wash.; and was Chaplain of the Coast Artillery Corp, National Guard of Washington, and a member of the Veteran Welfare Commission of the State of Washington.

Bishop Keator's wife was Miss Emma Victoria Lyon, of Chicago.

Centennial Fund—Virginia Seminary.

One hundred and fifty men, friends and alumni of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, assembled for a banquet in the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, Thursday, January 31, in the interest of the $500,000 campaign for the Seminary.

Bishop James E. Freeman, of Washington, gave a stirring address in which he affirmed that the very fabric of our civilization will collapse if the Church should fail to function. The great need of our day, he said, was for trained leaders of men in the ministry of the Church's life. Deeply as he is interested in his National Cathedral project, he asserted unhesitatingly that he regarded the Seminary need of the Church as a first priority. Bishop Freeman is an alumnus of no Seminary, but seems to have adopted Virginia as his honorary Alma Mater.

Bishop Brown of Virginia gave a brief story of the Seminary's record during the last hundred years. Virginia has an unequalled record in sending men to all parts of the world as pioneers in missionary work and today has the largest enrollment, with the exception of the General Seminary. In order to receive the increasing number of students who are making application for admission and to equip them with the very best training, the Seminary must enlarge both its building accommodations and its faculty staff.

The Bishop reminded his hearers of the debt which the Church in Maryland owed to the Seminary. He informed them that three hundred men from the Virginia Seminary had, at one time or other, served in Maryland Diocese.

The emphasis laid on spirituality of character was stressed by Bishop Jett.

The Rev. Hugh Birkhead, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, presided at the banquet. The follow-up plans adopted included personal solicitation of a number of people whose names had been secured.

Bishop Murray has given his most cordial endorsement to the campaign in Maryland and has helped by his encouragement and counsel.

The Chapel at "Henrytown."

In the last four months of 1918 the Rev. John R. Matthews was rector of Preston Parish, which comprised the churches at Saltville and Marion in Smyth County and Glade Springs in Washington County; his splendid life coming to a close on January 22, 1919.

Mr. Matthews was deeply impressed with the need of a chapel for the people of the community locally known as "Henrytown," a village of about five hundred people, a short distance from Saltville, and immediately began to raise a fund for this purpose; contributions being made by the local people and by outside friends of the rector. Before he could erect the building Mr. Matthews fell a victim to the influenza epidemic.

The Rev. Edgar C. Burnz took charge of Preston Parish in February, 1923, and, with the "Henrytown Fund," which had been held by the Trustees of St. Paul's Church, Saltville, a neat white chapel has been erected in an excellent location and named "Matthews' Memorial."

It has been possible to install seats, lamps and a stove. At the first public meeting, held the Saturday before Christmas, there were present over a hundred and fifty children and half as many grown-ups to receive the Christmas "treats" provided by the ladies of St. Paul's Auxiliary and other friends.

As yet the chapel is greatly in need of additional equipment, and it is hoped that some persons or organizations may become interested and help to supply various parts of this. A small reed organ would be a great help in the services. There should be an altar, about five feet by two with ratable, and simple in design. A pulpit and lectern are needed—the lectern a simple upright with book rest. A font is also needed; of wood, with receptacle for removable aluminum bowl. Any furniture that may be given should be finished in fumed oak to be in keeping with the interior of the chapel which is coiled with pine with hard oil varnish.

The Rev. Edgar C. Burnz, Saltville, Va., will be grateful for any assistance in regard to the items suggested and will be glad to give any information that may be desired by prospective donors.

The Death of Former President Wilson.

Breaking in upon the solemnity of the celebration of the Holy Communion, at the eleven o'clock services, all over the city, came the cry of "Extra paper!" on Sunday, February 3, announcing the sad news that the great soul of Woodrow Wilson had passed into the Larger Life. It was peculiarly fitting that the hour and day should have been one when men's minds were dwelling on serious and holy things. It may be likewise, significant for the days to come, when men every where will be stirred to catch the torch and "carry on" for him the great ideals which he first made plain to the people and for which he laid down his great and noble life.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church, Georgetown, held its regular monthly open meeting in the parish hall on Monday afternoon, February 4, when the Rev. P. Lindel Tsen, a Chinese priest of the Episcopal Church, was the special speaker. Mr. Tsen graduated from Boone University, Wuchang, China, in 1908. After completing his studies for the ministry he was ordained by Bishop Roots in 1909. He became headmaster of St. James' High School at Wuhu and later was rector of True Light Church, Naning. Before coming to this country, Mr. Tsen served as General Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Native Chinese Church. He is now a special student at the Virginia Theological Seminary. Just preceding this meeting of the Auxiliary, an informal luncheon was served for all the Auxiliary members and at this time the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Church were guests of Christ Church. A short business session followed the luncheon, and at this, one of the members reported an encouraging amount of money made for the Auxiliary through commissions on subscriptions to the Southern Churchman. In this connection a letter was read from the Southern Churchman, setting forth in detail the plan by which the Auxiliary might increase its treasury, and at the same time enlarge the circulation of this Church paper.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese held its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock at Ascension Church. Beside the regular business meeting Miss Mary Elizabeth Wood gave an address on "The Library of Boone University in Wuchang, China."

Diocese Gives $54,288 To Missions.

More than two hundred parishes and missions of the diocese took part in the rally meeting in Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, on Thursday night, January 31, when the offering of $54,288, which had been raised through the intensity of "Sacrifice Week" for the maintenance of missionary work was presented. Although there was an overflowing attendance, there are several parishes and missions to report. The Rev. Percy R. Stockman, chairman of the "Sacrifice Week" Committee, presided. Colonel William P. Barba, assistant treasurer of the diocese, created enthusiasm when he announced that with the $54,288 the Diocese of Pennsylvania contributed the most money in 1923 for the missionary maintenance. The offering was presented to Bishop Garland, who thanked every one for their participation. The Rev. Dr. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, Chaplain to the King of England, and Dr. Mary L. James, of Wuchang, China, were the speakers.

Death of the Rev. Dr. Lamb.

The Rev. James Hart Lamb, D. D., rector-emeritus of Old St. David's Church, Radnor, died February 1 at the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia. He was eighty years old. Dr. Lamb became ill New Year's eve, and had been in the hospital since then. Burial service was held Monday afternoon at Old St. David's, with Bishop Garland officiating. Interment was in the churchyard.

Dr. Lamb was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, coming to this country as a boy and attending the Germantown Grammar School.

He enlisted as a private in the Fortieth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in 1869 he entered the Philadelphia Divinity School. He is survived by his widow, who was Rachel Crozer Green, of Trenton; his sons, the Rev. George Warrington Lamb, M. D., rector of the Church of the Covenant, Philadelphia; the Rev. Adison A. Lamb, rector of Trinity Church, Coatesville, and the Rev. James H. Lamb, who is now in Germantown, and his daughters, Mrs. Edward P. Moxley, Jr., and Misses Helen and Rachel Lamb.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

The Rev. Dr. Studdert-Kennedy, special lecturer at Berkeley Divinity School, is speaking in many places in and near New York. He is to be one of the speakers at the annual dinner of the Church Club on February 7. He has addressed not a few clubs. Speaking to a Bible class that is nominally directed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and is connected with the Park Avenue Baptist or Rockefeller Church, he said: "Modern warfare is a hideous mockery and there is no victory in it," he declared. "I see the world as a man clothed in rags, with his face turned from his own house. The Book has been cast away and in its place are thousands of newspapers, but none shows the way."

"Business men are the apostles of Jesus Christ among the nations," he continued, "and commerce is either a holy communion or damnation. The leadership of the world has passed across the ocean and is with you. Where you lead my country and all Europe must follow. May you lead us aright."

St. Chrysostom's Chapel of Trinity Parish, the Rev. C. N. Moller, vicar, dates from 1863, when it was built in the country, in great part for a farming district support. Now it is in the midst of a manufacturing district in Seventh Avenue, a short distance south of the most famous theatrical district in the world. Trinity has now determined to lease the land, and to consent to the destruction of the Chapel and its rather extensive buildings. For years under Mr. Moller it has done work among the tenement people of the West Side. There is now to supplant it a loft building for hat makers. A final service is to be held on February 10. The future of the work has not yet been determined, but will be fixed within a short time. It is stated that Trinity is not to give up its work for deserving poor of the West side.

C.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. I. Reese, D. D., Coadjutor.

The most important and widely interesting suggestion made at the forty-ninth annual convention of the Diocese appeared in the Convention address of the Diocesan, at St. Paul's Church, Columbus.

Bishop Vincent, in a scholarly and conservative manner endeavored to present the difference between the Corporate Faith of the Church and the Personal Faith of each individual believer. He absolutely disclaimed any desire to change the Historic Creeds, but suggested that a more personal and direct form in which to question the candidate for Baptism, instead of the present query: "Dost thou believe all the articles of the Christian Faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed?" would be: "Dost thou believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God and the Saviour of Men?"

Dr. Frederick C. Hicks, President of the University of Cincinnati, presented a resolution in the last hour of the business sessions of the Convention petitioning the General Convention to favorably consider this suggestion. As it was pointed out that the attendance at this session was not entirely representative and that the lateness of the hour prevented a full and free discussion the resolution was referred for discussion and action at the next Convention.

A special committee was appointed to arrange for the celebration of the semi-centennial of the Diocese at the next Convention which is to meet in Columbus at Trinity Church, in January, 1925.

Bishop Reese's annual address as Coadjutor show among other statistics eighty-four congregations and seventy-five active clergy. There are only two vacant parishes in the Diocese and these have a temporary supply.

The only change in Standing Committee was the election of the Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, rector of the entertaining parish, St. Paul's, Columbus, in place of the Rev. Dr. Flinchbaugh, who has left the Diocese.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod are the Rev. Messrs. B. H. Reinheimer, Maurice Clarke, Joseph H. Dodson and Charles G. Reafe and Messrs. Mortimer Matthews, Wilfrid O. Frohock, Wm. T. Magruder, Ph. D., and W. S. Keller, M. D.

The Broad Street Presbyterian Church, across the street from St. Paul's, with true Christian hospitality, gave the use of its fine buildings to the Convention and the House of Churchwomen met there, while the social and dining rooms were in constant use for the meals and for the few leisure moments of both the bodies.

Mrs. Paul Sterling, correspondent for the Church Periodical Club of the Diocese of Massachusetts, presented that work to the House of Churchwomen, while Mrs. James D. Ireland, of Cleveland, National Secretary of the Guild of St. Barnabas' for Nurses, gave a most inspiring account of the activities of that organization. Sister Clara Elizabeth of the Community of the Transfiguration, spoke of the work of the Bethany Home for Boys. All these addresses added much to the interest of the convention, which was regarded as one of the most successful in the history of the diocese.

At the joint sessions of the two conventions Miss Ella Charls, Executive of the Church Mission of Help, Carl Legard of Dayton, President of the Diocesan Young People's Society; Prof. Reeves of Kenyon College, and the heads of the several Diocesan departments added much to the information and interest.

The inspirational service with which the Conventions closed was a wonderful occasion. The Rev. Edmund Lloyd Souder, of Hupeh, China, spoke on "The Church and Chinese Democracy" and Bishop Woodcock, of Kentucky, on "The Mission of the Church to the World." Two fine choirs combined to lead the singing of some fine hymns of social import from the New Hymnal.

A new feature of this convention was the Forum which met before the organization to give the delegates a chance to discuss several vital problems in a free and informal manner. It was voted to continue this feature.

The campaign for the raising of $800,000 for the greater part of the new million dollar Children's Hospital, has started with the highest hopes of success in the near future. Col. William Cooper Proctor has started the ball rolling with a subscription of $250,000.

The Eleanor Lodge, Mt. Auburn, with accommodations for seventy-five girls, has been opened, taking the place of the Lawrence Home and the Eleanor Sarnshaw Club. It is governed by a Board, representative of the G. F. S. and the former organization in equal numbers.

The Rev. William Norman Guthrie, of St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, New York, was a recent visitor in Cincinnati. He was at one time rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Fern Bank. He addressed a meeting of the Clericus.

Mercer-Hadley Mission at New Orleans.

Mr. E. C. (Ted) Mercer and H. H. Hadley held a ten days' mission at St. Paul's Church, from January 3 to 13. Their messages were clear and outspoken, telling their life experiences and warning young men and young women of the evil tendencies of the times. Unfortunately, during their visit, the weather was very cold and rainy, which prevented many from attending, but, nevertheless, the meetings were well-attended. Special service for women and young girls was conducted by Mr. Mercer on Sunday afternoon, January 6, when his subject was "Grave Dangers Our Young Women Face Today." This was listened to by two hundred and fifty to three hundred persons, and many have stated that the address was most inspiring. On the following Sunday afternoon Mr. Hadley addressed a meeting of men and boys, his subject being, "All Mixed Up." His appeal was a very strong one and he impressed many by his deep earnestness that he is a man of very great spirituality and devotion to the Master's cause. Mr. Mercer also spoke to the students at the Tulane and Newcomb Colleges, Girls' and Boys' high schools, and it is estimated that about 3,000 girls and boys heard them. Both Mr. Mercer and Mr. Hadley paid visits to the Parish Prison and spoke to the prisoners, and also addressed gatherings at several of the charitable institutions of the city. Their visit will undoubtedly result in much good and St. Paul's feel gratified at having had them.

Diocesan Council Meets at Baton Rouge.

The eighty-sixth annual session of the Council of the Diocese of Louisiana was held in St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, on January 23 and 24. The meetings were presided over by the Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese; the Rev. S. L. Vail being Secretary. There was quite a large attendance of clerical and lay delegates from throughout the diocese. Reports on the State of the Church were read, showing that the Church had grown considerably during the past year. The Nation-Wide Campaign Committee reported that the contributions had largely increased. The Woman's Auxiliary, which was largely attended, was held in the Parish House at the same time. The stay of the delegates was made most pleasant and enjoyable by the men and ladies of St. James' Parish, and the daily luncheon served by the ladies was quite a feature and much enjoyed. The congregation of St. James' are to be congratulated on the recent acquisition of a very handsome Parish House.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

An Important Conference.

Describing the Church and the public school as the two great agencies for the moral uplift of the community, Mr. Edward B. Sargeant, one of the secretaries of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council, addressed a conference of the joint committee of the Council of Churches and the Board of Education of the City of Wilmington on Friday, January 25, at the Y. M. C. A. building, followed by a luncheon at the Hotel duPont.

Mr. Sargeant, who has been superintendent of schools in several middle western towns, has given up his public school activities to devote his time to the promotion of week-day religious instruction.

The meeting was arranged by the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington, who is also chairman of the Department of Religious Education and Christian Social Service of the Diocese of Delaware. Mr. Trapnell was instrumental in organizing the Wilmington Council of Churches, with the cooperation of Bishop Cook, and is now its first president.

Mr. Sargeant, in his address, emphasized the point that since the war there has been a thirty-five per cent increase in juvenile delinquency; that one of the greatest arguments in favor of the establishment of religious centers of this kind is that none of the places where the plan of religious instruction has been adopted in conjunction with the regular school curriculum has abandoned it, and that in one hundred and thirty-six cities and towns there have been no cases of truancy from the established religious centers.

It is hoped that this joint committee, after several conferences, will be able to present to the Wilmington Board of Education a definite plan for its consideration.

The Delaware Clericus is showing vigorous growth in interest and usefulness. As the guest of its retiring president, the Rev. Edward H. Ford, it was entertained on December 11 at the Hotel duPont, at which time new officers were elected as follows: President, the Rev. Charles A. Rantz; Vice-President, the Rev. W. H. Darbie; Secretary and Treasurer, the Rev. Ernest A. Rich. At this meeting a paper was read by the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, entitled "In Praise of Ideas." On January 15 the Clericus was entertained by the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell in St. Andrew's Rectory, Wilmington, when the paper was read by the Rev. A. L. Urban, on "Jesus and the Modern Mind."

A Community Week of Prayer was observed in Delaware City by the Episcopal, Presbyterian and Methodist congregations from January 7 to 11. This was the outgrowth of a series of Community services started a year and a half ago by the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, rector of Immanuel Church, New Castle, who also has charge of Christ Church, Delaware City. The Community Services have been held regularly on the last Sunday night of each month, with large congregations, and have had the hearty support of the congregations uniting. On the dates when the afternoon service was omitted in the Episcopal Church on account of the Community service, the minister-in-charge has given an early celebration of the Holy Communion in Christ Church, making two trips to Delaware City on those days.

The Rev. George C. Graham, D. D., who has recently come from Massena, N. Y., to become rector of Calvary Church, Wilmington, was given a reception in the Church at which it was evident that he has won the cordial support of all elements in the congregation. The outlook is good for a successful rectorate in this important location.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Convention.

The Convention of the Diocese of Maryland continues to follow a precedent first established, in periods equal to those of the seventeen-year cicadas, it will visit various and possibly remote parts of the diocese. For its session, almost seventeen years ago, it met in Cumberland. January 22 it assembled in St. John's Church, Hagerstown. Hagerstown took to it. At every session and public service the people thronged the church. Bishop St. George Tucker preached the opening sermon and lifted the Convention from the start to a high level. He left much to think about, to pray over and to work over, when he said that the way in which we at home could best help the Missionary cause in the Orient was to live and practice the Gospel of Christ in all relations of life. The old religions of the East are a spent force. Shall or shall not the Easterners draw the same conclusion with reference to Christianity in the West. Reports and routine work consumed most of the time of the Convention.

One enjoyable feature was a beautiful tribute to the life and work of Mr. Joseph Packard, as citizen and Churchman, prepared and delivered by Judge Henry D. Harlan.

In his annual address Bishop Murray noted that seventy per cent of the parishes had paid their quotas in full and the remaining thirty per cent nearly reached the goal. Over ninety per cent of the amount apportioned to the Diocese was raised, enabling Maryland to meet its share of the budget of the General Church and to remit over ten thousand dollars for the General Priorities account. In addition to meeting also the diocesan maintenance budget, a few thousand dollars remained for forward work.

The last part of the Bishop's address was his Confessio Fidei. He declared it to be his first and final say on the subject, that he had shunned public forums and the public press, and that he desired to present his message direct to his people.

The Bishop said, in part:

"With those of my brethren of other schools of thought and dissimilar intellectual bent, who honestly differ with me, I have no controversy. Controversy estranges, and I would be estranged from no one. On all matters of both temporal and eternal concern there may be an honest difference of opinion perfectly compatible with mutual confidence, respect and esteem. This matter is no exception, only we must observe that the true situation is not exemplified by the exhibit of those on either side whose purpose is egotistical—self-exploitation instead of modest altruistic exposition, and whose performances are offensive to every sense of propriety and good taste. I only suggest that—holding on to the fact of the Incarnation, until they give the world something more reasonable in the manner of that Incarnation, something more possible, something more probable, something more logical, something more helpful, and consoling in time, something more assuring and positive for eternity, something more constructive in all life than what the Church now, in her Doctrine, Discipline, Worship, Creeds and Scripture interpretation, proclaims and teaches as that 'faith which was once delivered unto the saints' (Judges 3) and for which Jude tells us he had to contend in his day, I say I only suggest that all they who would change the old order should graciously refrain from disturbing the peace of the many millions who are now calm and happy in the faith of that order, and confine their experimental speculations to their own study and their individual interpretations within the secret places of their own soul.

"And this because, believing as I do that the Holy Spirit has pervaded the life of the Church, guiding it into the way of truth, from the day of Pentecost until the present hour, it does not seem possible to me that He could have suffered her throughout past ages to abide in ignorance concerning supreme features of the Incarnation of Our Lord and to have revealed the truth only to minds of modern illumination."

The former Standing Committee was reelected, Mr. Edward N. Rich taking the place heretofore filled by Mr. Packard. There was almost a complete turn over in the clerical delegates to the Provincial Synod. Those elected were the Rev. Harold N. Arrowsmith, Canon of the Pro-Cathedral; the Rev. Ambrose H. Beavin, of Cumberland; the Rev. Robert E. Browning, rector of Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, and the Rev. Hugh W. S. Powers, of the Church of the Holy Nativity, Baltimore. While not an action of the Convention, it may well be noted here that Mr. Edward Guest Gibson, for a number of sessions delegate to the General Convention, has been appointed Chancellor of the Diocese. Near the close of the Convention the Rev. Dr. H. P. Almon Abbott presented a resolution calling for some plan for discussing some vital subject at one session of the Convention. Conventions are dry and dull, he said, and discussion of some vital subject would add interest and be helpful. Next year the Convention returns to Baltimore and will meet in Emmanuel Church.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Christ Church, Macon, has installed a twelve-tone set of Deagan Tower Chimes, which were rung for the first time December 30, preceding Evening Prayer. The church was crowded to capacity for the occasion and it is estimated that fully eight hundred were turned away from the doors. The chimes have been given as memorials with the exception of chime No. 1, which was given by the parish as a whole in memory of the men and women from the church who served the Southern Confederacy, and chime number two for the men and women who served in the World War. Four more chimes will be added later, which will complete the full set of sixteen tones.

All Saints' Church, Atlanta, held a successful Christmas bazaar which netted the Guild nearly two thousand dollars. This the organization applied

 With hiss and thundering roar, then comes a day
 With gentle breezes in the sunlight play,
 And when my hours in peace and quiet flow,
 I know not whence I come and whither go;
 My life is like the wind—my hand I lay
 In His own hand, and, drifting onward, say,
 The whence and whither only He shall know.
 And when this strength is spent and evening's chill
 Descends as fast my days have neared the goal,
 And buried in the grave all, all, is still,
 Then, like the breeze that comes at dawn to roll Away the gathered mists of night, there will Rise from the silence an immortal soul.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Parable Of the Marriage Feast.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The long, long homesickness was almost over now, the exile nearly done. Badgered, attacked, sneered-at, hated, slandered, Our Lord allowed Himself a glance from that confused and muddy turmoil of evil passions into the limpid light that lies before the Throne. He told a story of a marriage-feast.

Sending servants to invite guests was customary. From external sources we know that the Bride of Christ is the Church, which locates the Feast at the second coming of Our Lord. But the main thing, the obvious thing, seems that here our dear Lord thought of the Land where He met no hatred, the House where He was at home. He had the open vision and saw both worlds. To borrow a phrase from the theosophists, He functioned consciously on all planes.

It would be good to speak of theosophy and its agreements and disagreements with Christianity; of the Doctrine of Angels; of the Jewish priestly coterie and its point of view, for, later, a great company of the priests believed, and John Baptist was a priest of the course of Abias. Not from lack of comfort but from its wealth we turn to the greatest fact of all, that Our Lord was surrounded, lapped, enfolded in great love. The angels of the right hand and the left, invisible, were as much with Him as James and John and doubting Thomas of the fishing-firm of Zebedee and Jonasson. Any great insult, any unusual influx of hatred, was met by a glance, a thought, a word from them. Hitherto we have left out the love. It is not fitting that those who grow acquainted with Joshua Davidson the carpenter should all at once be called upon to adore God the Son. But slowly, slowly, very slowly, there grows in each a love, feeble at first, yet real, for Joshua Davidson the carpenter; and at last, by the growing power of love, our eyes are opened and we see Jesus the Son of God.

Searching for reasonable explanation to the conduct of the guests, we find only one. That subjects of a king refuse his invitation touches politics. It is not a question of courtesy, but one of disaffection. They think the king about to lose that portion of his territory in which they live. This parable was given to men of a native state under Roman rule. Such conduct to the ruler of the native state would mean that the Emperor had deserted him. Such conduct to the Roman Emperor himself would mean that he seemed about to be overthrown by a rival. The significance of the refusal in the realm social was swallowed up in its greater significance in the realm of statecraft. The men are not merely rude. They are traitors and rebels. Those who slew the messengers are only one step further on the same path than those who left them alone. Both trust some other king.

Other things are considered in this coming beside the state of the human race. The supper can wait, but not long, because of the oxen and fatlings killed and made ready. The opinion of apostolic and sub-apostolic Christendom was that the waiting was but a few years, so that men who had known the king's Son in His humility expected to know Him in His glory before they died. Nineteen hundred years has not exhausted the "Little Time" of waiting.

Our Lord, in this story, made no mention of His own death. The preceding parable showed that He was to be one of the slain. The king in the story, regarded merely as an Oriental mon-regarded merely as an oriental monarch. Before oxen and fatlings are spoiled he gets guests. That the king is God does not alter the fact that common sense is shown. We recognize the methods of Him who adapts means to ends in all the maddest variations of this shifting world. The sending out of servants describes a great missionary movement; which has brought us, among others, to the Supper.

Preach to ten thousand and get three thousand. Preach again, to the remaining seven thousand, and get three hundred use the same men, money and effort to preach to ten thousand new ones and instead of three hundred you get three thousand. Therefore missions to the heathen, whether in or out of Christendom, are more valuable than missions to Christians. It is better to mill new ore than to screen tailings. Leave your seven thousand unconverted to the ministrations of your three thousand, and pass on with your extra money effort and men to a new ten thousand.

The approximate time of the supper can be guessed from information not in this story. When there is no nation kindred people or tribe where the Gospel is not preached; when every city of earth has one or more parish churches, verile or moribund; when every human being can get baptized if he choose, and, being baptized, may take the Lord's Supper if he likes, then Christ will come.

Answered Prayer.

Much that perplexes us in our Christian experience is but the answer to our prayers.

We pray for patience and God sends tribulation; for tribulation worketh patience.

We pray for submission and God sends suffering; for we learn obedience by the things which we suffer.

We pray for unselfishness and God gives us opportunities to sacrifice ourselves by thinking on the things of others, and by laying down our lives for the brethren.

We pray for victory and the things of the world swoop down upon us in a storm of temptation; for this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

We pray for strength and humility and some messenger of Satan torments us until we lie in the dust crying for its removal.

We pray for union with Jesus and God severs natural ties, and lets our best friends misunderstand us and seem indifferent to us; and calls on us to walk "alone."

We pray for love and God sends peculiar suffering and puts us with apparently unlovely people, and lets them say things which rasp the nerves and lacerate the heart, for love suffereth long and is kind, love is not impolite, love is not provoked.

Love beareth all things, believeth, hopeth and endureth, love never faileth.

We pray for likeness to Jesus and the answer is, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction. Can thine heart endure or can thine hands be strong? Are ye able?"

And in the furnace He melts us into something of His own tenderness and gentleness and teaches us how to bear one another's burdens and how to live to make intercession for the sick and the sorrowful.

But this is only the transitory side. There is an everlasting recompense of praise and honor and glory at the revealing of Jesus Christ. For the momentary lightness of our tribulation, in a manner yet more and more excellent, is working out for us an age-abiding weight of glory, so long as we are not looking out for the visible things but for the invisible; for the visible things are for a season, whereas the invisible are age-abiding.

Winter Adventures In a Garden.

He—or she—who loiters a moment in passing my nondescript flower patch little dreams of the marvelous crops that grow therein. It is usually "she" who loiters, for one of the precious heritages handed down by our far-away Puritan grandmothers, who brought their beloved English plants to flourish in the new wilderness, is that deep-rooted affection in the hearts of American women, the love of a garden.

To be sure, in my little patch, called, by the grace of loving friends, a garden, there is visible to the naked eye a fair array from the snowdrops and crocuses of March to the lingering chrysanthemums of mid-Summer. This much may any one see. But when the flower beds are safely tucked up for the winter and the season of the seed catalogue is with us—that volume of fairy tales far more fascinating than any novel ever written whose author is a lineal descendant of Ananias—then memory goes adventuring into the garden and the harvest is of quite another sort.

My garden diary for a day early in July begins, "Spent the morning on my prayer rug." That was the day I spread my prayer rug, a thick straw mat to protect all too susceptible bones from dampness, before the bed where clusters of Madonna lilies arose among the blue spires of Delphinium. I knelt before that bed, however, not in adoration, but the better to pull the weeds that, if left undisturbed, threatened soon to be neck and neck with the lilies.

As I worked, a particularly tantalizing bit of clover defied me from the center of the bed, swaying back and forth, forever out of reach. But when I left my weeding to get it, carefully working my way among the tall plants, lest I destroy them, behold, its root was close to the spot I had been weeding and had I but continued my work it would have been the next one to be pulled up.

Did I need to be taught by a weed—that outcast in a garden—that the fault which is sometimes seen in others would have no existence if we but kept our own lives free from that which has no right to flourish in the garden of our souls?

Take the advice of one who from choice digs among the green things of the earth and be not above going to school to a hardy chrysanthemum, that last bit of loveliness in a garden to say good-bye to summer. For in the sunny summer days the knowing gardener goes from clump to clump of chrysanthemums, nipping off the end of each sturdy stalk.

"But why spoil a plant already lovely?" cried a friend who knows little of the ways of flowers, and she may not have her answer until months later, when the rest of the garden fades at the approach of winter, but on the great clumps of pink and white chrysanthemums each stalk, from which one little bud was nipped, has branched and now bears six glorious flowers instead of one.

"William, do you think this plant will live?" I asked one day as I tried to bolster up a discouraged iris which had flopped spinelessly to the ground. William is my helper, who pulls up my seedlings with the weeds, and my ally as I wage war on those children of the Imp of Darkness—the cutworms.

At my question he languidly unfolded his six feet of humanity from the middle of a bed where he was planting tulip bulbs and ambled over to my corner, though no one else ever has the least difficulty in seeing the whole garden at a glance.

"Yes'm," William opined as he stooped over the drooping plant. "Yes'm, she'll live. Jes' stir dis yere earth 'round to give her air, feed her a little water an' she'll strike a root all right. Yes'm, she'll strike a root an' you'll get a flower off o' her nex' yeah."

Ah, that was it. To "strike a root!" To draw an inspiration from a hidden, an inexhaustible source. Dear Lord of Gardens, may we learn to strike a root in Thy love and bear a flower not next year, but today.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Church-Bells.

Martha A. Kidder.

In other days I loved to hear—
Far sweeter than the singing
Of choirs rare—the tones so clear
Of many church-bells ringing.

Antiphonal their sweetest strain
An upward flight was winging,
And floated down to earth again,
The sacred church-bells ringing.

New thoughts of heaven, love divine
Within my breast were springing.
No longer could my heart repine,
I heard the church-bells ringing.

O sacred bells! each holy day
Your call to me is bringing,
As oft I hear upon my way
The 'church-bells' message ringing.

That message shall remain within me
Like Memory's fond clinging,
Through life and death, eternity,
The church-bells ever ringing.

The Difficult Parent.

We read and hear of the difficult husband, the difficult wife, and children that are difficult, but who ever heard of a difficult parent being discussed? Still there are plenty of them.

A child is a human being, even as you and I, although we sometimes impose upon children simply because we can.

I was invited to dine with a young attorney and his wife not long ago. Jim phoned, asking us not to wait dinner for him; he had been in court all day and would be late.

As we finished dinner, he sauntered in, looking tired and glum. He threw his hat on the davenport, giving his wife and six-year-old son a perfunctory kiss.

He ate hurriedly; then joined us.

As he entered the room, his eyes turned towards his son, playing on the davenport. Suddenly he blustered, "James, Jr., you're sitting on my hat!" In a moment he completely lost his self-control, his temper flared, and Jimmy, Jr., received a severe scolding.

The child turned white, and tears started down his little cheeks.

"Daddy, I'm sorry. I—"

"There, none of your tears and excuses, young man. You're a fine specimen of carelessness!" Again the unjust anger of the father was heaped upon his child, all because he'd lost his case in court that day.

Jimmy's mother hurried the trembling child off to bed, while I, troubled by the incident, started home.

My first room-mate at college, who now has two small daughters, one seven, one nine, is another example of such a parent. She is high-strung and fussy, allowing and encouraging trifles to worry and irritate her.

Her children pay the price for these moods.

Naturally they, too, are developing a first-class set of "nerves."

One day I met them skipping home from school. "Oh gee, Aunt Cassie, we do hope Mother is in a good humor. She's such a dear when she's happy," announced the older child.

"Yes," hesitatingly, "but I tell you, she's awful unreasonable, when—when she's cross," offered little Midge. "And, do you know, she gets cross at us over the funniest things!" The little brows puckered.

Strange, isn't it, that parents fail to realize the danger of alienating their children's affections when indulging in these difficult and unreasonable moods?

How we all love the person who understands our feelings and dislikes the one with whom we must always be guarded! In time he becomes a bore. And, after all, children are a lot like us. I think they must feel the same way, don't you?—Helen Gregg Green.

Pastor and Doctor.

I meet him as I go upon my rounds,
We deal with life and death, this man and I.

He carries with him balm for healing wounds,
And so do I.

We meet at bed-sides, where death's hand has lain,
We meet in scenes that no man loves to see.

I seek to give the soothing touch to pain.
And so does he.

Ofttimes, returning home at dead of night,
Along dark roads, when other men may sleep,

I meet him on some outward mission's flight
To those who weep.

No tufted, easy way for him, no price
Can buy his vision. He prefers to try
The well-worn way that leads through sacrifice,
And so do I.

Ah, truly we should walk as Christ assigned,
For we are in Christ's business here below.

He heals the sick, I seek to lead the blind
From paths of woe.

He goes to give new life and life sustain,
I go to teach men how to live who die.
He wages endless war with death and pain,
And so do I.

Fellowship With God.

High fellowship with God will make us radiant, too, as well as calm and safe. The light of heaven will linger longer on our souls. In the Alps, when darkness has crept down into all the valleys, bright light can be seen bathing the giant peaks that catch the glory of the descending sun, and retain, when lower ones have lost it, the glow of its expiring flame. Then, when the glow has fled from even the loftiest pinna-cles of ice, it can be seen reddening the clouds that are higher yet, till they look like the garments of angels flung off upon the golden sky. These also lose their light ere long; but if we could ascend beyond every cloud, and beyond the shadow of earth itself, we should have the full sunshine always without a break.—G. H. Knight.

The "Ballad of Christ on the Water."

Miss Marion Couthany Smith, author of the poem, "Ballad of Christ on the Water," appearing in our issue of January 12, has requested us to credit the poem to the Youth's Companion, in which it first appeared. Although we do not make a practice of crediting short poems to periodicals as well as to their authors, we are very glad to comply with her request.—Editor Family Department.

Order My Footsteps.

Order my footsteps by Thy Word,
And make my heart sincere;
Let sin have no dominion, Lord,
But keep my conscience clear.

Make me to walk in Thy commands;
'Tis a delightful road:
Nor let my head, or heart, or hands,
Offend against my God.

When Toby Ran Away.

Toby was the old pussy-cat that had been in the Bates family ever since Marjorie Bates had been, so that made him seven years old.

He never went on trips out in the alleys as the other cats in the neighborhood did, probably because he was so contented and happy at home. Why should a cat roam when he had a dish all his own for his warm milk, marked "For a good Pussy," and a large doll's bed near the living-room fireplace in which to sleep? And he had ribbons that were becoming, and collars to match—yellow and green and red—to look pretty with his maltese coat.

When the spring came the professor and his wife moved out the house next door, and a family with children came in. The Bateses were not quite sure that they were glad about this.

"There is the gate in the wall that the professor made," Grandfather Bates said. "Perhaps those new children will come through and get into my flower-beds."

"And that new little girl has short hair. She looks like a tomboy," Marjorie said, "I am very sure that I don't want to play with her."

So the new family moved in, and the new little girl looked over the fence wistfully, and the new little boy whistled across it. But Marjorie just looked the other way and played on the other side of the garden.

Then no one thought any more about the new neighbors, but one day Toby, who had never gone away before in all his seven years, was missing.

Marjorie called him, and grandfather went up and down the back streets looking for old Toby. He even went to the hospital for animals, thinking that Toby might have been fighting and been taken there. Cook rattled the shears with which she cut up Toby's meat. He always came running at that sound, but this time he did not. Toby had disappeared most completely. It was very strange, and very sad. The whole family missed him.

Late in the afternoon of the day on which Toby Bates ran away Marjorie heard a voice from the garden next door. The new little girl was speaking.

"Isn't he dear," she was saying, "lying here in the doll's gocart, just as if he was a baby? He likes to be dressed up, doesn't he? Oh! I do think something alive is much more fun to play with than dolls."

Marjorie could not resist opening the gate in the wall just a crack and looking through. And there was Toby, dressed in a large doll's nightgown, a ruffled cap, and riding up and down the garden next door in the doll's gocart. His eyes were closed, for he was enjoying it, but Marjorie knew him by his paws that stuck out of the sleeves of the gown.

The new little girl saw Marjorie then, and heard her exclaim, "O Toby! We thought that you were lost."

"No, indeed, he isn't lost," the new little girl said, "and we were going to bring him home to supper, but he was so much company for us, and we are lonesome. He came over to call on us, just like a real neighbor, early this morning, and he has been here ever since."

She did not look like a tomboy, and she was ever so gentle with Toby. Toby himself hardly looked at Marjorie, he was so contented, and Marjorie repeated to herself the new little girl's words—"just like a real neighbor."

"Won't you come over with Toby and have supper with us?" Marjorie asked, opening the gate wide to let her wheel Toby through.—Picture Story Paper.

The Legend of the White Chrysanthemums.

Long, long ago in a plain not far from the city of Kyoto, at that time the capital of Japan, two little blossoms grew side by side, one the color of bright new gold and the other a pure white.

Straight and tall the stems grew, and wider and wider the little blossoms opened, while they happily listened to all that the sunshine and the whispering breezes could tell them.

By and by little Goldy grew discontented and said she wished she could go to the great city where there were so many beautiful things. But her white sister said: "No, no; we are placed here, so here we ought to stay with the flowers and the grasses that love us."

But Goldy was not convinced; and when one day a man came and looked at the two flowers and said, "This yellow flower is just the one I need for my collection. I will take it home with me," Goldy was too happy to care, though her little white sister wept with loneliness.

"Please take me, too," begged the little flower in sorrow. But the gardener said, "No, I have plenty of white and do not need you," and went off without her, carrying her little sister home.

Goldy was so cared for and petted that she grew large and handsome, so that one would not know her for the same blossom. Sometimes she thought of her sister, but she never wanted to go back to comfort her.

In the meantime the poor, lonely little flower, after crying a while, thought: "This will not do. I must be bright and cheery even if I am sad." So she turned a smiling face to the grasses and flowers who tried to comfort her.

Ever so many days went by, when at last a very great man, who was traveling along the road, stopped at the door of the gardener's house and asked if he knew where he could find a white chrysanthemum with sixteen petals. The gardener did not know, but he showed him his handsome Goldy, whose petals were just that number.

"No, no," said the man, "it must be white, and it must be in its natural state," and he went off disappointed.

Now, it so happened that his road passed right by the spot where the lonely white flower stood. As she heard footsteps approaching the tears stood on her petals, for she remembered that some one who walked like that had taken away her sister and had not wanted her.

But the great man stopped as he drew near in his palanquin and in a tone of joyful surprise said: "Why, here at last is just what I've been seeking so long!" And he lifted the dear little plant very gently from the ground, saying: "Go with me, little flower; I need you in my palace."

"But I am only a poor flower of the fields," she answered modestly. "How can I be of use to you?"

"You are pure white and have sixteen perfect petals. You are just the one I have been searching for for months," he told her. And she went with him, her heart filled with happy wonder that she could be wanted in a palace.

Of all that befell the white chrysanthemum after this, I can stop now to tell you only this: she was joyfully received in the palace and came to be the best loved flower in the empire, even by the great emperor himself, and it was all because she was a perfect little flower that could be brave and cheery in misfortune. Do you suppose the same thing would be as true of children as of flowers? I think it would.—From Boys and Girls of Sunrise Land.

A Question.

M. G. Connell.

"Come, Mooly," said Fred, "I should like to be told

How it is your calf, only three days old
Can stand all alone in the glad sunshine,
And will soon run all 'round this meadow so fine.

While my baby sis, who is six months or more,
Has never set footstep out on the floor."

The cow looked up with her gentle brown eyes

Which seemed to express a vague sort of surprise.

"My dear little Freddie, and cannot you see

'Tis as plain as the leaves on that mulberry tree?

Look! Count! my calf has four legs in full view,

While your baby at home has, I'm sure, only two."

A Clever Spider.

Soon after breakfast one sunny morning Marian heard her young friend Dorothy at the door calling for her to come out and play.

"Hello, Dorothy!" she answered. "I can come just as soon as I finish dusting this room for mother."

"If you will give me a dust-cloth I'll help you dust," offered her little neighbor. "Then we can play all the sooner."

So the two girls went to work together, Marian dusting the window-sill and Dorothy taking the nearest chair.

"Oh, Dorothy," Marian exclaimed suddenly, "look here! A new spider-web in the window! Come and see the cunning spider sitting in the middle of it."

"Oh, I wonder if it will do the trick my daddy makes them do for me," Dorothy cried as she dropped her duster and ran to the window. "Wait a minute; I'll make it do the trick."

With a piece of paper in her hands, Dorothy gently tore the spider's web, taking care not to destroy it, but only to break away a small section or two.

Marian could not help an exclaima-tion of fright as the spider darted out of its web; but it did not run far. It stopped on the window-sill close to the web, standing so motionless that if the girls had not been watching they would have seen nothing but a brown speck in the wood. It certainly did not look like a spider.

"Is that all?" asked Marian, disappointed. I thought it was going to do a trick."

"Just you wait," replied Dorothy. "She is frightened now, and my daddy says this is her way of hiding from her enemies, by standing so still they won't notice her. As soon as she thinks she is safe she will come out."

The two girls stood almost as still as the spider, waiting, watching for the tiny brown spot to move. All at once they saw it stir, then dart quickly back into the web. After running about to see how much harm had been done, it stopped a moment as if to think the matter over. Then she ran swiftly down one side of the torn place, spinning a web as she went. So quietly did she mend the web that the girls could not see how it was done.

"Why, the clever little creature!" cried Marian. "She has mended the hole that you made. I didn't suppose a spider knew enough to do that."

"They do, though. That is what my daddy showed me. I could hardly believe it when I first saw one."

"My mother says," remarked Marian, "that it is a good housekeeper who mends a tear as soon as it is made. I think this spider must be a very good house-keeper—better than I am sometimes."

"What shall we do with her now?"

"Let's open the window and push her out. Then she can make a new web outdoors."

So they did. Then the two girls hurried to finish their dusting so that they could run out and play together in the sunshine; and Marian's mother, who had been listening, thought the spider was not the only good little house-keeper she knew.—Selected.

Paying Back.

It was early dawn and so delightfully cool and perfect for sleeping that Emily Hill was annoyed when a handful of pebbles made her go to the window to see what could be rattling on her screen. "Come down, you lazy bones!" said Ruth Tompkins from the lawn below. "The idea of sleeping on this perfect morning! I have old Doll and the light wagon, and I'm going on an errand. Get into your clothes, and take a piece of bread and butter in your hand! Come on!"

"Where are you going, and what for?" asked Emily sleepily.

"I'm going out to Cope's pasture for daisies for Mrs. Maxwell's luncheon," said Ruth. "Hurry up! I can't wait long. I want them while the dew is fresh on them."

"Did she ask you to go?" persisted Emily.

"No; but come on! She has done so many things for us that I thought perhaps she'd love to get some return in the shape of little attentions that we can give," explained Ruth. "Are you coming, or are you not?"

"I guess I'll stay here," said Emily. "Daisies won't pay back the lovely things Mrs. Maxwell has done for us. And besides—"

But Ruth had bounced indignantly into the light wagon and was rattling down the street before the sentence was finished.

"The idea of Emily being so lazy!" she said aloud, though there was no one to hear. "I'm afraid I can't get them all picked and in the house before the hot sun comes out."

It was a very warm, red-faced perspiring maiden who drove up the back way to the Maxwell home two hours later with her beautiful load. The daisies were in their prime, and their white-and-yellow glow seemed the very essence of early summer to the delighted woman who came out to see them. "My dear child! How could you dream that I wanted daisies!" exclaimed Mrs. Maxwell. "The members of our missionary society pledged themselves to do without some luxury to make a special offering to our representative in India, and I had been planning all along to do without flowers from the city as my sacrifice, but there seemed to be nobody with time enough to go for the daisies. I waited until this morning thinking I would get some chance myself, and was just about to telephone to Bowers & Baker to send out some roses by the truck when I saw you drive in. Just think, dear, the very thing I was wishing for! It was like your thoughtful self to guess it."

So the missionary society had a very substantial offering from Mrs. Maxwell, and the house looked just as pretty as if expensive hot-house roses had been used. In fact, the city guests at the luncheon said they had never seen anything so beautiful as the great baskets overflowing with the sweet country flowers.

"Oh, my dear," called Mrs. Maxwell that afternoon as Ruth and Emily were passing, "your flowers attracted so much attention that I must tell you about it. Mrs. Gay begged a big armload of them for the children in the hospital and Mrs. Tanner said they were the loveliest she had ever seen. I thank you so much for your thoughtfulness."

"It was a great pleasure to me," said Ruth simply. "You have given me so many delightful trips in your automobile that I wanted to do some little thing for you."

As they walked on Emily said, "Well, if I had known she really wanted such common things as daisies, I'd have been willing to go with you. I never dreamed she could use country weeds for her luncheon."

"They may be weeds," said Ruth stoutly, "but they are very beautiful ones. If I can't pay back with big things I can with little ones that show my good will and appreciation until I can have some bigger favors to give."—Junior World.

When Company Comes.

When you're all by yourself

You may play as you will—

Play storekeep, or railroad,

Or grind at the mill.

But when company comes

It is nicer to say:

"My dear little friend,

What would you like to play?"

When you're all by yourself

You may play as you will—

Play dollies, or book-store,

Or run down the hill.

But when company comes

It's the very best game

To make them so happy

They'll be glad that they came.

Famous Boys.

A woman fell off the dock in Italy. Not one of the men dared to jump in after her; but a boy struck the water almost as soon as she, and managed to keep her up until stronger arms got hold of her. Everybody said the boy was very daring, very kind, very quick, but also very reckless. The boy was Garibaldi, and if you will read his life you will find these were just his traits all through—that he was so alert that nobody could tell when he would make an attack with his red-shirted soldiers, so indiscreet sometimes as to make his fellow patriots wish he was in Guinea, but also so brave and magnanimous that all the world except tyrants, loved to hear and talk about him.

A boy used to crush flowers to get their color, and painted the white side of his father's cottage in Tyrol with all sorts of pictures, which the mountaineer gazed at as wonderful. He was the great artist, Titian.

An old painter watched a little fellow who amused himself making drawings of his pots and brushes, easel and tools, and said "That boy will beat me some day." So he did, for he was Michael Angelo.

A German boy was reading a blood-and-thunder novel. Right in the midst of it he said to himself: "Now this will never do. I get too much excited over it; I can't study so well after it. So here it goes!" And he flung the book into the river. He was Fichte, the great philosopher.—Our Dumb Animals.

The Sacrifice Hit.

Every boy who plays baseball knows what the sacrifice hit is. There is a runner on first base and a man at the bat. The man at the bat hits the ball down in front of him so that he is put out, but while he is being put out the other runner goes to second base. That is what we call a sacrifice hit. It is sacrificing yourself so that the other fellow can get along. I have known boys who never wanted to make sacrifice hits. They were so anxious to make a long hit themselves, maybe a three-base hit or a home run, that they never gave a thought to the other fellow and the team. Such boys never make good ball players. If you want to be a good player you must always be willing to sacrifice yourself to help the other men along.

Now do you know that life is just a big game, and no one ever learns to play that game as it ought to be played till he has learned to sacrifice for the good of others?

Some one told me of a little boy who had a dog he loved very much. This little dog was learning to bark, and if you have ever had a little dog you know that when he is learning to bark he practices all the time. You might as well try to stop a little dog from barking as to stop a little boy from running. You can't do it.

Next door to where that little boy lived was a sick woman, and the barking of the puppy was very annoying to her. The little boy found out about it. He thought and thought for a whole day, and then he went to his father and asked him if he would please sell the little dog. His father said, "Why Robert, I thought you loved him?" "I do, but his barking makes Mrs. Brown sick, so I think we had better send him away."

I know that it was a hard thing for the boy to give up his dog, but he did it to help some one else along. He was making a sacrifice hit.—Exchange.

Instead of telling people to give up things, we are safer to tell them to "seek ye first His kingdom," and then they will get new things and better things, and the old things will drop off of themselves. This is what is meant by the new heart.—Selected.

to wiping out the debt on the organ of the church. The rector of this parish, Rev. W. W. Memminger, has been elected President of the Evangelical Ministers' Association for 1924.

The Church of the Epiphany, Atlanta, has just installed a pipe organ in the auditorium of its parish house which at present is being used for services until the new church is built. The organ, however, was built expressly for the parish house by Henry Pilcher and Sons, and will remain there after the church is erected. This parish has recently called an Assistant for the rector, and a large community program has been outlined for the coming year.

Trinity Church, Columbus, has recently had the privilege of a visit from Dr. Robert Patton, and the Rev. Lewis G. Wood, who presented the Program of the Church to the congregation in a very forceful manner.

The Treasurer of the Appleton Church Home, Macon, the diocesan orphanage, has reported that work has started on the new orphanage to be located on the outskirts of the city of Macon. The buildings are to be completed by the time the diocesan council meets in St. Paul's Church, Macon, May 12, 1924. The cost of the orphanage will be $60,000.

Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, Field Secretary of the Department of Religious Education of the Fourth Province spent January 4 and 5 at Trinity Church, Columbus, in conference on Church School Methods with the local workers. This parish was instrumental in getting the city churches to fill over 1,400 stockings to be presented to the poor of the town, especially those who would have no other Christmas cheer from other sources.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Fifty-ninth Annual Convention of the Diocese assembled in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday evening, January 22. After a short service, the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., delivered his address. An offering was taken up for the Diocesan Missionary Work. At the close of the service Bishop Mann called the Convention to order for the purpose of organization. The Rev. T. J. Bigham was elected Secretary, and appointed the Rev. J. E. Diggles, of Tarentum as his assistant. At the suggestion of the Rev. Dr. Hills, President of the Standing Committee, a telegram was sent to Bishop Garland, congratulating him upon his election as Bishop of Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Dr. Hills presented the report of the Nominating Committee, and the Rev. Dr. Shero presented the report of the Committee on Canons, after which the Convention recessed until nine o'clock on Wednesday. At 9:30 Bishop and Mrs. Mann held an informal reception for the members of the Convention and their wives, in the assembly room of the parish house.

On Wednesday morning at nine o'clock, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Mann, and at ten the Convention resumed its business sessions. Reports were received and read from the Standing Committee, the Diocesan Council, the Board of Trustees for the Diocese, the Departments of Religious Education and of Social Service. The election was held with the following result:

Executive Secretary—The Rev. Homer A. Flint, Ph. D.

Chancellor of the Diocese—George C. Burgwin, Esq.

Registrar—The Rev. C. C. Durkee.

Standing Committee: Clerical—the Rev. Drs. Hills, Budlong, Howell and Shero. Lay—Messrs. C. S. Shoemaker, Nathan P. Hyndman, Thomas J. Danner and Howard H. McClintic.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: Clerical—the Rev. Messrs. H. A. Flint, Ph. D., Thomas J. Bigham, William H. Anthony and Milton S. Kanaga. Laymen—Messrs. M. C. Adams, T. J. Danner, George H. Snowden and Harvey H. Smith.

Diocesan Council: Clerical—the Rev. Dr. Percy G. Kammerer and the Rev. F. O. Johnson. Lay—Messrs. Southard Hay, John A. Lathwood, George P. Rhodes and Allen B. Wells.

Under a new Canon adopted to bring the Diocese of Pittsburgh into conformity with the practice of the National Church, six Examining Chaplains were nominated by the Bishop to the Convention, for approval, the same to constitute a Board of Examining Chaplains for the year. A Canon was adopted creating a Diocesan Board of Architecture, to which all plans for churches, parish house and rectories

MRS. VIRGINIA FERGUSON LANDERKIN Resolutions.

Whereas the divine wisdom of God has seen fit to remove from our midst our friend and co-worker, MRS. VIRGINIA FERGUSON LANDERKIN, we, the members of the Industrial Chapter of Holy Trinity Church, do thus formally express our appreciation of all her efficient service, and the happy, cheerful example set us during her term as president and vice-president of the Industrial Chapter. She was always deeply interested in all work pertaining to the Chapter, and was most loyal to the Church. She will be greatly missed.

The sympathy of the Chapter is extended to the family, and the secretary is instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family, and to cause the same to be published in the Southern Churchman.

MRS. ANNIE BEACH SMEDES ROOT.

Entered into her Father's home on January 3rd, at Raleigh, N. C., ANNIE BEACH SMEDES, beloved wife of Charles Root. The following children survive: Mrs. W. W. Robards, Dr. Aldert Smedes Root and Mrs. W. W. Vass.

Bishop Joseph Blount Cheshire says of her, "A consecrated Christian, devoted above all else to the worship of the church, she perpetuated in this aspect of her life those who had gone before her. Her father, the Rev. Aldert Smedes, D. D., and Dr. Bennett Smedes, her brother, will never be forgotten as the founder and perpetuator of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, and her mother, Sarah Pierce Lyell, the hardly less important influence. She was the niece of the Rev. John Smedes, D. D., principal of St. Augustine Normal School, the granddaughter of the Rev. Thomas Lyell, distinguished Rector of Christ Church, New York, and the Rev. Abram Beach, of Trinity Church, New York, a more remote ancestor, was among the most prominent of the clergy who organized the Episcopal Church in this country. Many years of intimate association and affectionate friendship, continued to the very last, have left upon the mind of the writer the strong impression of a singularly pure, gentle, unselfish, generous and devout spirit, happy in the love of family and friends, responsive to the call of all social relationships, loving the service of God and His Church and smiling in His face when He called her to Him."

The funeral services were held at Christ Church, Raleigh, January 4th, at 3:30 P. M., conducted by the Rt. Rev. Jos. B. Cheshire, Rev. M. A. Baker, rector Christ Church, and the Rev. W. W. Wag, of St. Mary's School.

to be erected in Missions of the Diocese, are to be submitted before being entered upon. And parishes are to have the privilege of consulting the Board with regard to any buildings to be erected within their borders.

The report from the Saint Margaret Memorial Hospital showed the year 1923 to have been the most successful one in the history of that institution. Other reports made were from the Woman's Auxiliary, the Church Home, the Laymen's Missionary League, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, etc.

A committee consisting of twenty-four members, eight clergymen, eight laymen and eight members of the Woman's Auxiliary, was appointed to take into consideration the feasibility of increasing the Permanent Episcopal Fund, which is now somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000 to two or three hundred thousand dollars; and if found expedient, to present plans for the inauguration of such a project.

Increases in the salaries of Diocesan Missionaries were approved, the minimum salary for an unmarried Priest to be $2,000, and for a married Priest $2,400 and a house. Invitations for the meeting of the Sixtieth Convention were received from the rectors of St. John's and Trinity churches, the decision to be left to the Bishop and Standing Committee.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

Second Convention of Woman's Auxiliary.

The second Convention of the Upper South Carolina Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary opened in St. John's Church, Winnsboro, on Tuesday evening, January 22, after a shortened form of Evening Prayer, with the President, Mrs. Wm. P. Cornell, in the chair. A most hearty welcome was extended the Convention by the rector of the parish, the Rev. W. P. Peyton, and by the President of the local branch, Mrs. Morris Lyles. The gracious response was made by Mrs. John T. Sloan, of Trinity Church, Columbia.

The request that the Upper Diocese share in placing a Memorial Communion Service to some devastated Church in Japan in memory of the first President of the undivided Diocese, Mrs. Robert Wilson, of Charleston, was acted upon favorably.

Miss Marianna P. Ford, the Provincial Vice-President of the Girls' Friendly Society made a heartfelt appeal to the Woman's Auxiliary for their cooperation in the work among the girlhood of the Church. The Bishop told most graphically of the needs and opportunities of the Diocese and was assured by the President of the constant loyalty of the Auxiliary women.

The United Thank Offering Service was held on Wednesday morning. During this service the Bishop spoke on "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." The United Thank Offering amounted to $1,916.38. As the goal set by Miss Singleton for the current triennium was $5,000, it is felt that the present offering for the first year of the life of the Auxiliary in the "Baby" Diocese, is very encouraging.

The annual address of the President showed life and growth in the Auxiliary in many ways.

Three new volunteers presented their names at this Convention. Miss June Taylor, now a senior nurse in the Anderson County Hospital, for the field of Liberia; Miss Mary Noble Smith of Greenville, a Junior in the Pennsylvania Woman's Medical College, probably going to China, and Miss Bealor Ravenel, of Clemson College, a senior student at Winthrop was present and offered her life for the Latin-American field.

Miss Tillotson made a wonderful address on Religious Education and Mrs. Alexander Long, of Rock Hill, made a report of the Winthrop College.

The reports of all the departments showed great advance and the chairmen are to be congratulated on their fine work.

On Wednesday afternoon, in the absence of Mrs. T. H. Fisher, Mrs. Cornell made the report for the Ramsaur Memorial Fund and stated that the reasonable expectations from the Province and contributing friends already amounts to $9,750. The amount in the Provincial Treasury to date is $3,286.30. Of this sum Upper South Carolina has already given the sum of $628.51. The Rev. Mr. Haines, in his address, paid high honor to Mr. Ramsaur.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK.

in this statement is this: That the members of the Brotherhood, as members of the League, will do all in their power to keep the spiritual side from being submerged and will use their experience and their Brotherhood commitment, to teach others in the League how to do this personal work, and to that, no one can take exception. But some of the Young People at the conferences have already anticipated the difficulty of the delegation of any central responsibilities to specialized groups.

The question of "split loyalty" is most vital in the League's life. If this is the best method of coordinating young people's activities and developing a finer Churchmanship than we have ever known before, the League idea must become more and more prominent. Water seeks its own level, and a place of commanding importance will be won only on the basis of achievement. But Service Leagues and Fellowships must keep before their members individually their whole responsibility, or the movement will degenerate into organization selfishness and lose the splendid spiritual momentum which it gained in the early months of its inception. * * * * *

The Program in the Hand Book of the National Council arranged for February 17—Septuagesima—has as its topic "The Church and Science." Proper treatment of this subject involves greater maturity than most of our Leagues have, and the suggestion is made that some subject dealing with "Vocational Guidance" be substituted for it. (See Southern Churchman, January 12.)

sionary service was held, during which the Rev. Mr. Joyner spoke on the work of Grace Hospital, Morganton, and Mr. Haines on "The Call to a Great Opportunity." The offering of nearly $60 was given to Mr. Haines to use as he thinks best in the Liberian field. An appropriation of $25 was made to the work in Morganton, as an evidence of the interest of this Diocese in the mountain work.

Thursday was consumed with matters pertaining to the revision of the Constitution and the general work of the Auxiliary.

A second splendid address and discussion group was made and held by Miss Tillotson; a talk on our work at Graniteville was made by Miss Ramsaur; and an appeal for cooperation in the work among the Young People of the Diocese was presented by the Field Worker, Mrs. F. N. Challen.

One of the best and most telling features of the entire three days' program was the presentation of the Bishop Tuttle Memorial, the Auxiliary Specials, by the Chairman, Mrs. John W. Arrington, Jr., of Greenville, and her able assistants. Mrs. Arrington presented a clever and appealing little playlet which she had written herself and for the reproduction of which in the Parish Branches, she is prepared to furnish all necessary material in printed form.

The elections resulted as follows:

President, Mrs. James R. Cain, of Columbia; Secretary, Miss S. B. Arrington; Treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Long; United Thank Offering Custodian, Mrs. A. P. Gaillard.

The Convention was adjourned with a very impressive Consecration service led by the Rev. W. P. Peyton.

For every phase of the Convention the Auxiliary extends its thanks and appreciation to St. John's Winnsboro. The third Convention of the Diocesan Branch will be held in the Church of the Resurrection, Greenwood.

J. O. M. C.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

The annual Council, preceded by a conference of the clergy on Tuesday at the Church of the Advent, opened at St. Mary's Church, Birmingham, Wednesday morning, January 23, with Holy Communion, Bishop Beckwith celebrant; Bishop-Coadjutor McDowell, reading the Epistle. The sessions, which continued into Friday afternoon, were very busy, enthusiastic and spirited. The attendance was normal.

Each Bishop presented a report, showing continuous activity and strenuous work throughout the year.

Amongst important changes were the creation of a Diocesan Executive Council, merging departments, as the Board of Missions, said committee to deal with questions that hitherto have had to wait for the annual Council; but necessarily, with limited powers and no legislative authority. The five convocations comprising the diocese become three, in the expectation of promoting efficiency.

A commission on Church arts and architecture was created, to which all plans for building and improvements must be submitted.

The Standing Committee on Canons presented a revision of the whole body of Diocesan Canons and Constitution, which recommendations were after notably calm debate, adopted with very slight amendment.

An improved method of indicting a clergyman for trial and for selecting an impartial ecclesiastical court was adopted. The opinion was freely expressed upon the floor of the Council that this new canon will make it extremely difficult to place a clergyman on trial for any cause other than crime or immorality.

It was resolved to proceed with the building of a new home for the Bishop-Coadjutor, to cost approximately $35,000, the site, valued at $7,500, having been given by Mr. Robert Jenkinson, of Birmingham, a year ago.

Work on the plant at Auburn, the seat of the Polytechnic, was ordered begun, to cost about $50,000.

Miss Augusta Martin presented to the body in person her report of a six-months-old work "behind the mountains" of Northern Alabama, in the midst of pitiful human conditions, to further which between $2,000 and $3,000 was subscribed on the spot by individuals. Miss Martin, after several years of compelling self-sacrificing work in Alabama, is acclaimed the ideal woman missionary. Earning her own living as a teacher, she has been herself the most munificent contributor in money as well as in every other way, to her self-chosen welfare work amongst destitute, pagan and hopeless children.

Financial reports were encouraging all down the line. Characteristic of the spirit of the N.-W. C., may be quoted the case of Greensboro, the secretary of which parish sending in the full quota, "no rector, but going strong."

Several parishes report: "Quota over-topped." And with a better detailed system evolved out of experience, and a very much earlier start, also the suggestion of experience, 1924 is expected to accomplish more. There was ample discussion of prospects. The Treasurer reported, "All diocesan missions paid in full every month," and their average stipend is what it has been these years, $2,400 and rectory, with, in some cases, an automobile.

The Woman's Auxiliary raised $11,000 odd, and is in "fine fettle."

Dr. Patton gave a wonderful address on Thursday night. Cumulative throughout, to the accompaniment of successive hammer strokes that nailed point by point with masterly precision.

Three candidates for Holy Orders were present, one from the Presbyterian ministry, one ex-president of a college from the Dutch Reform, and the third, one of our best laymen in early mid-life.

The Council meets next year at An-niston.

Officers were elected as follows:

Secretary—Rev. E. C. Seamon, Gadsden.

Treasurer—Mr. R. H. Cochrane, Tuscaloosa.

Standing Committee—The Rev. Messrs. E. W. Gamble, O. D. Randolph, Richard Wilkinson, Messrs. Henry Whitfield, Algernon Blair and Dr. W. B. Hall, Selma.

Delegates to Provincial Synod—The Rev. G. C. Tucker, the Rev. E. C. Seamon, the Rev. P. N. McDonald, the Rev. M. S. Barnwell, the Rev. A. D. Ellis, the Rev. O. D. Randolph, Mr. F. E. Feltus, Mr. Algernon Blair, Mr. H. J. Whitfield, Mr. Frank Stollenwerck, Mr. W. B. Edmundson and Dr. W. B. Hall.

Successful Healing Mission.

Henry C. Blandford, layman missionary of healing, of Emsley, Ala., has completed another successful Christian Healing Mission, January 6-20, at St. Andrew's, Fort Scott, Kan., the Rev. Sumner Walters, rector. Mr. Blandford held a mission in St. John's, Mich-ita, the Rev. H. Clarkson Attwater, rector, for the two weeks beginning January 23. The missionary has awakened a steadily increasing interest in the work by his thorough knowledge of the field from both a scientific and Christian standpoint. Registration of non-Church people have been almost twice as great as of Church people. A weekly service of healing has been instituted at Fort Scott, with religious and scientific study, intercession for absentees and the laying-on of hands, under the leadership of the rector.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

A Healing Mission was recently held in St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, by the Rev. R. B. W. Bell, of Denver, assisted by the rector, the Rev. S. E. West and seven of the clergy of the district. So large were the crowds that thronged the church, that an afternoon service was devoted to the healing of children. Mr. Bell conducted conferences for the attending clergy in the mornings. Many cures were reported. The Bishop came for the last day of the mission and confirmed a class of twenty-eight, the fruits of the mission, together with forty persons who received Holy Baptism. The follow-up work of the mission necessitated the detail of the Rev. W. H. Daniels of Thermopolis to assist the rector for a month.

Governor Ross, of Wyoming, was the speaker at the dinner of the Triangle Club, the men's organization of Trinity Church, Thermopolis.

EDWARD L. GOODWIN

The death of the Rev. Edward L. Goodwin, D. D., means a loss to the Church in Virginia and especially to this paper, which those who knew him best will most acutely realize. He belonged to a family which has been notable in the extraordinary number of men whom it has given in generation after generation to the ministry of the Church. By inheritance, by intimate personal association, and by his own instinctive sympathy, Dr. Goodwin understood and embodied in himself all that was best in the traditions of Virginia Churchmanship, as few other men have done. He was a careful and thorough historian, who had made himself a recognized authority in the origins of the Virginia Church, its status in colonial times and the exceedingly difficult readjustments which followed the end of the Revolution. He looked to the past and drew from it the enduring lessons which could be read by a reverent and discriminating regard. But that soil of history which his assiduous knowledge cultivated, was cultivated not for its own sake, but in order that from it there might grow in living fruitfulness the life of the Church for today and for tomorrow. Dr. Goodwin's heart was in every cause which helped to make the Church a present power. The great missionary advance of our generation, for example, found in him always a champion and a spokesman.

In the General Convention to which repeatedly he was sent as a representative from the Diocese of Virginia, he assumed, without any aggressive effort, but simply by the quiet authority of his accurate knowledge and his fine spirit, a leadership recognized by men of all schools of thought. When in 1919 he did not go to the Convention, the editor of the Living Church expressed in his editorials the very great loss sustained by the whole Convention in his absence, and there was rejoicing not only among the men who knew him best, but by all who knew and valued the elements of leadership in the whole Convention, when in 1922, notwithstanding a long illness which had greatly weakened him, Dr. Goodwin was able to make the trip across the continent to Portland and day by day to be in his seat. As a member of the Committee on Constitution and Canons, he was one of the men whose quiet contribution was most steadily felt in the important legislation of the House of Deputies.

It has been many months now since he was able to come to the office of the Southern Churchman, and it was hard for those who came in and out of the office to realize that it was the same place, when that gracious figure with the dignity and courtesy of an older generation was no longer there. He had succeeded in the editorial chair the brilliant and witty William Meade Clark. In temperament the two men were very different, but in their devotion to the same ideals for the Church at large and for this whole paper, they were alike. They made it express the evangelical piety, the human warmth, and the simplicity of religious emphasis, which have long been congenial to the spirit of that which has spread far and wide as "Virginia Churchmanship." What the Southern Churchman received from Dr. Goodwin, as it had received from Dr. Clark before him, is an abiding heritage; and through all the changing thought of the changing years, those who conduct the paper now can have no higher ambition than to the keep the paper true to the sound and sweet ideals which Edward L. Goodwin, like his predecessors, represented.

THE LEGACY OF WOODROW WILSON

In the past ten days, not only America, but the world, has passed in review before its mind the meaning of the life of Woodrow Wilson. From all corners of the earth have come the tributes which men spontaneously paid to him. The passions of the war have not, of course, altogether cooled, and in some quarters there have been echoes of the bitter resentment which some groups, as for example many men in Germany, visited upon him as the symbol of their disappointed hopes in these weary and calamitous post-war years. A still greater number have reflected a sense of the tragedy of Mr. Wilson's failure, in that the great policies toward which he would have led the nation were, for the time at least, repudiated, and his own life went down from the pinnacles of the sun to the long twilight of his latter years. But blended with these minor notes and rising above them in a vast impressive chorus, are the expressions from far and near, from the lowly and from the great, that Woodrow Wilson has lifted up in the world an ideal for world peace, which, in spite of temporary vicissitudes can never be removed or lost.

He has challenged the conscience of the world to a better effort for a constructive building of an international order that shall settle human affairs by counsel and reason and in a spirit of brotherhood, instead of in recklessness and passion and war.

No man can anticipate the verdict of history. We must wait and see where the years shall place Woodrow Wilson in the great cathedral of the world's ultimate recognition. But for our part, we believe that the words spoken by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise in a thronged memorial service in Madison Square Garden, New York, on the day of Mr. Wilson's funeral, expressed the truth. He said that it was not Mr. Wilson who failed, but America that failed. The nation was not ready to rise to the pitch of imaginative effort and of steady constructive unselfishness which, after the war was over, might have built an ordered world. But the torch which he lighted will burn on. The essential challenge which was his, no matter through what personal limitations, will haunt the spirit of America till some day it is fully answered.

THE SOUTH AND THE NEGRO

Few men have been rendering in these present years so vital a service for the Christian working out of race relationships, primarily in the South, but also in all the nations, as has Mr. Will W. Alexander, Director of the Commission on Inter-Racial Cooperation. At Atlantic City last month, he delivered an address before the Home Missions Council in North America, on the recent Negro migration from the South. We wish that we had room in the pages of the paper for the entire address, but as that seems unlikely in the near future, we can at least share part of its message by quotations here in these editorial columns.

"Since the final effect of the migration will not be apparent for many years to come, the most one could report is the effect which the migration is having on certain tendencies which were already operating in the South before the migration reached a volume sufficient to be noticed.

"There has always been discussion of race relations on the part of most Southern newspapers and many of our public men, but the migrations have brought the race question to the fore. In the last few months newspapers, religious journals, church gatherings, civic clubs and individual groups throughout the South have given more time to the discussion of this question than to any other. Any man who had anything to say on the subject could get a hearing. The facts regarding the Negro's treatment, his progress, his aspirations, have been made known widely. It is interesting to note that in most of this discussion free admission has been made that Negroes in Southern communities have labored under handicaps which are unnecessary and unjust and which justice-loving men must join in removing. This discussion is still going on and will go on for some time. If those who are interested in better race relations will make proper use of the opportunity, this general interest may be so directed as greatly to improve present racial situations. This Southwide discussion has undoubtedly been one of the influences that have halted the growth of the Ku Klux Klan.

"College presidents and eminent educational leaders have pioneered in developing better race relations in the South. In the past they have usually worked at this as individuals, but today Southern colleges are tackling this work as a part of their regular tasks and about seventy Southern colleges are now giving courses in some phase of race relations. The professors who offer these courses report that students are keenly interested and ready to face the question with open-mindedness and sympathy. Heretofore an occasional Negro has been asked to speak in Southern white colleges. Today such speakers are welcomed in many Southern colleges. Professor Isaac Fisher, Dr. George Carver and many other Negro educators are among the most popular speakers that visit these white institutions. In two of the states there is a definite effort to introduce into the grade and high schools some course that will give to white children in their early years a proper attitude to their colored fellow citizens. The migrations will make it very much easier to get school authorities to consider such projects. * * *

"The migration has stimulated the activities of state and general welfare and educational agencies. At least four of the states have recently added Negro workers to their departments of health. The improvement of Negro schools has been greater this year than in any other in the history of the South. State Legislatures that have been indifferent to appeals for State supported institutions for delinquent and defective Negro children are now more open minded, and since it is possible to marshal considerable public sentiment in favor of these enterprises in most of the states, the next few years will see a very great improvement in this regard. In one state, chances seem good for a state supported institution for the care of feeble minded Negro children. At present there is not a single institution of this kind supported by any State in the South. Generations of feeble minded perpetuate themselves and the crimes which their presence has made the most dramatic aspect of Southern race relations have largely dominated the thinking of whites regarding the entire Negro race.

"The lynching record for the nation in 1923 is about half what it was for 1922. The number of instances in which lynchings have been prevented by mob resistance on the part of officers is very significant. All of this has been the occasion for widespread comment from editors and other leaders of public opinion. Lynching is the most tragic aspect of denial to the Negro of proper consideration by the courts, but because of the ignorance and poverty of most Negroes the injustice which they suffer, along with the other ignorant and poor men in the lower petty courts in many sections, are almost as great a menace to their general development as the lynchings. In the industrial centers, particularly, thoughtful and influential white leaders are saying that this situation must be remedied. A movement for justice in the petty courts is led by the ex-governor in an effort to work out a better system for the petty courts of that state. Nothing will be effective that stops short of an almost complete replacing of the present system. It is almost altogether inefficient and bad." * * *

Then, as the climax of his message, Mr. Alexander spoke these words which call to the finest thought and idealism that the Church can furnish:

"There is going on in race relations at this time two polar but vastly potential movements; one is a recrudescence of race hatred and bigotry; the other is a rising tide of racial appreciation and good will. The next ten years will undoubtedly see the country dominated by one of the two. If it is to be the latter, the Church must put itself aggressively back of the movement for good will."

THE VIRGINIA SEMINARY

In the Church Militant of the Diocese of Washington a recent graduate of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, the Rev. William H. Nes, has written on its Centennial Campaign. The article is so luminous with the spirit of the institution and sets forth so persuasively its present plea to the Church for ampler material resources to do its appointed work that it seems to us to merit the attention of the General Church. We give it herewith:

"He that would be greatest among you, let him be your minister." This penetrating comment upon life which we have received from Our Blessed Lord is no less true of institutions than of men. The eminence which the Virginia Seminary occupies today in the esteem of the Church is due primarily neither to its superiority of scholarships nor to the exceptional illustriousness of its alumni. Its scholarship is notably of a liberal and at the same time uncompromisingly orthodox temper, while the lists of its alumni contain the names of Bishops and priests in this and older generations among the very foremost leaders of the Church. But more than all this, the "Old Seminary on the Hill" has been, in its undying spirit living in its sons, the pioneer of the American Church upon the far-flung battle-line of God's Kingdom throughout the whole world. For one hundred years this School of the Prophets has been unobtrusively and without any undue advertisement of its achievements planting and sustaining the major portion of all the Church's Missions abroad. Now, when the crown of a century's toil has been won, the Church hastens to accord to the Theological Seminary in Virginia that place of universal respect and love which Our Lord promised to the faithful minister whose heart is bent on service rather than reward.

Rejoicing, and not glorying, in its achievements, and made doubly confident by the enthusiastic encouragement of the whole Church, the Seminary has at last—and for the first time in its history—made a general advertisement of its needs and aspirations and ventured upon a general solicitation for support. In all these years it has quietly been securing for itself a position in the Church that would warrant a claim to general interest and support. It claims today to be a representative Seminary, not of any one Diocese or province, but of the American Church. It has, to be sure, its traditions. They are the traditions of the best type of old-fashioned Evangelicalism. In this particularly the Seminary has been distinguished by a sincere and deep piety which, while it does beyond question derive its color and method from the Evangelicals, has secured the unrestrained admiration of all types of Churchmen. In its influence upon the lives of its students, the chief power of the Virginia Seminary lies precisely in its pervasive atmosphere of profound devotion to the Person of Christ in a life of unalloyed piety. In many of its traditions in smaller matters the Seminary follows naturally the customs of the Diocese of Virginia, in which it is situated; and yet withal, if its alumni are an index of its temper, it is most truly representative of the Church at large; for while, in its student body and among its alumni, there are the usual proportions of the various type of Churchmanship, the atmosphere of the Seminary seems to exercise a temperate and conciliatory influence tending towards the elimination of extremes and the creation of a normal balance. In a word, there are all kinds of Churchmen in the Seminary now and among its alumni; but there is a certain quality of temper, a certain cast of character which is the mark of the Virginia Seminary and which, as it transcends all differences, seems finally to put a stamp on its men as "sons of the Old Hill."

Confident in its title to be not only a faithful servant of the Church, but a representative instrument of the Church for the training of its clergy, this venerable institution hopes by this appeal to obtain from the Church at large the sum of half a million dollars for the fulfilment of these reasonable needs. The student body has increased far beyond the normal capacity of the buildings now existing. A new dormitory must be erected. Administrative offices must be procured. A new professorship must be endowed, and a house built for the occupant of the new chair. The present buildings must be enlarged and repaired. A greater fund must be created for better upkeep of physical equipment in grounds and buildings. These are the representative elements of the budget for which this campaign is to be launched. It is not the budget of a dying institution fighting for its life—not even a budget for maintaining a venerable monument to the great men and the great labors of the past. It is a budget for helping a thriving, healthy, vigorous organism to expand its usefulness according to the measure of its increasing opportunities. It is an enterprise of enthusiasm, powerful purpose, magnificent adventure!

Without due care for the education of its ministry, all the Church's efforts and all its experiences are practically unavailing; for the measure of the Church's success is the measure of its lay devotion and its clerical efficiency. There is no object more to be commended to the generosity and piety of the people than the support of those institutions to which the Bishops entrust the characters of future priests in that intensely critical period preceding ordination. Upon the Seminaries rests a responsibility hardly less tremendous than that of the Episcopate; and upon the people rests the maintenance of the highest standards of clerical training and the support of those schools of sacred learning in which these standards must be realized.

I AM FOR PEACE---PSALM 120:7

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie.

The World War cost the United States $44,173,000,000. It cost the world $355,291,719,715. It cost in human life, counting the killed and those dying as a direct cause of the war in one way or another, 25,990,571. All the big wars between 1790 and 1913 cost 4,449,000 lives and $23,000,000,000. Our natural debt in 1913 was little over a billion dollars, while in 1920 it amounted to nearly twenty-five billion. It looks as if Lord Bryce was right when he said, "If we do not destroy war, War will destroy us."

Peace is both a political and a religious ideal. "The kingdom of God is peace," says Paul, writing to the war-like Romans. "The Lord will bless His people with peace," says the Psalmist—but not arbitrarily! They must desire it and plan for it and make it possible! If we are ever to introduce the Kingdom of Heaven, we must have Peace—peace at home, peace in business, peace in the Church, peace in politics, peace in our nation, peace in the world—Peace! God grant us peace!

But how? When? Where? Comes Mr. Edward Bok, a citizen of Philadelphia, offering $100,000 for the best plan by which the United States can cooperate with the rest of the world looking to universal peace. His offer was taken up by 22,165 contestants. The winning plan has been submitted and is now before the people for their approval. The Federal Council of Churches calls on all pastors to cooperate in getting the people to express themselves on this plan.

I am for peace! You are for peace! The Church is for peace! The people are for peace! The world is for peace! But how ardently are we for peace? What shall we do to foster and to preserve peace? What have the critics of this plan to offer? What has Public Service to offer? What has the United States to offer—that is practicable, workable, opportune, Christian and international? Dr. Fosdick says, "I will never bless another war." The Rev. Studdert Kennedy, a noted ex-chaplain with the English forces in the World War, says: "If we have another war, I shall go to prison and not to the trenches." Kirby Page says that Christians can never take part in another war. But these statements will never avert war!

The Bok Peace Plan is in line with the spirit of American institutions, says one of our editors—"It is an appeal to the people, made in the straightest fashion to the men and women who furnish the money and the soldiers in time of war, and who, therefore, have the best possible right to express an opinion on the conduct of our government with reference to the threat of war." This plan was accepted by a committee composed of Elihu Root, James Guthrie Harbord, Col. E. M. House, Ellen F. Pendleton, Roscoe Pound, William Allen White, Brand Whitlock—distinguished, disinterested and capable of sound judgment.

In brief, the plan calls for immediate entrance of the United States into the Permanent Court of International Justice and provides that we shall not go into the League of Nations as at present constituted, but that we shall offer to cooperate with the League as a body of mutual counsel, under conditions which substitute moral force and public opinion for military and economic force—safeguard the Monroe Doctrine; accept the fact that the United States will assume no obligations under the Treaty of Versailles except by act of Congress; propose that membership in the League be open to all nations and provide for the continuing development of international law.

In a word, the plan calls for international, world-inclusive coordinated efforts in the interest of fellowship and counsel and mutual help—the recognition of the brotherhood of men and the family-hood of nations. No national rights are disregarded. No entangling alliances, ill-advised and unadvised, are proposed. No war except by act of Congress is anticipated. Mr. Root, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Taft, Mr. Coolidge can come into this. Mr. Bryan, Mr. McAdoo, Mr. Underwood can come into this. Church and State, politician and preacher, republican and democrat—men, women and children can come into this!

"If another war like the last one should come," says General Bliss (and all authorities agree that if another war does come it will be more terrible, more scientific and more destructive than the later war)—"professing Christians will be responsible for every drop of blood shed and for every dollar wastefully expended." Whether this be just or not, surely it is the part of every Christian who wishes to see the advent of the Kingdom of God on earth, to take whatever definite and promising step or steps he may that give promise of averting another war and of promoting peace. We submit that the Bok Peace Plan gives some such promise.

THE SPIRITUAL VALUE OF THE VIRGIN BIRTH

By the Right Reverend Charles H. Brent, D. D.

Part I

EVERY incident, or alleged incident, in the biography of the great is of interest. In the case of Our Lord it is markedly so in that we have at most but fragments of His history. All we know of His birth, infancy and childhood is related in the first two chapters of St. Matthew and the first two chapters of St. Luke. Eliminate those and nothing remains excepting a rather loosely connected record of the three closing years of His life on earth.

Today, their historicity so far as it touches the Virgin Birth is challenged. In the judgment of some—there is no unanimity of opinion among scholars—the portion of the Third Gospel dealing with the Virgin Birth (Luke 1:34 ff.) and the parallel passage in the first chapter of the First Gospel (Matt. 18-25) are not part of the original Gospel, and therefore the Gospel of the Nativity as we have it cannot be accepted as presenting the truth of what actually occurred. Of course it does not necessarily follow, allowing that these passages were added to the original documents at a later date, that their credibility is thereby vitiated. A treasure discovered late is none the less a treasure. We are dealing with a period of history where oral tradition carried much of the burden now borne by literature, and carried it well, and with subject matter that would in the nature of the case be guarded by family reticence. Moreover for the balance of his Gospel St. Luke was partially, perhaps chiefly, dependent on oral tradition. If doubt is raised as to the historicity of the Virgin Birth on the score of silence elsewhere throughout Scripture on the subject, the argument would apply with equal cogency to all topics treated in the first two chapters of St. Luke and of St. Matthew.

Our Lord Himself, so far as we have a record of His words, makes no reference to the Virgin Birth. There are a few texts here and there in the New Testament (as e. g. John I, 13; Gal. IV, 4; Rom. 1, 3), which may be interpreted as indicating knowledge of the Virgin Birth by their authors, but they are too conjectural to cite as reliable evidence. There is no proof that during St. Paul's lifetime belief in the Incarnation depended upon knowledge or acceptance of the Virgin Birth. Whether or not he and his contemporaries themselves knew of it, belief in it was certainly not presented by them as a condition of discipleship.

This is not the occasion on which to attempt to argue the whole question on the grounds of scholarship. For our purpose it will suffice to make certain statements which, I believe, afford little ground for dispute:—

1. The matter is not one of text. Neither in the case of St. Luke 1, 34 ff., or St. Matthew 1, 18-25, is there textual ground for their omission. This does not apply to Matt. 1, 16, where there are varying texts.

2. The problem is inherent in the narrative as it stands. That is to say, side by side with the two-fold narrative of the Virgin Birth there are contradictions or seeming contradictions of it. What the scholars are after is an explanation of the fact. They did not create the problem.

3. The net result of their work thus far is to suggest that the balance of argument may be or is, in their judgment, against rather than for the traditional belief. They have formulated a doubt with no unanimity of opinion in their theories concerning it.

4. It should be borne in mind that the Virgin Birth is not the outstanding, much less the only, incident in the chapters under fire. The object for which they were written was obviously to centre attention on the character of the Hero of the narrative, the conditions attending His conception and birth being but a basket for the jewel therein enshrined—"that which is to be born shall be called holy, the Son of God." Such is the theme both of the first two chapters of St. Luke which Renan terms the "most literary of the Gospels" (Les Evangiles, Ch. XIII) and also of the first two chapters of St. Matthew. At this point it is worth noting that the author of St. Luke, is counted by the archaeologist and Pauline scholar, Ramsay, to be a first rank historian and worthy of being named with Thucydides (St. Paul the Traveler, Chap. 1).

5. The work of scholars on texts and their origin does not form the whole or the only support of the structure of truth in a matter where faith is concerned. There are other pillars of the house. The effect of belief in the Virgin Birth is so inextricably bound up with the Gospel of the Nativity, Infancy and Childhood, that you must reckon with it as an outstanding and dynamic influence of Christian history.

Speaking in terms of the history of Christendom, the subject of the Virgin Birth cannot be detached from its Scriptural contact and dealt with as an isolated incident. The whole of the Gospel of the Nativity stands together—the story of Zacharias and his great son's birth; the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary and her unparalleled act of faith; three of the greatest hymns of Christendom (Magnificat, Benedictus, and Nunc Dimittis, to say nothing of the Herald Angels' Song, which contains the wisdom of the ages and the sole hope of mankind in the brief compass of eleven Greek words); the story of the manger and the shepherds; the figure of the apprehensive Joseph, the Visit of the Magi, the murder of the Innocents; the single glimpse of the boy Christ and of His conduct in the home. All of these rich and spiritually unique incidents crowd around the Nativity and pay homage to the Babe, Who, according to the record, was born of a Virgin. Textually speaking, it would be dishonest to eliminate the Virgin Birth in the interest of historicity and claim the balance, or portions of the balance arbitrarily selected, as true to fact. What is said of the figures and the pictures of the Sistine vault is true of the Gospel of the Conception, Nativity, Infancy and Boyhood of Christ—"Each part of the immense composition, down to the smallest detail, is necessary to the total effect" (Symonds' Michelangelo, p. 241).

The place which belief in the Gospel of the Nativity and its attendant happenings as recorded in St. Matthew and St. Luke has held in Christian history is so important that without it the whole area of Christian civilization would have been changed and impoverished.

The part that the Gospel of the Nativity, considered as a whole, has played in the devotional life of successive generations of Christians cannot be estimated. Its refining and purifying influence has been unceasing. No portion of the Gospel record is more widely known or loved. It weaves its shining threads of immortal song through daily worship, and crowns with expectation and hope and peace the quiet faith of countless souls who seek no earthly treasure. To those who "have made themselves eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake" in conventional life or in the ordinary paths of service to "attend the Lord without distraction" (1 Cor. VII, 35), it has afforded inspiration to lowliness, the basic Christian virtue, and to perseverance, which distils purpose into character. It has linked the children of Christendom to the Infant Christ with a tie of sympathy and love which it alone is competent to do. Each year through the ages it reacts its distinguished drama, brilliant with star and angel, pure as the lily, fragrant as the violet, until the Feast of the Nativity—obscured though it has become by worldliness—shines out as the annual rallying point of faith toward God and goodwill toward men.

Through the age of chivalry was there ever a white clad knight, keeping vigil before the altar, who did not get courage from Mary, gallantly named "Our Lady," whom all generations have called both "blessed" and "Virgin," to pledge his life on the morrow to courtesy, valor and loyalty? It could not but be that so royal a figure as she is portrayed to be, should increase in power and honor—too much says half of Christendom of the other half, too little responds this latter of the former. But this difference of opinion is not for me to settle. I am speaking of what actually occurred in history and gave us such a wealth of immortal architecture and art as has never been equalled. Christian life during the period beginning with the second thousand years of the Christian era was not a calculation but a passion flinging itself against the sky. The inspiring centre was the Gospel of the Nativity, now one part, now another, radiating its rich and tangled influence far and wide.

Turn first to architecture. The great cathedrals and churches built in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries according to Henry Adams were the direct product of belief in the Blessed Virgin Mary. "According to statistics, in the single century between 1170 and 1270, the French built eighty cathedrals and nearly five hundred churches of the cathedral class, which would have cost, according to an estimate made in 1840, more than five thousand millions to replace. Five thousand million francs is a thousand million dollars, and this covered only the churches of a single century. The same scale of expenditure has been going on since the year 1000 . . . The share of this capital which was—if one may use a commercial figure—invested in the Virgin cannot be fixed, any more than the total sum given to religious objects between 1000 and 1300; but in a spiritual and artistic sense, it was almost the whole, and expressed an intensity of conviction never again reached by any passion, whether of religion, of loyalty, of patriotism, or of wealth; perhaps never even paralleled by any single economic effort, except in war. Nearly every great church of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries belonged to Mary, until in France one asks for the Church of Notre Dame as though it meant cathedral." (Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres, Pp. 94, 9.) "The architects of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries took the Church and the universe for truths, and tried to express them in a structure which should be final" (ibid. p. 382).

Religion in those days was much more than a theology; it was at any rate first of all an instinct, a feeling, a dynamic faith. There was not then "only thus far and no further." Men made great ventures in every direction. The saints of yesterday jostled the sinners of today. The Blessed Virgin Mary was the ideal of human perfection, a living force, the friend of the simple folk. We of today with our world-wide relations think we have a great family—if indeed we can call the organized human confusion of mankind by so sacred a name. Even the peasant of the times we are considering had a still greater family in his friends of every century. Statues and figures stood for the real presence of the noble and good of yesterday retaining interest in and keeping tab on today. Christ was among men, always available, always the Saviour of prince and pauper alike. Those ages may have lacked in some things, but they were days of dynamic faith that produced immortal fruit.

In art we find the same inspiring centre. Whatever other New Testament occurrences found expression on canvass or in stone, the Gospel of the Nativity held a place of prominence second to none. Four names will suffice to witness to the fact—Michael Angelo, Raphael, Botticelli and Titian. Michael Angelo, sculptor, painter, poet, was among the "few men, notably few artists," who "have preserved that continuity of moral, intellectual, and physical development in one unbroken course" (Symonds' Life of Michelangelo p. 85). He was a gruff old bachelor, who, like many of his class, claimed for virginity superiority to the married state, as the passage I am about to quote probably indicates. In his Pieta he made the Blessed Virgin appear relatively younger than her Son. In answer to critics he said: "Do you know that chaste women maintain their freshness far longer than the unchaste? How much more would this be the case with a virgin, into whose breast there never crept the least lascivious desire which could affect the body? Nay, I will go further, and hazard the belief that this unsullied bloom of youth, beside being maintained in her by natural causes, may have been miraculously wrought to convince the world of the virginity and perpetual purity of the Mother. This was not necessary for the Son. On the contrary, in order to prove that the Son of God took upon Himself, as in every truth He did take, a human body, and became subject to all that an ordinary man is subject to, with the exception of sin; the human nature of Christ, instead of being superseded by the divine, was left to the operation of natural laws, so that His person revealed the exact age to which He had attained. You need not, therefore, marvel if, having regard to these considerations, I made the most Holy Virgin, Mother of God, much younger relatively to her Son than women of her years usually appear, and left the Son such as His time of life demanded." (Condivi, p. 20, quoted by Symonds.)

I multiply names only to avoid the fault of generalizing from a single instance. Raphael's genius was so great that it dazzled rather than inspired his would-be followers. His most famous canvas proclaims the faith that held it in happy thrall and made it blossom like the rose.

Of Botticelli, ardent follower of Savonarola, this is equally true. Dignity, beauty, spiritual grace combine in the face and form of his Madonnas. They are maternal yet virgin, gentle yet strong. He painted them even as today an artist paints a sitter. The Virgin was seen by the eye of his faith and he painted only what he saw.

So, too, Titian, Raphael's twin in genius and purity of conception. My mind travels back through the years and again I stand before that master canvas in Venice and see, as a living form, the tiny blue clad Virgin offering the Infant Christ to the priest. One listened to catch the echoes of Simeon's song and Anna's prophecy.

These and countless other treasures which we have inherited are the children of that dynamic faith which was kindled by the Gospel of the Nativity of which the Virgin Birth was so integral a part as to have left on all Christendom its distinctive mark.

A LITTLE JOURNEY IN THE WEST

By the Reverend James Sheerin

IV

AFTER writing my third article in this Westward Ho! course, I was switched off for a time on the theological discussion in New York. If I had left the references to Los Angeles as third instalment put it, I am afraid I should have been a little unjust to my better judgment as well as to some greater things in California. The praise for Mrs. McPherson and her splendid temple was meant to be tentative and suggestive. Just as it was argued in days before the Great War that men had bungled politics so badly it might be a good thing to let women try it awhile, so a good many have felt in religion, taking the more pessimistic view of things, that nineteen centuries of Christianity under male leadership had not prevented the most terrible of all wars, and seemed to be growing more helpless as the years go by; therefore, if women could be taken into partnership, or even placed in leadership, there might be great improvement. Like a sick man taking medicine, in the work of God's Kingdom some have seemed to say, "Oh, anything, or anybody, so long as something is done!" It is true enough now that there is a lot of disillusionment in the realizing of hopes as to what women would do in politics; and there may be just as little success if they are made public ministers in the Church. Nevertheless many who are both intelligent and devout are ready to try any kind of evangelism, male or female; any sort of a ritual or non-ritual; or they will try smoking, dancing, whether pagan, Christian or Jewish. Judging from recent conversations, to swear and use slang is proof of one's ecclesiastical emancipation!

In this spirit, allowing imagination to have its full way in the search for the Holy Grail of religious perfection on the shores of the Pacific, the question was asked of the Angelus Temple in Los Angeles, "Can this be the better objective of all westward striving after religious realization in America? Here, at the end of several thousand miles' travel, stands a glittering white temple dedicated to the Christian religion, and inside is a woman in spotless white uniform, and before her are 6,000 eager worshippers. About them all is a sky-like dome, claimed to be the largest in the world. Surrounding the Temple are schools for training young people to be useful and happy in either the ordinary walks of life, or in missionary work. In front are offices with stenographers, secretaries, typewriters, manifolders, etc. Everything is system. The preliminary organization of efficiency used for a Billy Sunday campaign, is here condensed and established in the interests of a permanent work of much the same sort.

Is all this apostolic? A prominent minister in Los Angeles, a believer in revivals, says no. He declares that Mrs. McPherson is neither Apostolic, Biblical, nor Dispensatorial. He means by the latter that Mrs. McPherson is no latter-day prophet, as he says she and her friends claim, and does not rank with John the Baptist or St. Paul as having a special dispensation to preach and heal. Besides this clerical opposition, there is the same old objection to the leadership of a woman and especially a married woman in any great religious undertaking. She has had two husbands, the second of them still living, but "not sympathetic with her," as a co-worker puts it. It seems as if the world were growing ready to use woman more and more in great public movements, and the word obey is being left out of marriage ceremonies, and yet here and there is still a man—perhaps his name is legion—who cannot endure the thought of his wife being too much in the public eye, whether on platform, pulpit, or stage! This being the case, lawful husband and organized Church being against her, what shall a gifted woman do? Will she organize and set apart another Blavatsky-Tingley temple, nine-tenths pagan and one iota Christian, or will it result in a semi-Christian sect after the manner of Mrs. Eddy?

As an on-looker in this sort of Israel, I am standing in a sort of disappointed attitude, in a city that should have been so much finer, and gazing across lake and park, I could almost imagine the beginning of another Chicago World's Fair. Down in San Diego they have preserved the perfectly beautiful Balboa Exposition buildings in their original park setting, with all the loveliness of pink walls and graceful architectural form. Perhaps there is no more complete city in the world today than this silent product of a people united to do something distinctive and charming. One has to ask himself, Why not everywhere in "the glorious climate of California"? Most of the cities are so drab and dreary, especially in their downtown parts; so sordidly like the uglier portions of great Eastern and European cities, dirty in street and dismal in buildings and overhanging signs. Between the postoffice and the railway stations, Los Angeles is all this, and that is the part first settled by the newcomers whom I have described as more cultured than pioneers usually are. The newer extensions of the city shine out quite handsome and attractive. Boulevards and parkways are bordered by as pretty homes as can be seen in any choice part of the world. So far as these go, the traveler feels that he is amongst a prosperous and happy people, though this feeling is tempered now and then when he discovers that a prize-fighting Dempsey occupies one of the finest, and that others of equally dubious life are even more splendidly housed. There is always back of these beautiful spots in Los Angeles a realization that these people had an unusual opportunity in what the romanticists call "the great spaces of the West," and a special chance in mountain and plain and seashore to have begun a city where beauty and health would have been such primary considerations as to make it glorious within and without.

I have avoided in these necessarily superficial articles saying much, if anything, of social and political conditions. No one can know these in a brief journey, much less the really vital factors of religious life. It was not for me to stress what a magazine charges in regard to child labor, that beneath those thousands of beautiful fruit trees there lies an almost slavish abuse of young children as to school and work. Perhaps I have spoken too much of mere esthetic failure. Yet the two are closer together than people usually think. At any rate there is a feeling which will not down, that a new and intelligent people, migrating to this naturally lovely country with more money than is usual amongst new settlers, made a serious mistake in not allowing themselves to revolt more drastically against the ugliness of working men's homes in the East, or the uncleanliness of street and architecture, so that in their new environment they would erect better and finer habitations for public as well as private life. Signs of a great awakening to this are now in the air, but they come after nearly a million people have camped in and about Los Angeles, with a tendency to make its more thickly populated parts the mere duplication of what cannot be admired in New York or Boston or Pittsburgh, or even Cleveland and Detroit! It is a gigantic example of the poet's lament. "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: It might have been!" Instead of a beautiful city free from tenements, Los Angeles looks as if it will have the same sort of slums we all hate but have in the East.

Turning from these ruminations, I want to speak of the famous old missions before leaving California. They are rightly famous. One has the feeling in their presence that perhaps here was the truer start towards the Kingdom of Heaven, or towards the Holy Grail of Christian life. Though there are historic anachronisms in it all, and the influences and deductions are far-fetched and oftentimes ill-founded by both tourist and booster, nevertheless the halo of historic romance is justly thrown over Modern California by the presence of these mission relics. There is hardly a ruin in old Rome that is more impressive than the gaunt, forsake arches of San Juan Capistrano. Twenty-one of these missions were established in California, supposedly every fifty miles, from San Diego to San Francisco and beyond, in little more than half a century, i. e., from 1769 to 1823. It is probably the biggest piece of missionary work ever done in one period by the Christian Church. This is especially so in view of the native art developed, the buildings erected, and the monuments left for the admiration of succeeding generations. Its fascination is felt by artist and literary man alike, as well as antiquarian, and no one is more thrilled by it than the average educated tourist from the East. The Roman Catholic Church, generally the last to discover its own ancient material value, is awakening to the great asset it has in these old missions; so everywhere, close by them, it is erecting new institutions which help the Church to acquire for itself most of the glory and much of the money that are natural accompaniments of fascinating ruins. Roman Catholics of course have more right to do this than the hotels and railway stations which build after the manner of the missions, or horde in their museums all that they can beg, borrow or buy from these relics of a glorious past.

If criticism is made it is only that the balance of historical judgment shall be kept fair. Unstinted as admiration should be, there is a legitimate residuum of doubt as to all that is now said or claimed for these early missionaries. Indians who could build and serve, as these primitive men and women did, reflect credit on the white men who inspired and instructed them. Yet the feeling is justified that, beautiful and holy as time seems inclined to set apart these founders of the missions, there is a good deal of that cool calculation as well as cruel selfishness in their record which made, for example, a Peter the Great build his city of St. Petersburg on the bones of the builders. No great city has ever been established without wounds and death of the workers, and these California missions included their share of murder, rape and theft and abuse as shameful as in other corners of a barbarous world. There is reason to suspect that much of this went on against the Indians under the eye of a too forgiving monk. Never was one of these missions founded without the approving escort of the governor and his soldiers, knowing that thus the work of commerce and presidio would be made easier. Never once did the exalted missionaries lose sight of that royal-military-kingdom idea of the Church, which always held its sword unsheathed, ready to put to slaughter those who refused to be baptized or who became heretics! This is the essence of that hateful thing that made the youthful St. Francis desert the army of violence and ever after prove himself a valiant soldier of Brother Jesus, whose chief commandment of love he fulfilled as few ever did. There was nothing in the religion of the little man of Assisi that would have made him countenance for a moment a plan that included a body of priests backed by a body of soldiers coming into a land of entire strangers, camping down on their land, indifferent to the rights of its owners, issuing orders to the original inhabitants as if to slaves, and causing them to forfeit the right to existence if they did not accept the secular and spiritual authority of the intruders! No wonder that the religion ultimately failed, that the Indians died of immoral habits and disease, and that within a century every one of the buildings was a ruin, until somewhat resurrected through the sentimental admiration of American Protestants! This is like Italy itself, whose ruins as a rule lay unprotected, and whose great paintings went unloved, or were blotted out of sight by coats of white-wash, until literary and artistic Englishmen called the attention of the world to their value. Then and then only the Roman Catholic Church awoke to the worth of hitherto unnoticed treasures.

There are three ways in which these missions might have developed:

(1) They might have gone on as they began, controlling natives in the name of religion, teaching them industry and the arts, and laying foundations for a second Holy Roman Empire, with a co-operation of Church and State as beautiful and complete as it would have been cruel. There could have been even then a healthier, more upright manhood among these poor red children of primitive things. Such an empire would have been free from class conflict because the fear of priest and soldier had sunk deep into the hearts of the subject race. Splendor and tyranny would have been hand in hand.

(2) They might have developed a semi-socialistic community life, beautiful in its cooperation; brotherly in its relationship of native and newcomer, tending towards a finer Utopia, Christian but probably as inefficient as lovely. No founder of the missions seemed to want this.

(3) They might also have degenerated, as they did, because the missionary impulse was too much complicated by the desire of conquest, and because the absorbing desire to make money by the labors of their servants had taken the place of care for their human interests or the eternity of their souls. It is the history of a great ideal gone to ruin, of a poor people lifted up from nakedness to be clothed indeed, but ultimately to be lost through fusion of alien blood, or by the inroads of disease.

Nevertheless, even as they are, heaps of ruins, these old Spanish missions are a stimulating background for a better civilization, and as such all forward-looking Californians should cherish them. They are at least suggestive of a better city of God than has yet appeared.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

THE QUESTION BOX.

IT is interesting to note that whenever leaders of young people meet for conference and a question box is established the problems suggested are uniformly practical and fundamental. At a very recent, informal conference in Richmond, Va., such questions as these were asked:

1. How can counsellors be secured when apparently there is a lack of qualified leaders for this kind of work?
2. The young people in the congregation do not seem to mingle, and lack congeniality. How can this be regulated?
3. What can be done to increase a willingness to assume responsibility in the activities of the organization?
4. What age is the real objective of the movement, and within what ages can we expect to have the most efficient cooperation and work?
5. What should be the central objective of the programs for the weekly devotional meetings?
6. What can be done to gain reverence at the meetings? Etc.

Of course these questions are of unequal value and there are others more vital that have been asked also, but they strike at the very center of the Leagues' stability, and it may be well to have groups consider how to overcome obstacles which these questions present.

1. It is more or less generally believed that the young people feel a sense of over-weening self-confidence and do not desire or seek leadership in working out their individual and corporate problems. The reverse is true. The leaders among the young people themselves do not feel qualified to develop organization and to perfect method without experienced assistance. A Macedonian cry has gone up for sympathetic, understanding, qualified counsellors, both men and women, who really love young people and are willing to use their gifts of personality and experience for the upbuilding of the Kingdom in the adolescent age.

It would be whimsical if it were not pathetic to hear the Church agonizing over the young people and feeling that it has discharged its duty with diagnosis, correct or incorrect, and a sigh of wistful tolerance or a cry of excited denunciation. There is no bigger job in the parish today than to be counsellor for a Young People's League.

One is investing in personality which yields a return out of all proportion to the effort made. The number of life enlistments definitely attributable to our Service Leagues in the four or five years of their existence offers a challenge to consecrated manhood and womanhood to drop some of their civic and fraternal commitments to help the young people find themselves.

What more bitter condemnation can there be than for a parish to find no men or women or group of men or women willing to give themselves, their interest and their help, to the development of the Church of Tomorrow. It is hardly conceivable that a parish exists in which there are not at least two who are potentially qualified to assume this responsibility.

Business is no excuse, for the busy man or woman is usually one who has the essential qualifications and record of achievement. Too many of our Church men and Church women are selling their lives cheaply, devoting themselves to interests and organizations which are fundamentally selfish and offer no real contribution to the New Day. Frequently teachers of the High School age are best qualified, but they claim exemption because their week is filled the secular education of a similar group. Yet one wonders if a real Churchman does not long for a wider field in the realm of morals and religion than is afforded by the public school. Of course it is helpful to educate, to develop the minds of our young people, and in this day and time it is hardly conceivable that any High School teacher has undertaken his life's work without a definite sense of vocation.

What could be truer than the words of Kidd: "The soul of education, is the education of the soul." Nothing is more conducive to "the Peace of God which passeth all human understanding" than the consciousness that boys and girls, through the humble effort of some counsellor, have been led successfully and triumphantly over Fool's Hill. Leaders! Leaders! Leaders! and the Church has them in abundance. Quasi religious charitable and fraternal organizations claim them in work that is valuable but not necessarily central in importance.

Where shall the young people look for help if not within the bounds of their own Communion? Manifestly to the town at large. Surely there are men and women in the community, who may not belong to our Church, willing, perhaps, eager to lead a group of young people to the fulfillment of the League's plans of service. The League must not fail because of indifference in the Parish. Rather far call some one from without our own membership who is big enough to accept the plan of service in the five fields, and who is entirely at home in the informality of the Devotional Meeting.

It ought not be necessary to have to look out of our own ranks. Parish lines, in the last analysis, are imaginary and in a great city strong parishes, with an abundance of qualified leaders should feel a missionary responsibility to send some of their men and women to the smaller, weaker parishes and missions to help build the Church of the Future, in neighborhoods where the influence of the Church is most needed, and, when properly expressed, most effective.

Members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew should feel a special sense of responsibility in this connection, for the central rules of Prayer and Service are fundamental to the League's life. Daughters of the King ought to accept such an assignment with a peculiar feeling of privilege if they have correctly interpreted the rules of their Order.

The time may come when graduates from our Leagues will be able to return as Counsellors, having had the privilege of growing up in the organization. But that time has not yet been reached and the young people are asking for the help of those who have spiritual sympathy with their age, and consecrated common sense.

No loyalty is finer than the response of young people. Where it is won, it is given unquestioningly and utterly. Efforts with some of the young people may go unrewarded, but one is reminded of the prodigality of the sower. A tremendous amount of the seed was wasted, but that which fell on good soil brought forth come thirty, some sixty and some one hundred fold.

God grant that this appeal may reach the hearts of men and women who heretofore have felt justified in maintaining an attitude of indifference to the cry of the young people for counsellors and leaders.

Perhaps at another time it will be profitable to discuss these other questions which have come out of the practical experience of the Service Leagues now in existence.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A MISSION FIELD AT HOME.

Bishop Davenport of the Diocese of Easton (Md.), believes in ascertaining rural conditions in a systematic way, and with this end in view he set two theological students to the work of making a survey of conditions on the Eastern Shore of Maryland last summer.

One of these students, the Rev. James A. Mitchell (he has since been ordained Deacon) wrote a very interesting article for the Eastern Shore Churchman, giving the results of his findings. In a hundred and twenty-seven families visited he found five hundred and seven individuals, not including infants in arms. Only thirty-three per cent of these people are definitely connected with any church. When we turn to the record for church attendance we find it equally discouraging. The figures compiled show that one-third of the people only are fairly regular churchgoers; another third go "every now and then," and the other third "seldom if ever darken a church door."

When it is taken into consideration that these figures were given to a person who was known to be working in behalf of a church, it will readily be recognized that they represent conditions more apt to be better than worse than the actual situation, because people would naturally be inclined to give as good a report as possible upon such matters to one who was known to be working for the church.

This survey was made in a community where none of the families lived more than six miles from some church, and in which there are twelve miles of hard surface state road with no house more than four miles from one of these roads, therefore the obstacles to be overcome by these people in order to attend church are certainly not more difficult than will be found in most rural communities.

This survey was not confined to Episcopalians, but included all Protestants and Roman Catholics within the territory covered. It was found that the latter had a very much higher percentage of church attendants than the former. Mr. Mitchell in his article does not come to any definite conclusion as to a reason for this lack of interest in the church, except to attribute it to "a materialistic age" in which "the farmer thinks in dollars and cents and his son wants a carefree day of fun. The chief concern of the father on Sunday is to get his milk to the cooling station; so he comes to town and passes by the open church door. The chief interest of the younger members is a good time, so they pass by many open church doors."

We cannot but wonder if some such plan of holding health clinics as that reported in a recent issue would not create a new interest for these people in their church. Of course modern conditions with automobiles and places of amusement open on Sunday offer many counter attractions to the church, which at one time was the natural meeting place for country people. If activities of a nature that rendered visible returns in healthier children were to emanate from the country church it might be possible that it would restore some of its lost prestige.

In order to introduce such clinics it is of course necessary to have a country minister who is really on the job. Here again we quote from Mr. Mitchell's article: "The clergy are so busy with their town duties that it is physically impossible for them to serve the country people also. The center of religious activities seem to be shifting to the towns. Some of the country people who have a real interest in the church, complain bitterly of this; others are quite content to transfer their religious interest from the purely country churches to the neighboring towns; most are content to do nothing beyond conferring an occasional favour on God by appearing at a service now and then."

The whole subject as is seen from these figures is certainly a serious one, and deserves the best attention of our ablest men.

A SUGGESTION FOR NEXT YEAR.

"During the Advent and Christmas season, the National Cathedral School for Girls, under the leadership of Miss McDonald and Miss Webster, raised a sum of money aggregating $1,763, to be distributed among twenty-two worthy objects. This was the result of the decision in the school to do away with all exchange of gifts between teachers and students and to place the emphasis on this different phase of Christmas giving. Some of the objects helped were the Red Cross, the Near East Relief, the Japanese Mission and the Student Friendship Fund and about fifty dollars were spent for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners for needy families. This splendid spirit evidenced at the Cathedral School will serve as an example for other schools to follow."

It is somewhat late for publishing Christmas news, but we feel that the above item which comes to us from our Washington correspondent might offer a helpful suggestion to other institutions for next year.

It is unfortunately so often the case that the question of what to give is more of a burden than a joy at Christmas time that it would seem that a definite agreement amongst groups of people not to give to each other, but to give to the needy would come as a relief to the givers, as much as the beneficiaries.

If other schools would follow the splendid example thus set by the Cathedral School for Girls, large sums could be directed to depleted treasuries of many relief organizations, and we trust that this plan will not go unnoticed.

EMPHASIZING THE FAMILY.

In these busy days with manifold attractions and distractions outside of the home anything that will help to draw families together and reemphasize that most beautiful of all social relations, is worth the attention of church people. For that reason we publish the following communication from a correspondent in Norfolk:

Family Sunday.

"The last Sunday in each month is Family Sunday at St. Andrew's Church in Norfolk, so-called because it has become the custom of the rector, the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, to deliver a five minutes' illustrated talk to children at the morning service, when the children come to church and occupy the pews with their parents, thus emphasizing the naturalness of families worshipping together in the House of the Lord.

This service, inaugurated April 30, 1922, has been very successful and has taken a prominent place in the worship of the congregation.

In October, 1923, St. Andrew's organized a children's choir of twenty-two voices, which marches in with the regular church choir on Family Sunday and takes part in the singing.

Immediately after the five minutes' talk the children are allowed to retire and the Junior Choir marches out."

This plan of a children's sermon is used in many churches every Sunday, and there are several books now in circulation containing excellent three-minute talks to children.

We also know of one pastor of a Lutheran Church who has carried the family idea even further, and abandoned his mid-week prayer-meeting service, urging members of his congregation to make that evening an occasion for family gatherings, more especially devoted to the entertainment of children.

Death of Prominent Clergyman

The Reverend Edward Lewis Goodwin, D. D., died after a week's illness, at his home in Ashland, Virginia, on Thursday, February 7.

Dr. Goodwin was compelled to retire from the rectorship of St. James' Church, Ashland, Virginia, on account of ill health about three years ago, but continued until the time of his death his duties as Secretary and Historiographer of the Diocese.

Dr. Goodwin's funeral was conducted from St. James' Church, Ashland, on Friday, February 8, by the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D., the Rev. G. Maclaren Brydon and the Rev. Thomas S. Russell, rector of the parish, the clergy of Richmond acting as pallbearers and the interment was in Wytheville, Virginia, on Saturday.

Dr. Goodwin was born in Nelson County, Virginia, on January 23, 1855. His father came from Massachusetts to the Virginia Seminary, where he graduated in 1831, and spent his entire ministry in the Dioceses of Maryland and Virginia. Two of the brothers of the Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin also entered the Episcopal ministry. Dr. Edward Goodwin's brother, the Rev. Robert A. Goodwin, D. D., was well known in the Diocese of Virginia, especially in connection with his work in the Bishop Payne Divinity School and as rector of old St. John's Church, Richmond.

After taking a course at the University of Virginia, Dr. Goodwin entered the Virginia Seminary and graduated in 1880. During a long and faithful ministry, he became one of the best loved and most useful clergy of the Diocese of Virginia.

Dr. Goodwin served during his long and faithful ministry in many parishes. From 1880 to 1885 he was in Franklin County, Va.; from 1885 to 1888 in Walker's Parish, Albemarle County; from 1889 to 1893 in Montgomery County, Va.; from 1895 to 1897 in St. Stephen's Parish, Culpeper, Va.; from 1897 to 1900 at Grace Church, Charleston, S. C.; from 1900 to 1904 at St. Mark's Church, Richmond; from 1904 to 1910 at Zion Church, Fairfax; from 1910 to 1921 at St. James' Church, Ashland, Va.

He was Secretary of the Diocese of Virginia for many years.

While at the Seminary Dr. Edward Goodwin was one of the founders, and afterwards became chief editor of the "Seminarian," which first appeared in 1878.

Dr. Goodwin was always of a studious disposition. His love for the Church inspired him to devote his scholarly attainments to historical research, especially with reference to the history of the Colonial Church in Virginia.

The Diocese of Virginia and the General Church received the benefit of this research as a result of his publication of the "History of Truro Parish in Virginia," by Dr. Philip Slaughter, which Dr. Goodwin edited with extensive notes and addenda. He was also responsible for the publication of a book which has gone through a second edition, giving the history of the Colonial Churches in Virginia. Much of his most valuable work along historic lines was done through investigations and reports which he made as historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia. Some of the results of this work are to be found in the reports made by him to the Council of the Diocese of Virginia and contained in the Council Journals. To the "History of the Theological Seminary in Virginia and its Historical Background," Dr. Goodwin made valuable and scholarly contributions, having written the chapter on the Colonial Church and Clergy in Virginia, the chapter on the Indian College and the College of William and Mary, the biographical sketch of Bishop Madison, the biographical sketch of Bishop Gibson, and a chapter on the early subscribers to the Seminary, and also a chapter, involving a vast amount of research, on the Alumni of the Seminary.

Dr. Goodwin's sermons showed the result of profound scholarship and a sound and balanced theology. His evangelical spirit and loyal Churchmanship, and, above all, the inspiration of a deeply spiritual consecrated life, was manifested in his preaching.

Dr. Goodwin represented the Diocese of Virginia as a deputy to five meetings of the General Convention, where, on account of his sound learning and loyal Churchmanship, he won for himself an enviable position of influence and power.

Dr. Goodwin rendered conspicuously fine service to the Church at large, as the able editor for many years of the "Southern Churchman." He brought to this position not only a profound scholarship, but also a sanity and restraint, together with a discriminating and penetrating mind which added to his spirit-illuminated conviction, made his editorials a most valuable contribution to the thought of the Church. It can doubtless be said, without invidious distinction, that the "Southern Churchman" has never had an editor who more thoroughly and completely expressed the distinctive principles of convictions characteristic of Virginia Churchmanship. Thus by these editorials he helped to fill the terminology used in preaching, writing and controversial discussions, with a true and broad-visioned content. He was always an ardent Protestant in his opposition to every effort to narrow the term Catholic and the Catholic position of the Church in conformity to the tenets of schools of thought which sought to use the word and interpret the spirit of the Church's life in terms narrow, exclusive and sectarian.

While serving temporarily as rector of Monumental Church, Richmond, and while supplying St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, during a vacancy in the rectorship, when he was teaching in the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Dr. Goodwin became the teacher of large Bible classes in both places which attracted wide attention and secured an exceptionally large enrollment of those who welcomed the opportunity of having the Bible explained and expounded with the scope of vision and the grasp of truth which Dr. Goodwin was able to bring to the consideration of the subject in hand.

Dr. Goodwin had two sons, Edward LeBaron, who, after having taught the science of biology at the College of William and Mary, graduated in medicine and offered up his life in his effort to help stem the influenza in the Camp at Fort Niagara, and Frederick Deane, who entered the ministry, and has rendered and is still rendering conspicuous service as a country parson in Lunenburg and Cople, North Farnham Parishes, Virginia.

He is also survived by three daughters, Mrs. Margaret Ballard and Miss Mary F. Goodwin, of Ashland, and Mrs. Conrad H. Goodwin, the wife of the rector of Zion Church, Charles Town, W. Va.

Thousands Pay Tribute to Woodrow Wilson

The Washington Cathedral a Shrine of the American people! This it became when, on Wednesday, February 6, in the presence of a small company of those who loved him best, the remains of Woodrow Wilson were lowered to their final resting place in the crypt beneath the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. Taps sounded at this moment on the hill side of Mt. St. Alban, and the muffled sound as it penetrated the walls of the chapel, and floated out over a stricken city, brought home the solemn truth that Woodrow Wilson in the days to come must live only by his spirit in the hearts of the people and that at last had come to his tired body that release and freedom which may only be found in the greater Life beyond.

The services throughout were simple, reverent and quiet and thus perfectly in accord with the nature of the man for whom the solemn rites were being performed.

Mt. St. Alban, commanding a view of the entire capital city, always beautiful, always inspiring, became hallowed on that day. Thousands were gathered that they might pay their tribute—thousands, by means of amplifiers used, participated in the service and together in the open, with bared heads, recited the Lord's Prayer and Apostles' Creed. Thus, in spite of the limited space of the chapel where the services were held, thousands testified on this solemn day, to their belief in the Lord Jesus, the Prince of Peace, and united with the six hundred or more people accommodated within the walls of the chapel. On every side, men and women were eager to pay their tributes. Floral tributes from every nation, from the lowliest to the highest, filled every niche and corner of the chapel, lined the sides of the steps leading to the chapel and extended far out into the open. Many more were sent directly to Walter Reed Hospital, where the wounded men, whose chief he had been, might catch a little of the spirit of the hour.

Official life was represented in all of its phases, while at the same time, the absence of display reminded one that this was the burial order of a private citizen in as private a way as possible. The service itself was simply said by clergy of the Presbyterian Church and the Bishop of Washington, interspersed with the unaccompanied singing of a favorite hymn of the great War President,

"Day is dying in the West,
Heaven is touching earth with rest,
Wait and worship while the night
Sets her evening lamps alight,
Through all the sky.
Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts,
Heaven and earth are full of Thee

Heaven and earth are praising Thee,
O Lord Most High!"

When all was over, save the commital, the choir burst into that resurrection song of victory, "The Strife is O'er, the Battle Done, the Victory of Life is Won," and using this as a recessional hymn, led the way out of the chapel. Searching indeed was that moment, when their voices were heard in the distance, singing,

"Lord, by the stripes which wounded Thee,
From death's dread sting Thy servants free,
That we may live, and sing to Thee,
Alleluia!"

Is there not some meaning in it all, that having passed away on a Sunday morn, his body found its resting place in this holy place, a house of prayer for all people? Here stands a chapel named for the little town of Bethlehem, here its carvings and windows tell the story of Christ; here as will be in the larger building, soon to be erected, the Gospel of Christ is set forth and this has become the final resting place of the body of Woodrow Wilson, the great lover of peace, the great striver after peace, the one who longed to have the world catch the vision of world brotherhood and who was not unwilling to lay down his life for the cause. Here thousands will come, to pay their tribute to Woodrow Wilson, to thank God for Woodrow Wilson and to pray for strength and guidance that they may have some part in the perpetuation of the ideals which he sought to give to all men and for which he gave his life.

Death of Bishop Hunting.

The Rt. Rev. George Coolidge Hunting, D. D., fourth Bishop of the Missionary District of Nevada, died Wednesday night, February 6, at his home in Reno, after an illness of but a few days with pneumonia, aged fifty-three years. He had been Bishop since 1914, and, under his administration, this difficult field has been developed in spite of a slow-growing population and the natural reaction to the great gold boom of that state.

Bishop Hunting was born in Milwaukee, Wis., in 1871, and received his theological education at the Seminary in Virginia, graduating in 1894. This institution also conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. His whole ministry was spent in the difficult missionary field of Nevada, Wyoming and Utah. He was a deputy to the General Conventions of 1901, 1904, 1907 and 1910, where his ability in debate was often shown. His elevation to the episcopate was welcomed by all those who held a deep interest in the domestic missionary field.

To those who had the pleasure of knowing the Bishop of Nevada intimately, will come the feeling that the Church has lost one of her distinctive personalities. He had a way of making friends and influencing their spiritual life, perhaps on a train journey, or a roughing trip, that endeared him to many. Government surveyors, geologists and others stranded in the seeming wilderness of Nevada look back on his friendship as a great event in their lives. His liberal nature made him popular with the other churches, and his ability as a raconteur was sought at functions all over the West. His loss leaves a difficult place to fill in a hard and difficult field.

A Healing Mission.

A Spiritual Healing Mission was held in St. John's Church, Savannah, from January 6 to 10, conducted by the Rev. A. J. Gaynor Banks, D. D., Director of the Society of the Nazarene. At the evening services the church building was crowded, and at the morning sessions which were held for discussion, the attendance was excellent. The choir of men and young women at the evening services was of great assistance, and Dr. Banks expressed his gratitude for their help. The Mission resulted in many new members for the Society, and in addition to the Nazarene Guild which was organized after the Mission conducted two years ago by the founder, the late Rev. Henry Wilson, a second group has been formed at St. Paul's Church, as part of the original Guild. The latter meets one night each week, and St. John's Group meets every Wednesday morning. Following the Savannah mission, Dr. Banks left for Brunswick, where he held a four days' mission at St. Mark's Church.

Social Service Conference.

After the evening service at St. John's Church, Savannah, on Sunday, January 13, the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, of Augusta, vice-chairman of the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Service, held a conference in the parish hall, which was attended by about one hundred members of the church. Reports were made from the six parishes, both white and colored, on their social service work. The Diocesan Department is urging that the study for the discussion groups during Lent conform to the request of the National Department, and that of jail conditions, and Mr. Barber in his address gave a comprehensive talk on the county jails of the state.

The Rev. Charles H. Lee, rector of St. Paul's Church, Macon, Ga., preached on Sunday morning, January 13 at St. John's Church, Savannah, making an appeal for sufferers in the Near East, and the offering for this cause amounted to $600.

Memorial of the Richmond Clericus to the Late Rev. Edward L. Goodwin, D. D.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove our brother, the Rev. E. L. Goodwin, D. D., from his earthly labor to a larger service in the Church triumphant; therefore, be it

Resolved, First, That this clericus, of which he was an honored member for many years, treasures his association with us and values his wise counsel;

Second, That the Diocese of Virginia has lost a faithful servant, one who has served her as a parish priest, as Secretary of the Council, as a deputy to the General Convention, as a member of the Standing Committee, and as historiographer of the Diocese;

Third, That the General Church is indebted to him for his able editorials of former years, while Editor of the Southern Church, and will miss his services in the General Convention;

Fourth, That we cherish his Christian character, rich in faith and fortitude, so manifest during the years of ill health;

Fifth, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the clericus, that a copy of the same be sent to the family and to the Church papers.

Impressive Memorial Service for Woodrow Wilson.

A great community memorial service for Woodrow Wilson, conducted under the auspices of the churches of Richmond, was held at noon on Wednesday, February 6, in historic St. Paul's Church. It was felt peculiarly appropriate that services in honor of this latest of Virginia's great dead should be conducted in the church wherein Robert E. Lee and many others of the most illustrious sons of this Commonwealth of former generations had worshipped.

The edifice was packed to its capacity, and seldom in its long history had there been a gathering there so visibly moved by the deep solemnity and impressiveness of the service.

Over the front of the church there flew an American flag at half-mast, and the church's beloved service flag covered the altar. In the processional that moved up the center aisle as choir and congregation sang "How Firm A Foundation," were the Governor of Virginia, the Mayor of Richmond, a score of members of the General Assembly of Virginia, a delegation from the American Legion, a great gathering of clergy, rectors of Episcopal Churches and ministers of other denominations in Richmond, and Bishops William Cabell Brown of the Diocese of Virginia, and Collins Denny, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The memorial address was delivered by the Rev. Russell Cecil, D. D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Richmond, a long-time personal friend of Woodrow Wilson, and an address on "Mr. Wilson's Contribution to World Peace," was delivered by Dr. Samuel C. Mitchell, of the University of Richmond. Others taking part in the services were the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., rector of St. Paul's, who was in general charge. The Rev. H. D. C. MacLachlan, D. D., pastor of the Seventh Street Christian Church, who read the lesson; Bishop Denny, who led in the responsive reading of Psalms 39 and 40, and Bishop Brown, who said the Creed and Prayers.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Epiphany Church, Danville.

The Mercer-Hadley Mission held at Epiphany Church, January 20-27, inclusive, was a great success and all who attended the services are deeply grateful to God for the blessings which the mission brought. The life stories of both Mr. Mercer and Mr. Hadley so simply and effectively told leave no doubt that Christ alone can bring happiness and power to the human soul. Attendance at the Holy Communion and family prayer were two of the outstanding features of the mission, upon which both laymen laid great emphasis. The rector, the Rev. Malcolm S. Taylor, is striving hard to hold these duties before his flock by urging attendance at the communion and having the family altar well established in the congregation.

A wide-awake Young People's Society has been organized recently among the young people. A light supper will be served each Sunday afternoon at six o'clock in the Church School room, after which the meetings will be held. The organization has started with good attendance and much enthusiasm and it is earnestly hoped that a strong, permanent Young People's Society will be the outcome.

The Church School teachers met recently to perfect plans for the Lenten Offering. The aim this year will be missionary education. To each class will be assigned a missionary jurisdiction for which a stipulated sum will be asked. Every Sunday during Lent two pupils will give three minute talks on the field for which their class is working. By this method the hope is raised that interest will follow knowledge and that generous offerings will follow interest.

On February 23 and 24 the parish will have a distinguished guest in the person of Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council. It is Mr. Franklin's first visit to Danville and much good is anticipated as a result of his coming. He will have a conference for the entire parish on the night of the twenty-third, explaining in detail the Church's Program and answering questions concerning the work of the National Council and the Church at large.

New York Honors Former President Wilson.

The memory of the great Virginian, former President Wilson, was honored in New York in the highest degree possible, and by the foremost men and women. Perhaps in no city was criticism of his acts more bitter two or three years ago. Upon his death, statements made concerning him, his motives, his ideals, his place in history, could not be higher in character. Indeed, most people have been astonished, not that Mr. Wilson should be so rated, but that men and newspapers so hostile so short a time ago, should now employ such words. Not that the words are not sincere, but that recognition of greatness has come so much sooner than had been expected.

The noon-day feature—business men taking the noon hour to crowd into churches—was employed as it is in New York in growing measure. Trinity and St. Paul's Chapel downtown were crowded and far more turned away. All business stopped for three minutes.

A great mass meeting was held in Madison Square Garden, in his memory and at the hour of the Washington obsequies. In other centres meetings were held. Speakers included the rector of Trinity Church, the Hon. James W. Gerard, the former ambassador; Chancellor Brown, of New York University; former Ambassador John W. Davis, Dean Robbins, who gave his address in the Cathedral. The last named gave a personal note that is of keen interest:

"It was my privilege about a year ago to call upon Mr. Wilson at his invitation, and, in company with his personal friend, Norman H. Davis. Mr. Davis and I spoke of what appeared to us to be the more favorable trend of thought in this country with reference to the League of Nations. Mr. Wilson expressed agreement with what we had said, and then he said this: 'I'm not sorry that I broke down.'

"We looked at him in surprise, and then he went on to explain that if by his personal influence he had been able to secure the acceptance by this country of the covenant and its entry into the League of Nations it would have been a great personal and political triumph, 'but,' he added, 'as it is coming now, the American people are thinking their way through, and reaching their own free decision, and that is the better way for it to come'."

In Grace Church, Dr. Bowie spoke of the burying of Mr. Wilson's body, but added quickly that his influence was not being placed on Mount St. Alban. It is not confined in any grave, and will never be. The Rev. Dr. J. P. McComas gave voice to the same thought in other words. Many theatre people attended at the Little Church Around the Corner. In St. Matthew's Church, Brooklyn, there was a union service, the rector, the Rev. Dr. Morris, giving the address. A memorial organization is already under way in Brooklyn, and Senator Carter Glass of Virginia has been asked to speak at its organization meeting.

Church Club Dinner.

The Annual dinner of the Church Club of New York was held Thursday night, February 7, at the Waldorf-Astoria, and was one of the most brilliant and successful in its history. The grand ball room was filled to overflowing and so were the galleries. Mr. Henry Goddard Leach, president, was toastmaster. At the speakers' table were: Bishops Manning, Shipman and Knight, Dean Fosbroke (G. T. S.), Dean Ladd (Berkley), President Ogilby (Trinity College), President Bell (St. Stephen's), the Rev. J. H. Randolph Ray, the Rev. Studdert-Kennedy, Mr. R. Fulton Cutting, Mr. Henry L. Hobart, Mr. George Zabriskie, Monsieur Charles Barret, and Mr. George W. Hulsart. The three speakers were Bishop Manning, Dean Robbins and the Rev. Studdert-Kennedy.

Bishop Manning said he could recommend the episcopate as a most interesting and varied career. He spoke with unusual fervor, insisting that the Christian religion was the most interesting thing to the most people. "If it goes," he said, "everything worth while goes with it." The Bishop appealed for the building of the Cathedral as an inspiration for the faith and as a witness of our belief in it.

Dean Robbins spoke of the policy of the Cathedral under Bishop Manning as being a "roomy, inclusive, hospitable house of prayer and spiritual home for all people." The Dean's remarks were received with every indication of hearty approval, the diners rising and cheering for several minutes at its conclusion.

Dr. Studdert-Kennedy made an impassioned speech in favor of that unity which must be achieved if the Church is to save the world and civilization. He said America was the most hospitable nation on earth to the rest of the world and its overcrowded millions. It stretched out its arms to all the peoples of the earth. It had room for infinite expansion. But great as was the willingness and great as was the capacity of America, he warned that "mere bigness is not greatness," and he wanted America to be great as well as big. War unity had shown at least the way, but not the method of lasting peace among men. We had all done, as nations, what we would scorn to do as individuals. Nationalism was the curse of the modern world. America must strive to avoid it in the task of welding together the differing nationalities within its borders. "Above all nations is humanity." The Church was founded on Peter's affirmation: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God." This was, as Chesterton had pointed out, a building founded on the faith of the average man, and as the strength of the weakest link was the strength of the whole chain, such a Church, so founded, could never fail. Christianity was a passionate humanitarianism, but touched with the divine and the eternal. Mr. Kennedy closed with a fervent eulogy of Woodrow Wilson as "a man who had gone to his crucifixion for the sake of all humanity."

Dr. Kinsolving's Tribute to Mr. Wilson.

While Ex-President Wilson was being buried in Washington, services were held in Old St. Paul's, the Mother Church in Baltimore.

The rector, the Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, paid a beautiful tribute to Mr. Wilson. In part he said:

"As long as men love justice and brotherhood and fair dealing, as long as they are capable of being appealed to by those ideals in the light of which the sordid plans of men sink away under the cover of darkness, as long as they hate oppression and wrong, the exploitation of the weak by the strong, the taking away of the birthright of the great body of the people to serve the interests of the few; as long as they will listen to pleas for the Christ Spirit as against the tiger spirit in men's collective dealing one with another; as long as they are interested as fathers and mothers in replacing desolation, the indescribable agony and bankruptcy of war by the good feeling and reason of some parliament of men, so long will the name of Woodrow Wilson be honored and revered as the most luminous and powerful champion of these high things."

A Significant Conference of Young People.

With Bishop E. A. Penick and the Rev. Charles Scovil, Diocesan Leader in Young People's Work, in attendance there, was held a significant conference of young people on February 1 and 2 in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington. The conference opened with a supper, served by the young women of St. Margaret's Guild, at which about forty young people were seated. Following this temporary officers were elected and short addresses were made by Bishop Penick, Mr. Scovil, the Rev. B. M. Lackey, of Raleigh, and the Rev. Thos. F. Opie, the local rector.

It was decided that the Young People's Fellowship would be the name of the diocesan organization and that the delegates present at this, the first conference of the kind ever held in the Diocese, would constitute an executive committee for the whole diocese. This committee will meet twice a year and will direct plans for a diocesan-wide young people's movement. It was decided that a convention would be held in the fall and that a monthly bulletin would be issued as a young people's diocesan organ. This was a notable conference and marks the beginning of a far-reaching movement in the interest of the "Church of Tomorrow."

Successful Mission.

Beginning February 3 and ending February 10, the Rev. J. A. Shaad, General Missioner of the National Council, conducted a highly successful mission in Holy Trinity, Greensboro. In connection with the mission he held a "clinical mission" for the clergy of the diocese at three different sessions on two days of the mission period and many of the diocesan clergymen were present to get his advice and directions as to how to conduct a mission in an effective manner.

T. F. O.

St. Paul's, Monroe.

Under the leadership of the congregation and the Rev. C. R. Cody, for every member of the congregation is a leader, St. Paul's Mission, Monroe, has recently begun to manifest a remarkable awakening and growth.

The Church School, under Mr. H. C. Hasty, is doing the best work in its history. The increased enrollment and attendance, increased offerings and donations show a healthy and steady growth, giving every evidence of progress in the future.

During the year 1923 the Church School and congregation raised and paid into the treasury nearly a thousand dollars more than in any preceding year. The Thanksgiving Offering was more than double any previous Thanksgiving offering.

The Woman's Auxiliary is doing splendid work; for which it is to be highly commended, because it is partly due to this organization that the Parish House is under construction.

The crowning achievement of the work of the Mission, however, for the year 1923, was the perfection of plans, raising funds and beginning of construction of Parish House, which, when completed, will be a $4,500 building.

This building is to be of brick veneer construction, attached to the church, being heated from the same heating plant. It is designed to conform to that of the church. The building is one story in height, has main auditorium twenty-eight by forty-two feet in dimension, three rooms twelve by fourteen feet—a vestry room, a committee room and kitchen—which are being equipped by friends in and out of the Mission.

MINNESOTA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Council: Bishop McElwain on Matters of National Interest.

The sixty-seventh Annual Council of the Diocese was held in the Church of Gethsemane, Minneapolis, on January 29 and 30.

The newly elected members of the Standing Committee of the Diocese were the Rev. W. S. Howard of St. Paul, succeeding the Rev. E. N. Schmuck, now rector of St. Mark's Church, Denver, Colorado, and Mr. J. C. Fulton of White Bear Lake, to succeed Mr. W. H. Campbell, of Minneapolis.

New members of the "Bishop and Directorate" elected for a term of three years were the Rev. J. N. Barnett, of Red Wing; the Rev. D. F. Fenn, of Minneapolis; the Rev. Jonathan Watson, D. D., of Mankato; Mr. H. S. Gregg, of Minneapolis; Mr. M. C. Lightner, of St. Paul, and Mr. C. A. Rasmussen, of Red Wing.

The Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, of New York, Executive Secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council, delivered an address on the Program of the Church and the work of his Department.

The most outstanding feature of the Annual Council was the adoption of a resolution providing for a full-time student pastor at the University of Minnesota. This has been included as a National Council Priority, but the Diocese has decided to secure a clergyman at once to carry on this important work. The funds will be raised by a special apportionment assigned to all of the parishes and missions in the Diocese.

The Bishop, in his annual address to the Council, dealt largely with the affairs of the Diocese, but referred specifically to two matters of national interest in the Church, namely, the responsibility of every parish and mission toward the Budget of the National Church and the theological controversy which has recently been given so much space in the press of the nation.

Speaking of the failure of many of the Dioceses to meet the Budget of the National Church, Bishop McElwain said, "Minnesota is an instance in point; for the final total of our contributions was $6,000 less than the Budget quota assigned to us, and by about the same sum less than those of last year. In its report the Finance Department has given reasons for this failure on our part, but I am not so much concerned with reasons as I am with the fact itself. The principle at issue is the reality of Christian brotherhood, within the Church, and no feeling of injustice at amounts levied or conviction of unwisdom in expenditure will clear us if we have failed to cooperate as far as God gives us the ability and the means. This is not a demand for unreasoning and unquestioning obedience to the behests of the National Council nor an insistence upon the infallibility of General Convention. But unless we wish the Episcopal Church to resolve itself into a group of unrelated Dioceses and Parishes, held together merely by somewhat similar tastes, we must seek to give to those whom we or our representatives have called to leadership or responsibility such a measure of co-operative loyalty as will enable them to discharge their duties. Persons unwisely chosen can be displaced. Plans poorly made can be discarded, but the Church's work must go on, and that is what must be the central thought in our minds and the central purpose in our wills."

In regard to the recent theological controversy the Bishop said, "It was probably too much to be hoped for that the Episcopal Church would escape the effects of the world-wide perplexity which has been a phase of every department of human life. You are all aware of the theological controversy which has been going on, centered apparently upon one of the Articles of the Creed, but really concerning itself with the character of the authority of the Church and with the limits of freedom in credal interpretation. Men have always differed about these matters and always will, owing, probably, as much to differences in temperament and training as to reasoned conviction.

Standing as I do for the Creed as it is rehearsed and believing in it ex animo, and doing so after having faced the results of modern criticism personally and frequently, I nevertheless feel that Christian charity bids me seek to understand and to sympathize with the man who seems to differ from me. Charges of insincerity and evasion on the one hand, and obscurantism and tyranny on the other, ought not to be made or listened to. The unity of the Body of Christ is not a dead uniformity, and if this world is ever to be brought to a knowledge the Sovereign power of the Christ it will have to be done by a Church whose members, 'while speaking the truth in love', also endeavor 'to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' Newspaper debate will not decide such matters, but frank and friendly conferences among ourselves may help. For the comfort of any who have been alarmed let me say that no one, officially representing this Church, has denied explicitly any Article of the Creed. It is liberty of interpretation that has been claimed. Neither is it fair to say that our differences are on the same level as the so-called Fundamentalist-Modernist controversy which is troubling the peace of some of the other religious bodies. Calmness of mind, faith in the indwelling Spirit, and brotherliness, will see us through this particular perplexity, I am sure."

Following the adjournment of the Council the annual meeting of the Church Club of the Diocese, which took the form of an Epiphany-Tide dinner, was held at the Curtis Hotel, Minneapolis. Many of the delegates and their wives attended this meeting. Dr. Donald J. Cowling, President of Carleton College, Northfield, where the students of Seabury Divinity School are now being sent for their preparatory courses on the Seabury-Carleton plan, made an address on the subject of the relationship of Christianity to World Peace. The Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, of New York, talked on Community Social Service.

LOS ANGELES.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Johnson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. B. Stevens, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Annual Council: Diocese Meets Its Quota.

"The Diocese of Los Angeles will meet its Budget quota for 1923!" Such was the telegram voted unanimously to be sent to the National Council by the twenty-ninth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Los Angeles, meeting in St. John's Church, Los Angeles, January 30 and 31. It was reported by the Finance Committee that the Diocese was in arrears this year to the amount of $4,000 for the National Church, so a special committee was appointed to consider ways and means with the result that the above telegram was able to be sent.

Following the opening service on Wednesday morning, January 30, the Bishops of the Diocese read their addresses. Bishop Johnson, referring to the present controversy within the Church, said that "consistency demands a reiteration at definite places in public and private worship of the Church's phraseology until such time as the Church may herself change the time-honored definitions of the traditional faith," and he therefore considered that "at this time and on such an occasion this pulpit does not lend itself gracefully to controversial purposes." Rather "we are here today in a corporate way to manifest the Church's truth, and as a body and we must emphasize every angle of the faith concerning which we are one." Bishop Johnson then went on to discuss the higher things of the spiritual life, dealing with the love between God and man and between individuals and nations of the human family.

Coadjutor-Bishop Stevens followed. He dealt with the position of the Church in Society, and regretted that oftentimes we were so eager to have the Church play its part in outside interests that we allow ourselves to be patronized and exploited by forces alien to the spirit of Christ. While he said it is right "for Christian men and women to be interested in the political, educational, and commercial enterprises of Southern California, yet a doubt looms large in my own mind as to the importance of these things to Christian people as compared with the Church's task of preaching the whole Gospel to the whole world." And he added that we "should keep our minds clear as to the fact that if the Church's Program is worth anything it is worth everything." He went on to call attention to our share in the Diocese, and to point out what we should do for the National Church, and also what was being done in the Diocese. It was no doubt that due to his remarks the Diocese was spurred on to meet its budget quota in full.

Almost the entire afternoon was devoted to an intensive discussion as to whether women should be allowed seats in Convention. The subject recurs perennially. One of the lay delegates said it would never be settled until it was settled right. He spoke in favor of the change. When the vote was finally taken the measure was defeated by a majority vote of both orders. Whether it will be raised again next year remains to be seen.

A resolution was presented and passed placing the Convention on record as agreeing in substance to the Fox Peace Plan Award, and a special letter was sent Mr. Bok congratulating him on his efforts for peace and assuring him of the support of the Convention in the face of senatorial investigation. The Senators from California were also by resolution urged to push the Bok Plan and to take such steps as might be necessary to bring the United States into the World Court.

Elections resulted as follows: For the Standing Committee: the Rev. Messrs. J. A. Evans, R. B. Gooden, R. L. Windsor and George Davidson, and Messrs. J. E. Cowles, W. F. Knight, H. E. Brett and C. D. Adams.

Delegates to the Province of the Pacific: the Rev. Messrs. G. F. Weld, C. R. Barnes, P. A. Easley and R. A. Kirckhoffer, and Messrs. C. E. C. Hodgson, William Duane, W. Smith and W. C. Mushet.

The Rev. Alfred Fletcher was re-elected Secretary of the Diocese and the Rev. R. L. Windsor Assistant Secretary.

Monday of Convention week was devoted to Religious Education. Reports were made at the morning session and in the afternoon an illustrated lecture on Palestine was given by the Rev. G. H. Wreford, followed by an address on "Meeting Religious Illiteracy," by Prof. J. H. Montgomery. Tuesday was given over to the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary. Reports were made and pledges for next year received at the morning session. The speaker in the afternoon was the Rev. C. S. Reifsnider, Suffragan Bishop-elect of North Tokyo.

The annual meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society followed.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Young People's Service League Council.

The fourth annual Diocesan Council of the Young People's Service League was held in Waco January 18, 19 and 20, with an opening banquet in St. Paul's Club House Friday night. About two hundred and sixty young people were present from all parts of the Diocese, including the Student Council, and a number of clergymen who are interested in the young people's activities. Mr. John Grey Kendall, Vice-President of St. Paul's Young People's Service League, was toastmaster, and the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, gave the address of welcome. The viewpoint of Leaguer looking out was given by Miss Elizabeth DeVries, of Galveston, and that of a non-leaguer looking in was given by Mr. Noyse Smith, of Austin. Mr. John Roak, Young People's Worker at St. Paul's, was song leader, and quite a peppy, interesting and delightful time was enjoyed by all. Guests at the Young People's banquet were the Rev. Mr. J. M. B. Gill, a returned missionary from China, and the Rev. M. Y. T. Chu, a native Chinese Priest.

Following the banquet every one assembled in the church and the opening service was held by members of the Young People's Service League. Mr. Mike Kippenbrock, of Austin, and Mr. Willie Chatham, of Houston, conducted the services. The choir was composed of Service Leaguers, and Miss Helen Melton, of Waco, gave a short talk on "The League and its Church Loyalty," and Mr. Don Cohn, of Rockdale, on "The League as It Influences our Every-day Life." Bishop Quin gave the inspirational address. After church the boys and girls reassembled in the Parish House for a Fellowship gathering.

Saturday morning corporate communion was held at 7:30, Bishop Quin the celebrant. Breakfast was served in St. Paul's Club House, after which the business session of the Council opened. Roll was called and the officers for the ensuing year were elected. One hundred and fifty were present at the Council with representatives from twenty-one parishes. There were also four representatives from Fort Worth, the Diocese of Dallas, and one representative from San Antonio, the Diocese of West Texas.

The officers elected were: Mr. John Grey Kendall, of Waco, President; Miss Olive Nelson, of Houston, Vice-President, and Miss Sarah Dossett, of Waco, Secretary.

Reports of the work in the field were given by the various delegates, and a proposed Constitution, Diocesan Standard, was brought up for discussion. The Rev. Mr. J. M. B. Gill gave a most interesting and inspiring talk on conditions in China, which made a strong appeal to the boys and girls. Mr. Kelsey Lamb, of Beaumont, talked on the "Provincial Young People's Service League," and it was suggested by the Leaguers that each League in the Diocese of Texas act as big brother or sister to some League in our Province that is just being organized. The first part of the afternoon was given over to a "Life Work Conference" conducted by the Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin. The rest of the afternoon was turned into one of frolic and trucks were secured to take them out to the Municipal Club house in Cameron Park, where games were played and dancing enjoyed. At this time the Honor Shield was awarded to St. Mary's Young People's Service

League of Houston, as the League that had done the best work during the year. The Young People's Service League of St. Paul's, Waco, and St. Andrew's, Houston, received honorable mention. Among the smaller leagues that had showed the most progress during the year were Bay City and Belton, and they, too, received honorable mention. After the festivities of the afternoon in which the Student Council had joined, every one attended the wonderful pageant staged by members of the St. Paul's Y. P. S. L. in St. Paul's Church. The Council closed Sunday morning.

M. C. B.

Seventy-fifth Annual Council.

The Seventy-fifth annual Council of the Diocese was held in St. Paul's Church, Waco, January 18-22.

The Student's Council was opened Saturday morning, January 19, with the reading of reports and much time was devoted to constitutional revision. All reports showed renewed activity amongst the students, in that they were quite serious about the religious life in the institutions represented. Addresses were made by the Rev. M. Y. T. Chu of China, and Bishop Quin.

The Diocesan service was held Sunday morning at 11 o'clock with the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, of the National Council, as preacher. The Church was crowded to its capacity. In the afternoon the Bishops read their annual letters and reports. A point of interest amongst others was the fact that the field was manned by more clergymen than ever before. Sunday night opportunity was given the Council to hear from the workers in the various fields and all felt thankful to learn that the dear old Diocese of Texas was manifesting a vigor in prosecuting the work heretofore unheard of, and was rapidly taking a front place in the whole Church.

Monday was given over to reports and discussions upon the undertaking of advance work in the Diocese. Budgets for 1924 were adopted.

The following officers were elected: The Rev. William Garner, Secretary; the Rev. H. M. Kellam, Registrar; Mr. W. S. Parish, Treasurer. Standing Committee—The Rev. Peter Gray Sears, the Rev. Charles Clingman, the Rev. S. M. Bird, Mr. G. A. Taft and Mr. Andrew Dow.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod—The Rev. Messrs. Charles Clingman, Frank Rhea, W. P. Witsell, F. M. C. Bedell, Messrs. E. H. Blount, Gus Taylor, John Roak and J. E. Hero.

The Woman's Auxiliary and the Daughters of the King held their sessions on Monday. The officers of the former organization are: Mrs. W. W. Turner, president; Mrs. T. J. Windham, secretary; Mrs. A. E. Schaeffer, treasurer; Mrs. F. W. Catterall, custodian of the United Thank Offering.

Delegates to the Synod of the Southwest to meet in El Paso in October—Mrs. William Morgan and Mrs. C. A. Sherman, alternate.

The Church Service League held its meeting on Tuesday, January 22. Most interesting discussions were carried on and work for the year promises to bring this particular phase of activity to the front.

The climax of the Council came Tuesday night when a banquet was given to all organizations and several hundred attended. The Bishop-Coadjutor presided and speeches were made by Bishop Kinsolving, the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, the Rev. M. Y. T. Chu, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, and Mr. Robinson, all of which were most helpful.

The Council is deeply indebted to St. Paul's Parish for the efficient manner in which it was entertained.

W. W. D.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

The Rev. Richard J. Morris has resigned the rectorship of Trinity Memorial Church, Ambler, to accept appointment as Secretary to Bishop Garland. For nearly ten years of Bishop Rhineland's administration as Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, Mr. Morris was assistant secretary in the Bishop's office. In addition Mr. Morris has been Secretary of the Diocesan Convention since 1920. He became rector of Trinity Memorial last spring to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. R. B. Rudd, who accepted a call to a parish in the Diocese of Vermont.

The Rev. Harry K. B. Ogle, rector of Christ Church, Franklinville, died suddenly February 4 at his home in the rectory of the church. He was forty-seven years old.

Mr. Ogle was a native of Philadelphia, and he came to his late rectorship last spring from old Christ Church, Philadelphia.

Mr. Ogle is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Martha Hetherington, of Wynnefield, to whom he was married in October, 1923. Burial service was conducted at Christ Church Thursday afternoon by Bishop Garland, assisted by the Rev. Dr. L. C. Wasburn, rector of old Christ Church.

The Thomas Jefferson Window has been set in place in the Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge. It is the eleventh of the windows of history in the chapel. The window was provided for the chapel by Dr. Charles Custis Harrison. Only one window is needed to complete the series. The Rev. Dr. W. Herbert Burk is the rector.

R. R. W.

EAST CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

Memorial Service for Woodrow Wilson.

Bishop Darst was the chief speaker at a memorial service for Woodrow Wilson in the city auditorium of Wilmington, on the afternoon of February 3. Almost all of the city came together for the occasion. President Wilson's father was at one time pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Wilmington, and Mr. Wilson is remembered by many boyhood friends.

An interesting and important report made to the Annual Convention of the Diocese of East Carolina by the Church Insurance Committee noted the fact that insurance on church property in the Diocese had increased over one hundred per cent in the past three years, though there is still considerable under-insurance. This increase has been largely due to the activity of the committee.

St. George's Parish, Hyde County, one of the few strictly rural parishes in East Carolina, now has a rectory under construction that will be one of the finest homes in the county when completed. It will be equipped with electric lights and running water. St. George's Church owns a large and valuable farm, on which the rectory is being built.

Social Service: One of the most important Christian social service and educational undertakings of the Diocese of East Carolina is that which has been carried on during the past three years by the Rev. E. S. Willett, rector of St. Mark's (Colored) Church, Wilmington. Mr. Willett has gone into the "toughest" section of Wilmington, established two parochial and two Church Schools, which have had a marked effect on the life of the community. He is assisted in this work by paid teachers, a matron, and a number of volunteer workers.

The Rev. James E. W. Cook was instituted as rector of St. Paul's, Greenville, on Sunday morning, February 3, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas G. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina. On the evening before Bishop Darst was given a reception in the rectory by the Rev. and Mrs. Cook, to which were invited the communicants of the parish and a number of friends. Mr. Cook, who took charge of this parish on December 1, has been very active in extending its usefulness.

A number of new branches of the Young People's Service League have recently been established in East Carolina. Plans are now being made, looking to a summer convention for the young people in the Diocese. It has been suggested that the convention meet at St. Paul's School, Beaufort. It would make a most desirable place for such a meeting, as the recreational advantages are exceptional.

T. P., Jr.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Annual Convention of the South Carolina Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held in St. David's Church, Cheraw, January 9 and 10, was well attended, the roll call showing seventy-two, eight of these being clergy of the Diocese.

Great regret was felt by the members that the illness of the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, prevented his presence. However, he sent a very inspiring message to the women, thanking them for assistance in his work and urging that the women make the recruiting of the ministry a subject of special prayer and effort.

Each day the business sessions were preceded by a celebration of the Holy Communion, and all business was suspended at noon for prayers and a fifteen minutes' meditation.

Prayer and the obligations of Church membership were emphasized most strongly throughout the Convention.

Two visitors from without the Diocese were Dr. William S. Sturgis, Ph. D., of New York, National Educational Secretary of the Department of Missions, and Mr. John Fredson, an Alaskan Indian, medical student at Sewanee.

Dr. Sturgis made two very helpful and instructive addresses, his subject on Wednesday evening being "Overseas Missions," and on Thursday morning, "The Power of Prayer."

Mr. Fredson spoke very interestingly of the work of Bishop Rowe and Archdeacon Stucke in Alaska, and gave many incidents in the life of the natives.

Addresses on "Interracial Relations" and "Rural Problems" were made by Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., rector of Porter Military Academy, Charleston, and Rev. William S. Stoney, of Boykin.

The reports of the various officers of the Auxiliary showed progress in the number of new branches formed during the past year, many branches reporting prayer groups and mission study classes. Two volunteer mission workers had been placed the past summer and one life had been given for service in the Foreign field, Miss Marion Kirk of Eutawville, now actively engaged in Liberia, Africa.

The Convention voted to place a memorial to the first Diocesan President, Mrs. Robert Wilson, of Charleston, in the form of a chalice and paten, in some church in devastated Japan.

The next annual meeting will be held in January, 1925, in Orangeburg.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

News Notes of Interest.

The Rev. A. J. Gaynor-Banks, Director of the Guild of the Nazarene, preached at Christ Church, Macon, January 20, to a large congregation of interested people.

The family of the late Mrs. W. W. Wrigley, of Christ Church, Macon, have asked to have the privilege of furnishing one of the rooms in the Infirmary of the new Appleton Church Home, the Diocesan Orphanage being erected at Macon.

All Saints' Church, Atlanta, is planning to build a cloister between the church and parish house as a memorial to the men of the parish who served in the World War.

St. Philip's Cathedral has turned its evening services into Nazarene services during which a special address is made on the subject of spiritual healing and those afflicted have the laying on of hands and prayers for healing at its close.

The "Diocesan Record," official organ of the Diocese of Atlanta, is now carrying a timely cartoon, besides a comic strip in all its issues. Both these features have brought great response from its readers and are unique in the field of religious journalism. The response to the comic strip has been such that plans are on foot to syndicate it to the religious press.

WEST TEXAS

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Council Well Attended.

The twentieth Annual Council of the Diocese of West Texas convened in San Antonio on Thursday, January 31, continuing through Friday, February 1. The Rt. Rev. William Theodotus Capers, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, presided over the sessions of the Council.

The opening service was held at St. Mark's Church, the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado, preaching the sermon. Bishop Capers celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rt. Rev. James Steptoe Johnston, D. D., the retired Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, the rector of the parish.

The Council was well attended, both by the clergy and the laity of the Diocese. The Rev. L. B. Richards, rector of Christ Church, San Antonio, was elected the Secretary of the Council and Mr. Walter A. Springall, Treasurer of the Diocese. Reports from the various Diocesan Officers, including the Bishop, showed that the Diocese had been successfully at work and that decided progress had been made on the advanced lines of the missionary work of the Diocese. The note sounded by all speakers was that of optimism and great encouragement.

The Woman's Auxiliary met at the same time of the Council, holding its session in the Parish House of St. Mark's Church. On Friday evening about three hundred of the young people of the Diocese met in the Parish House of St. Mark's for a delightful dinner. The principal speaker at the dinner was the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., who spoke upon the subject of the organization of the young people into the Young People's Service League. Immediately after dinner Bishop Cappers and Bishop Quin conducted a devotional service in St. Mark's Church and Bishop Quin explained the principles upon which the Young People's Service League should be organized. There was much enthusiasm manifested on the part of the young people present. Nineteen of the parishes and missions of the Diocese were represented.

On Thursday night, January 31, a Diocesan dinner was arranged for by the Committee on Hospitality, at which three hundred guests were present. The Bishop of the Diocese acted as Toastmaster and speeches were made bearing upon the work of the Diocese in relation to the General Church Program.

The Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado, conducted a most successful and inspiring Mission at Christ Church, San Antonio, beginning Sunday, January 20, and closing the following Sunday.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. T. P. Thurston, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Convocation.

The thirtieth Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of Oklahoma met in St. Matthew's Church, Enid, on January 23-24, with twenty out of the twenty-three clergymen present. The opening of Convocation was preceded by a celebration of Holy Communion, with the Bishop as celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Charles K. Weller, of Enid; the Rev. Franklin Davis, St. John's, Oklahoma City, and the Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, Tulsa. Immediately after the celebration the Bishop read his annual address. He said, in part, that this was one of the best years the District of Oklahoma had known since he had been the Bishop. The growth and development of the Church in the whole state was very gratifying and gave promise of the great things which would be done in the coming year. Advances had been made all along the line, and, while the cords had not been extended beyond the bounds of need and safety, the stakes had been considerably strengthened in the places where the work of the Church is.

The Rev. John W. Day, of Bartlesville, was reelected secretary. Nominations and appointments were made as follows:

Council of Advice: The Rev. Franklin Davis, the Rev. Hugh J. Llwyd, Muskogee; Mr. J. Bruce McClelland, Jr., Mr. Walter J. Lybrand.

Delegates to Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Hugh J. Llwyd, Chas. K. Weller, Enid; Rolfe Crum; Laymen: Mr. Louis W. Pratt, Mr. W. A. Jackson, Mr. T. A. Matthews.

The committee on canons reported many changes in the existing canons. These were necessary if the District is to keep pace with the growth of the work in the state.

The reports from the several standing committees show that Oklahoma is going forward and has taken a long step especially in the departments of Church Extension and Religious Education.

It was voted to accept the invitation of El Reno to hold the next Convocation there January 21-22, 1924.

T.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

The Church School Institute.

The Church School Institute of Delaware is in the midst of its second year with an average attendance of seventy-three. The meetings are held in St. John's Parish House, Wilmington, and the various churches of the city take their turn in providing committees to serve the supper which precedes the sessions. The first hour of each session is taken by the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, D. D., of Philadelphia, who lectures on "How to Train the Devotional Life." The second hour is devoted to instruction in the various courses of the Christian Nurture Series, and the first eleven courses are covered. The faculty this year, besides Dr. Caley, consists of the following teachers: Miss Alice Palmer, Miss Willard, Miss Page, the Rev. Charles W. Clash, Mrs. Beardsley, Miss Atkinson, Mrs. Tatnall, the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, the Rev. Charles A. Rantz, the Rev. T. G. Hill. The Institute is under the direction of the Department of Religious Education and Christian Social Service of the Diocese, of which the Rev. Richard W. Trappell is chairman; and the officers of the Institute are the Rev. T. G. Hill, president, and Miss Margaret R. Richardson, secretary.

As a result of the annual canvass the parish house of St. Anne's Church, Middleton, has been painted outside and in, and new windows provided, and the salary of the rector, the Rev. P. L. Donaghy, has been increased from $1,500 to $2,000.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary Institute and Meeting.

Representatives from practically all of the Episcopal Churches in the Diocese of Michigan were present at the twelfth Annual Institute of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, which was held Friday, Saturday and Sunday, January 25, 26 and 27.

The Institute which was opened to men as well as women, preceded the semi-annual all-day meeting of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, which was held Monday, January 28 at the Church of the Messiah. Deaconess Elizabeth Newbold, who has been for many years a missionary in Japan, addressed the meeting.

The special subjects studied by the members of the Institute this year are "Creative Forces in Japan," and "Negro Development." The leader for the classes on Japan was Miss Laura Boyer of New York, who is on the staff of the National Auxiliary. In addition, special addresses on the subject were given by Mrs. Francis C. McMath, who was a recent visitor to Japan, and Mrs. Charles Beecher Warren, wife of the former Ambassador to Japan. In her address, given on Saturday, January 26, Mrs. Warren gave some intimate glimpses of life as she saw it while in the Orient.

The Rev. Harry C. Robinson, of St. Peter's Church, Detroit, who has made a special study of the subject of Negro Development, was the leader of the class on "The Negro."

The opening address of the Institute was delivered Friday afternoon, January 25, by Mr. E. E. Piper, Superintendent of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

Sunday afternoon, January 27, at the closing meeting of the Institute addresses were made by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Michigan; Deaconess Newbold, and Miss Mabel E. Stone, of the National Council of the Y. W. C. A. At this meeting representatives of the Girls' Friendly Society and the Young People's Association joined with the delegates enrolled in the Institute.

The meetings were arranged under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Thomas, Diocesan Educational Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mrs. Andrew C. Sisman, Secretary of the Auxiliary Educational Committee.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Winter Meeting of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg.

The winter meeting of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg was held in St. Luke's Church, Mount Joy, the Rev. P. H. Asheton-Martin, rector, on Tuesday, January 29, Archdeacon William Dorwart presiding.

The morning session opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Archdeacon Dorwart was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. A. Coates. The remainder of the morning session was devoted to Archdeaconry business. Seventeen clergymen responded to the roll call. Luncheon was provided through arrangements made by the rector and congregation of the local parish.

At the afternoon session, at which Bishop Darlington was present, a resolution was adopted congratulating the Rev. George Israel Browne, former rector of St. John's, Lancaster, on his complete recovery from a recent illness. An interesting feature of the afternoon session was the reading of a paper prepared by the Rev. Henry Lowndes Drew, rector of St. John's, Lancaster, on "The Present Crisis in the Episcopal Church" and contained valuable suggestions as to how the present crisis should be met.

The clergy were entertained at supper in the homes of various members of the congregation.

In the evening, a missionary service was held in the church, under the charge of the Rev. P. H. Asheton-Martin. The Rev. Guy F. Caruthers, D. D., rector of St. Paul's, Columbia, spoke on "The Making of a Churchman."

The Rev. H. G. Hartman told of the projected new St. Elizabeth's Church, at Elizabethtown. The property in which services have been held for many years has been sold, and the congregation is obliged to seek new quarters. A large part of the congregation is composed of the residents at the Masonic Home, nearby, who value the privileges extended them by the Church. The proposed new church will be built within walking distance of the homes, so that the aged guests will find it possible to attend services without going into any expense for transportation. An appeal for funds towards the new church is to be made to Masons who are Churchmen.

O Lord, we beseech Thee favorably to hear the prayers of Thy people, that we, who are justly punished for our offenses, may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness for the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. The Wings of Life.

Life is a flight, and Love its wings;
Across the land and o'er the sea,
Above the dust of mortal things,
From dawn to sundown beating free
In light and thrilling liberty.
Life is a flight, and Love its wings—
Superb, sustaining, of the sky.
I trust this strength that soars and sings
Life's source and bourne are veiled; but I
With Love, fear not to live—and die.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Churlish Guest.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

"And when the king came in to see the guests he saw there a man who had not a wedding-garment."

Such garments were furnished by the king. When a guest came to the door he was given a robe of honor and helped to put it on. This man, having accepted and put it on, had thrown it off again. Bravado, self-confidence, defiance, express his spiritual attitude. In the presence of the king that bravado withered.

What is this wedding garment? The story is told to elders and chief-priests who had refused John's baptism. It is told of a man brought in from the highways and on the inside. Taking everything at its face value, the man without the wedding-garment should hold the same spiritual relation to the new Covenant that the priests, elders, scribes and pharisees did to the old. The giving of the garment at the door and the consequent admission into the house is too exact a parallel to circumcision and its meanings and to baptism and its meanings to be disregarded. The chief priests, elders, scribes and pharisees had accepted the garment of the old Covenant, then cast it off, abandoning its penitence for assertion of their own righteousness. The man without the wedding garment we take to be a baptized man who had cast off the humility of baptism and who trusted in his own good deeds and not in Christ Jesus Our Lord.

This interpretation turns upon a fact not noted in the parable. Guards at the door would admit no guest unless he wore a wedding garment furnished by the king, and worn over the other clothes. Any who care to verify can do so from any Bible Dictionary. Any who care to realize can present themselves in ordinary business clothes at an entertainment where evening dress is compulsory. The outer darkness into which the man is cast is taken by most to mean absence from God. Metaphysically this is incorrect, since utter absence from God would be annihilation. Materialists, pondering on the passage, dwell much upon the interstellar spaces. Frankly, we do not know, and hope never to experience, what it means. The gnashing of teeth contains the idea of anger. It is angry grinding of teeth over lost opportunities. Our Lord's comment "Many are called but few chosen," shows that, of those who have the opportunity of Christianity, more than half fail of salvation; and, by inference, an even larger proportion of those to whom the opportunity is not offered. As far as salvation is concerned, Our Lord's work would seem from this to be a miserable failure.

Examining the phrase more carefully, we note that, however it be interpreted, its two clauses apply to the same class. It is often mis-read, "Many are called but few of those who answer are chosen." This is an error. All who answer might be chosen. Of all who came to the feast only one is reported as cast out.

More than half of the human race die in childhood. These are Christ's property. Concerning baptized children none questions this. Concerning unbaptized children who died innocent, none questioned it for the first centuries, few question it now, and only St. Augustine, the ultramontaine Romanist and the ultra-Calvinist, deny it. The matter turns on the nature of that Kingdom of God into which only baptized can enter. Concerning those who are called and not chosen—that in some way God makes all merciful as well as just we dare affirm: and with almost equal certainty dare affirm that the way is beyond our present comprehension and depends on facts still unknown.

A Spinning Wheel.

The front gate clicked, and a woman, looking up from her sewing beside the window, saw a tramp walk round the house to the back door. She waited for the knock, then opened the door. Before her stood a young man. He was not nearly so old as she had supposed from seeing his slouching gait as he passed the window.

He asked for food, and the woman brought him in and seated him at the table while she prepared some plain fare for him, for he appeared hungry and discouraged. As he ate she learned his story.

At seventeen he had left home and had been away for nearly four years. This was his twenty-first birthday. He had run away from home because of the monotony of life there and the hardships that he thought fell to his lot.

"And still, it was not so much the hard work," he said. "I wanted a change, so I went away. My parents were kind, and they loved me; but I didn't think of that then, although I have thought of it many times since. I'm more tired of this wandering life than I ever was of the continual grind at home. A fellow like me might as well give up the job of living and drop out."

The woman was silent for a moment; then she pointed to a family heirloom that stood in the corner of the sitting room. "My grandmother used that spinning wheel for many years," she said. "My mother has told me that she used to hear her mother working away and humming an old-fashioned song after the other members of the household had gone to bed. Most of the wool that went into the clothes of the family was spun on that wheel. It served its generation well, and still it never did anything except go round and round. But to go round and round was what it was made to do. There it stood in the same corner of the room, year after year, singing its little tune and spinning out its slender thread. It was a monotonous life, and yet the spinning wheel has a place of honor in our home now. We love it because of the service it performed for those we love."

The young man finished his meal, and, rising from the table, started to go. As he stepped out on the porch he turned back again and said, "Thank you for the story of the spinning wheel. I'm going home again. I've covered one big circle of several thousand miles in four years; if I had stayed at home and had gone round my little circle of daily living, I should have a home of my own now and not be begging bread at back doors. When I've learned to spin without breaking thread, I'll write to you. Good-by."

The woman went back into the room, gave the spinning wheel a pat with her hand, and dusted it carefully. As she took up her sewing again by the window she said to herself:

"I believe I, too, needed the story of the spinning wheel. I'm glad I have dresses to make and stockings to darn and food to cook. I'd a thousand times rather be a spinning wheel in a home that I love than a wanderer without a friend or an abiding place."—Youth's Companion.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Wooden Man.

As the Sabbath Day draweth nigh unto its close, there come unto us week by week the daughter of Keturah and her husband and their Three Children even the daughter of the daughter of Keturah, and her younger brother and their little sister. And the daughter of the daughter of Keturah sitteth beside me in a Big Chair. And her brother buildeth a Church out of Blocks. And their little sister doeth what she liketh, and it is not always the same thing.

And it came to pass on a day that she found a small basket of blocks, and she brought them unto me. And some of them were Alphabet Blocks. But there were also certain Blocks with Dowel Pins, which were to be Fitted together unto the semblance of a Man. And he had a Round Block of a Head, and a Pot Belly, and his Legs were like Posts. And all these came apart, and lay in the Basket. And she found the Head and the Body, and she thought that the Dowel Pin on the one part was made to fit into some place upon the other, and that her Grandsire would know how it ought to go. Now her Grandsire knew only that that was a toy which the older grandchildren had cast aside, but which Keturah had kept in the Basket. But he had no difficulty in fitting the two together, so that there was a head and a body, but there were no arms and no legs, neither was the Hat yet in its place. But there was one Green Button that stuck in an hole where an Eye was to be. And I looked in the Basket, and I found another Green Button. And I put that in the place of the other Eye.

Now when I gave this unto the little maiden, who is not yet Two Years old, behold, she gave a Little Cry of Joy, and she cried, Dolly, and she kissed it.

Now the thing she kissed was not the actual wooden blockhead that had only two pieces of its Anatomy and two Green Buttons. What she kissed was her discovery that the Wooden Blocks had an Human Value. It came unto her suddenly that these Blocks were for the Building of an Human Thing. And even as the Ancient Philosophers talked in the Latin Tongue of Building Hercules from his Foot, so did she find that these Grotesque Wooden Blocks had a Meaning in a thing that was Like Life and of Human Significance.

Beloved, it is a wondrous thing to behold the face of a Little Child when she maketh an Elemental Discovery. There is a Light that Dawneth in the Countenance that never was on Sea or Land but only in the face of a Child.

But now and then as I behold the investigations of Great Men and How they explore the Secrets of Khemistry and the Celestial Diameters of Astronomy and the Composition of the Atom, I find them, also, making the sudden discovery which came unto the Little Maiden. For Aristotle was right when he said that Man himself is the Measure of all things. And the Little Maiden is a Philosopher.

And so is the daughter of the daughter of Keturah.—Selected.

The Tribe of the Helpers.

The ways of the earth are full of haste and turmoil:
I will sing of the tribe of the helpers who travel in peace.

He that turneth from the road to rescue another
Turneth toward his goal;
He shall arrive in time by the foot-path of mercy,
God will be his guide.

He that taketh up the burden of the fainting
Lighteneth his own load:
The Almighty will put His arms underneath him,
He shall lean upon the Lord.

He that speaketh comfortable words to mourners,
Healeth his own hurt:
In the time of grief they will come to his remembrance,
God will use them for balm.

He that careth for a wounded brother,
Watcheth not alone:
There are three in the darkness together,
And the third is the Lord.

Blessed is the way of the helpers,
The companions of the Christ.

—Henry Van Dyke.

The Supremacy of Love.

Students of the New Testament agree that St. Paul reached his high-water mark in that "Hymn to Heavenly Love" which he sent to the Church at Corinth. Critics who refuse to call themselves Christian pay homage to its sublime eloquence. Yet such tributes somehow seem to detract from the wonder and glory of that amazing chapter. Nowhere else does the Apostle approach so closely to the absolute values of the Sermon on the Mount. To him, love represents the supreme fact and the controlling doctrine of the Gospel. For God is not faith, God is not hope, but God is love.

All Christians admit this truth of the supremacy of love. Yet how few of us embrace it in our own hearts and translate it into our daily practice. Compared with love, St. Paul declares that nothing else seriously matters. Weighed in the balance against love, he reckons religious knowledge, pulpit eloquence, almsgiving, nay martyrdom itself, to be of no account. To St. Paul, as to St. John, love alone is the essence of God's nature, and, therefore, the fulfilling of man's destiny. Here is the vital characteristic of the Gospel. And herein lies the crucial test for the Church as a whole and for each separate believer. When theologians dispute about the doctrines of faith and the understanding of mysteries, when ecclesiastics wrangle over orders and sacraments and ritual, let us never forget that all such things as these are void and worthless apart from love. When we try to draw up a list of persons whom we class as eminent modern Christians, worthy of the chief seats in our synagogues and the uppermost rooms at our feasts, do we confine ourselves to learned divines, powerful preachers, astute and influential leaders, generous givers of money? If we believe St. Paul, the one essential and commanding quality in a Christian is sheer and simple affection—a heart that goes out in passionate tenderness towards all sorts and conditions of men. Those sins which Our Lord Himself brands as blackest in His sight are all sins against love—bitterness, arrogance, avarice, despising his little ones, neglecting his sufferers. Salvation means to be redeemed from self-seeking and self-regard.

"Our life, with all it yields of joy and woe,
And hope and fear,
Is just our chance o' the prize of learning love—
How love might be, hath been, indeed, and is."

Dare we believe in the supremacy of love, with its tremendous implications? St. Paul's great hymn to charity which never faileth must be true concerning the charity of God. The Kingdom of God must mean the dominion of ever-lasting love, and nothing less. Men have sometimes argued about the glory of God, as though the Creator were concerned to obtain due deference and reverence from His creatures. But the glory of Almighty God—that which makes God glorious—is in the face of Jesus Christ. It is His pure and perfect majesty to be utterly self-forgetful. God rejoices with infinite joy to pour himself out for the sake of His children. God exists from eternity to eternity by giving Himself away.

How can the Church preach this glorious mystery of the Gospel? Not by wisdom of words, but by exhibiting something of the same Divine passion realized in individual human lives. For there is a compelling and convincing beauty about such lives like that of great works of art; so that to see them is to believe what they believe, and to recognize the supremacy of that love which they daily express. The Church can convert the world to its ideal only by confronting the world with the actual thing—the humble, self-forgetful persistent passion for all souls which flows from Christ's own pierced heart. When once that supernatural love which dwells visibly in certain Christians becomes general in the Christian Society, then "there would perhaps not be much need for books of Christian evidences." The Church grows irresistible as often as the Church can say, "Henceforth, let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the stigmata of Jesus."—Presbyterian Banner.

My Friend.

Gene Scott Wright.

"Whom I have loved long since, and lost awhile."

No blazoned deeds were hers, yet ever, day by day,
She followed Duty's call, and in her faithful way

Wrought for the Master's cause, just little things that shone
Like tiny jewels in a setting dark—and One

Who sees all hearts, and marks when even the sparrows fall,
And needs not to be told of any, great or small,
Commended her, and claimed her as His own.

To such as she, we know, the Lord imputes not sin;
Her imperfections all His grace would gather in,
And surely blot them out—while as the fadeless stars
Her lovely virtues shine, immune from guilt that mars.
And I who loved her, and knew her selfless heart,
This tribute gladly bring, though long we've been apart.

And when His Day shall come, that awful, glorious Day,
When herald lightnings glance from peak to peak, and play
Above a startled world—and then the tranquil dawn
Of better things to come, for He shall lead them on—Spreading, gently spreading, on the horizon's brim,
And turning all the thoughts of all this world to Him—

I think I see her there, with all the first and best,
Who meet the Saviour-King, and claim His promised rest.
Nothing is said of deeds—she has forgot—she says,
"For I have loved Thee, Lord, and loved Thy perfect ways,
And Thine appearing, Lord, which crowns this Day of days."
She claims no more than this, for entrance with the blest.

Humility.

Humility is perfect quietness of heart. It is to have no trouble. It is never to be fretted, or vexed, or irritated, or sore, or disappointed. It is to expect nothing, to wonder at nothing that is done to me, to feel nothing done against me. It is to be at rest when nobody praises me, and when I am blamed or despised. It is to have a blessed home in the Lord, where I can go in and shut the door, and kneel to my Father in secret, and am at peace as in a deep sea of calmness, when all around and above is trouble.—Andrew Murry.

God's Sunshine.

Never once—since the world began,
Has the sun ever stopped shining;
His face very often we could not see,
And we grumbled at his inconstancy,
But the clouds were really to blame, not he,
For behind them he was shining.

And so—behind life's darkest clouds
God's love is always shining;
We veil it at times with our faithless fears,
And darken our sight with our foolish tears,
But in time the atmosphere always clears,
For His love is always shining.
—John Oxenham.

The Smile of the Pilot.

The grandfather of Robert Louis Stevenson had an experience on the sea. A storm was raging, and it threatened to drive the ship against the rocks, which meant sure destruction. Nearer and nearer the vessel came, and all the passengers began to think of life on the other side.

When the storm was at its highest, Mr. Stevenson crept up to the deck to face the worst. There he saw the sea and sky merged as if in one mighty effort to destroy the craft. There he saw the pilot lashed to the wheel, with muscles as dependable as his soul itself, while he with all his strength and his nerve guided the vessel inch by inch into safe water. While Stevenson looked, the pilot saw him—and smiled.

Then Stevenson returned to his room with confidence, for he had seen the pilot smile. That was assurance and reassurance.

This reminds us of a trip Paul was making one season. The storm was raging perhaps more than the one of which the writer Stevenson tells on recounting his grandfather's experience. The first day was serious. They were "exceedingly tossed." The second day was worse, and "they lightened the ship." The third day was still more dangerous, and Paul, including himself, says, "We cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship." Then all sense of time appears to have vanished, because neither sun nor stars, their only method of reckoning, could be seen for "many days." "No small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away."

Just when the gloom was deepest and despair the greatest, Paul stole upstairs. He looked at the furious storm in the sky. No hope there! He looked at the fury of the waves. No hope there! He looked at the human force, pigmies in the grasp of the forces of nature. No hope there! But he looked again—into the face of the great Pilot. And the Pilot smiled at him through the voice of the angel of God. And Paul had no more trouble of soul, no more disturbance of mind, no more anxiety, no more fear. He returned to his room assured and reassured.

The next morning, or may be it was the same night, for night and day were all alike to them, Paul told the passengers and the crew how he had seen the smile of the Pilot, and how not a soul should be lost. The cargo went, and the ship. But what is a vessel filled with freight compared with human life? We, too, have storms. For days we cannot see the way—even though the sun is shining and all the sign boards are in their place. These storms are within. Nobody knows but God and us. The demeanor may suffer no change, but the ocean never witnessed such fury as is going on within. Fear increases every moment, and under such stress many have gone down. If in such a time we could catch a glimpse of the face of our Pilot, all would be well. Our Pilot smiles as truly as when Paul saw and heard and was comforted. It was easy for Paul perhaps, because of his relation to the Father, "Whose I am and whom I serve," said he.—Exchange.

The Pine Trees.

On the shores of a beautiful lake stand three tall pine trees.

All the day long and all the night long their branches wave and whisper and sigh, each to the other, and sometimes in the stillness of the deep night the Red Children say, "These trees have been known to sob; and when the winds are strong, moans are heard."

For there are spirits in these trees—the spirits of three chiefs, who, long ago, ruled over their tribes and carried on war with one another.

These three chiefs, though each was strong and powerful, longed for greater strength and greater power.

So together the three went to the home of Glooskap, the manito.

"O Glooskap," said the first of the chiefs, "make me tall. Make me the tallest chief of all the earth. Then I shall have power over all Red Men, and they shall admire and fear me."

Glooskap smiled a scornful smile. "It shall be as you wish," said he.

Then the second chief spoke. "Let me," said he, "live forever upon the earth."

"You shall have your wish," Glooskap answered.

Then the third chief said, "I would not live forever, but let me live to be very, very old, and give me perfect health with which to enjoy my long life."

"Foolish ones," said Glooskap, "do you not know that a brave death and a return to the happy hunting grounds is better than long life upon this earth? Still you shall all three have your wishes."

Then Glooskap raised his hand; and the three chiefs were instantly changed to pine trees. One was very tall—the tallest on the lake shore. As a pine tree the second chief could live on forever, and the third could enjoy the long life and perfect health that he so much wanted.

The long years roll by, and the three pine trees still stand upon the lake shore.

Are they happy? Are they content? No one can tell; for they speak not, though they sigh all day long, and groan when the storms beat upon them. It seems almost as if their hearts were sad, and that they have learned that their own natural lives would have been best. Still, the Red Children cannot tell.—From Legends of the Red Children, Martha L. Pratt.

Granny's Gifts.

Aunt Nell looked up from her sewing to see what it was that made her two little nieces and her nephew so quiet.

They were standing in a row by the window, watching the flurrying snowflakes as they came tumbling one after another down from the sky.

Then Aunt Nell got up and started to look around, as though she were hunting for something.

"Have you lost something?" inquired Donald. "Tell us what it is and we will help you hunt it."

"You may all help me," answered Aunt Nell. "I can't find your smiles. They seem to have been misplaced."

"Our smiles!" echoed Janet. "How could we have lost them?"

Then they began to laugh.

"Why there they are. You have found them for me. Now let's see who can keep them the longest," said Aunt Nell.

"Well, it's pretty hard to smile today," replied Donald. "We wanted to go coasting this New Year's morning, and now we can't go."

"But just think how much better the coasting will be when it stops snowing. I don't think it will last much longer, so let's think of something nice to do indoors," comforted Aunt Nell.

"Bring your chairs over here by me, while I put on my thinking-cap."

Pretty soon she exclaimed, "Oh, I know! We will give Granny Martin a birthday surprise. She told me last week that her birthday is today. She never receives any presents, although she climbs the hill to her mail-box every birthday."

"Oh, goody! goody," cried the children, clapping their hands. "But what shall the presents be?" asked Edith.

"Oh, I'm sure we can find something," answered Aunt Nell. "Donald you bring me those boxes out of the top of my trunk. Janet, get me a pair of scissors, and Edith bring that tissue-paper and ribbon from my room while I see what I can find."

In a few minutes they were all back again.

"Now," said Aunt Nell, as she started cutting some gay paper, "let me show you how to wrap these oranges to make them pretty. Donald, you pack these pieces of candy neatly in a box while Edith wraps these handkerchiefs in pretty red paper. I will put this shawl in a box, and then you may wrap it, too."

"There!" exclaimed Edith, as they finished tying the ribbons, "aren't they lovely?"

"See! it has stopped snowing. Shall we take the packages out now and put them in Granny Martin's mail-box?" asked Donald. "We will let Janet sit on the sled and hold the packages, while Edith and I pull."

Soon they were trudging through the snow.

"Here we are," said Donald. "I guess I shall have to stand on the sled, for the box is pretty high. You girls can hand me the packages."

"Be careful of that loaf cake," warned Edith.

"Now let's run home and watch from our window," said Janet.

They had no sooner reached home than they saw Granny start slowly up the hill. Her eyes grew wide with surprise when she saw something in the box.

"Look!" said Aunt Nell. "She has found something else in the mail-box."

"What is it?" asked Janet. "I don't see anything."

"She has found the smiles that you put in the box for her," answered Aunt Nell.

"Oh, I never thought of that!" exclaimed Edith. "I'm going to see if I can't find some smiles for every one I see all through this whole year."—Our Little Ones.

What They Are For.

"What are your hands for—little hands?"
 "To do each day the Lord's commands."
 "What are your feet for—busy feet?"
 "To run on errands true and fleet."

"What are your lips for—rosy and sweet?"
 "To speak kind words to all I meet."
 "What are your eyes for—starry bright?"
 "To be mirrors of God's light."

A Poet's Birds.

Eugenie du Maurier.

A long time ago there lived in Germany a poet named Walter of Vogelweide, who sang so sweetly that the great ladies of the court and the poor peasants in the field all loved to listen to him.

"Walter sings like a bird," they said. This was the praise he valued most; for he loved the birds.

He was very gentle, yet very gay, and was noted for his great pity for the heathen, and a great love for the flowers and the birds. When winter came and the swallows flew to the south, Walter's heart was heavy and downcast. He wrote sadly in one of his poems:

"The hoar-frost thrilled the little birds with pain,
 And they forgot to sing."

When spring returned, and the green woods rang with merry chirping, Walter was happy, and wandered abroad for days, listening to his feathered friends, and matching his notes with them.

When the time came for him to die, the poet even then remembered his old favorites, and begged that he might be buried under a linden tree in the cloister of Wurtzburgh Minster, where the robin and the thrush loved to nest. He left his little fortune to the monks upon two conditions: that they would pray for his soul every day, and every day feed the birds upon his grave.

So for many, many years, in times of peace and times of war, a dole of bread is scattered each morning over the tomb of Walter, and hundreds of little birds collect there to feed. The spot has become famous. Strangers from all parts of the world visit the poet's resting place, and listen to the little songsters as they seem to repeat over and over again, in their joyous warblings, the name of Vogelweide. No one ever throws a stone at them. No one ever disturbs their glee. The children never harm them. They stand by, with fingers on their lips, whispering to each other: "They are Walter, the poet's, birds."

Lucky and Plucky.

Freddie started home from grandma's with his birthday gifts in a basket, and the basket on a sled which Freddie pulled along after him. Sometimes the presents moved and squirmed, and once they nearly tipped the basket off into the snow. Can you guess what the presents were? They were a beady-eyed, fat puppy and a tiny fluffy ball-like kitten.

"Won't I have fun!" cried Freddie aloud. "A puppy and a kitty. I wonder what I shall name them."

Freddie trudged along through the snow. He was thinking over all the names he knew for cats and dogs, but no names seemed good enough for his own puppy and kitty.

"Meow," cried the kitten just then, and Freddie stopped and raised the lid of the basket. Poor little kitty. It was shivering with the cold, and looked up at Freddie with such sad eyes that Freddie took it in his arms.

"You poor little thing," sympathized Freddie, "I guess the weather is pretty cold for you. Here, rest in my overcoat pocket and we'll hurry home." Saying this, Freddie tucked the kitten into his overcoat pocket and ran on as fast as he could. They crossed the frozen creek, climbed the bank, and went on up the road by Farmer Sawyer's.

"I wonder what I'll name them," Freddie kept saying to himself. Then, all of a sudden, came an angry "Wurf! wurf!" Freddie looked around. The basket and its precious puppy were both gone. Then from back up the road came the angry "Wurf! wurf!" again. Freddie looked. There on the ground lay the basket and near-by stood Farmer Sawyer's big brown dog. His mouth was snarling, his ears laid back in anger. And there was the dear birthday gift of a puppy, his head high with courage, defending himself as best he could. With a "Wurf! wurf!" the big dog plunged at the little fellow. The puppy snapped out a "Wurf! wurf!" in return, and dodged too quickly for the big dog.

"You brave little fellow!" shouted Freddie. "You know how to stand for your rights."

The big dog saw Freddie coming and ran off like a coward, but the puppy stood still and waited until Freddie came up. What petting and hugging there was as Freddie gathered the puppy into his arms. Then he took the kitten from his pocket and told the story over, so the kitten might know how it had all happened.

"You were lucky to be in my pocket, little kitty," said Freddie as he turned homeward. "That big dog would have harmed you if you had fallen off with the basket. And you, puppy dog, you're the pluckiest fellow—" But Freddie didn't finish. He was laughing now, and running so fast that the snow flew in every direction. "These will be your names," he whispered, "because you have earned them. Dear Little Lucky and Plucky."

Jimmy's Text.

One day it was pouring rain, and Aunt Carrie was getting short of stories. Jimmy Bates said, "Let's play church."

There were five Bates children and two cousins. They put a chair for the pulpit, with the hassock for a step to get up.

The pulpit was so fine that each wanted to be the minister. They began to argue about it, but Jimmy said he ought to be, because he knew most texts, so he must be the "goodest."

"Why, Jimmy!" said Aunt Carrie. But the others said he might, if they could take turns passing the plate.

The plate was mother's card tray. They had buttons for money. They began by singing a hymn with great enthusiasm.

Then Jimmy, with grandpa's spectacles way down on his nose, mounted to the pulpit. How they all envied him!

"My friends," began Jimmy. "You should say 'brethren'," said Helen softly.

"And brethren," added Jimmy crossly, "my text this afternoon is 'Do unto others as you would—'"

"Oh, Jimmy," wailed a voice in the first row, "you can't have that. You know you took my ball a way from me this morning, and I wanted it so. You can't have that text."

"Never mind," said Jimmy. "My text today is, 'Judge not—'"

"But, Jimmy," piped up another voice, "you said you guessed Benny Green played truant yesterday because he wasn't in school."

Jimmy swallowed very hard, and, thumping the back of the chair with his fist, said: "Here's another: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

"Oh, Jimmy," howled the whole congregation, "not that. You ate up all the jam at the dolls tea party, so we didn't have any!"

At this the poor little minister broke down and cried. Aunt Carrie said: "I know the best text of all: 'Love one another.'"

Just knowing texts isn't much use, unless we try to live them.—Selected.

I Know a Boy.

I know a boy who has a watch,
 But never thinks to wind it,
 But when he ought to be on time
 He's always just behind it.

And when he has a task to do
 He says, Wait 'till tomorrow,
 And when he cannot find his things
 He simply says, 'I'll borrow.'

That boy may make a business man,
 I know he wants to do it,
 But he must mend his careless ways
 Or he will live to rue it.

That boy must do his work today,
 And plan work for tomorrow;
 Good habits, everybody knows,
 Are something boys cannot borrow.

Two Apartments in One.

Mr. Squirrel thought it was impossible for him to stand the heated quarters of the oak tree any longer. It was a warm day in April—very warm, for April—and Mr. Squirrel grumbled.

"Better go to the leaf-nest and keep cool for the rest of the summer. It's too warm here, all shut in as we are in this hole of an apartment."

"But cool days, even cold days, will come yet, Mr. Squirrel," warned his wife. "I think we had better stay on a while."

Mr. Squirrel had his way, however; for the family shortly moved to a leaf-nest in the neighborhood where Mr. Squirrel was sure they would have plenty of fresh air. But not long had the Squirrel family moved out until a strange feathered dweller came to look at the vacant apartment. His name was Mr. Owl. He liked the looks of the place and rented it. Then he settled down in Mr. Squirrel's home to enjoy a quiet, restful summer.

But cold days came, days that made the Squirrel family shiver in their unprotected leaf-nest. After a week of them, Mr. Squirrel—even Mr. Squirrel, who had been so much in need of fresh air—admitted that the situation was impossible. Let's go back to our apartment and wait for the winter to pass," he shivered.

The rest of the family needed no urging. They waved their tails and set out for a warmer place.

But when they came to their old home, Mr. Squirrel, who had poked his nose into the door, shouted to them: "Hurrah! Somebody has lined the floor with good, warm feathers." Mr. Squirrel went in. But he came out in a moment, because he had pounced down upon the very back of Mr. Owl, thinking that he was a feather-bed.

"What do you mean!" shrieked Mr.

Owl, so loudly that all the Squirrels could hear him. Mr. Squirrel was much embarrassed, too. But he told Mr. Owl that he had only brought the family back to the old home because the leaf-nest had been too cold.

"I dislike to have you leave," said Mr. Squirrel. "But you must understand that this house is mine. My family must be housed in comfortable quar-

MAKES THE DEAF HEAR.

Remarkable Invention Enables the Deaf to Hear All Sounds Clearly.

Everyone who is troubled with deafness in any form will be interested in the announcement of the Dictograph Products Corporation, Suite 610-E, Commonwealth Building, Twelfth and Chestnut Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., that they have at last perfected a device which will enable every one whose auditory nerve is not entirely destroyed to hear as perfectly as one whose hearing is normal. To test it thoroughly they sent it to a number of people who had been deaf for years and they report most gratifying results. Many state that they hear the slightest sound with perfect ease and that their natural hearing has been greatly improved. The manufacturers are so proud of their achievement and so confident that every deaf person will be amazed and delighted with it, that they offer to send it to anyone by prepaid parcel post on ten days' free trial. They do not ship C. O. D., nor do they require any deposit, but send it entirely at their own risk and expense, allowing the user ten full days to try it and decide whether they want to keep it or not. As there is no obligation whatever, everyone who is troubled with deafness in any form should take advantage of this liberal free trial offer. Just send them your name and address for descriptive literature and free trial request blank.—Adv.

ters, of course." With these words, Mr. Squirrel went in. And when he went in, Mr. Owl came out, with slightly ruffled feathers.

The rest of the Squirrel family then entered. But Mr. Owl sat on a limb near the door of the apartment and mourned dolefully. He couldn't see why he had been deprived of his warm quarters. "Hoo! Hoo!" he called time and time again.

So monotonous did his calling become that Mr. Squirrel grew very tired of it. "Wife," he called to Mrs. Squirrel, who by this time was getting dinner, "I think I have an idea. Do you remember the room upstairs that we haven't used for years? Why can't we move up there and let Mr. Owl use this lower room. We'll be comfortable up there for the very short time we'll need to stay here; and we'll stop the frightful noise that Mr. Owl is now making and seems to intend to keep up forever."

Mrs. Squirrel agreed that anything would be better than the mournful noise at the front door.

So they called to Mr. Owl to stop his noise, in order that they might talk over the arrangement. He at last understood that they wanted to talk to him and went in. And since he didn't come out, it was clear that they had come to an understanding about making two apartments out of the one formerly occupied by one family.—J. A. Dunn, in Presbyterian Banner.

Laxatives do not overcome constipation

"More Important is Internal Cleanliness"

LAXATIVES and cathartics provide temporary relief only, at the expense of permanent injury. In time, says an eminent physician, an almost incalculable amount of harm is done by the use of pills, salts, mineral waters, castor oil and the like.

Some laxatives, according to an intestinal specialist, contain poisons which affect the stomach and intestines, resulting in grave disorders. Certain laxatives are a direct cause of piles.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Not a Medicine

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

Chew: Died, February 1, 1924, THOMAS J. Chew, of Prince William County, Va., native of Calvert County, Md. Funeral at his late residence, 204 East Preston Street, Baltimore. Interment in Rock Creek Cemetery, Washington, D. C. For more than forty years Mr. Chew was a vestryman of St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, Va.

London: Entered into the life eternal, January 31, 1924, at his home in St. Augustine, Fla., REV. JOHN LONDON, aged seventy-four years and eight months. During his fifty-four years in the ministry he accomplished untold good, carrying the message of Christ into isolated country districts. He was at St. James'

Parish, Louisa, for several years, and was held in high esteem.

"Numbered with the saints in glory."

REV. EDWIN L. GOODWIN, D. D.

Resolutions.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the vestry of the Church of St. James the Less on the 7th day of February, 1924:

Whereas, the REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D., rector of the Church of St. James the Less at Ashland, Va., has been called from his work here to the broader field of the Paradise of God; therefore be it resolved:

(1) That we express our thankfulness for the noble service rendered by him to our parish, our community and our State during the years when, as our rector, and later as rector-emeritus, he was our spiritual instructor and leader.

(2) That we feel the great loss that his removal will mean to us, yet we express our joyful faith that, in the new life to which God has called him, he will continue his work for the cause of Christ and the final consummation of His kingdom here on earth.

"Before us, even as behind,
God is, and all is well."

(3) That we express to the members of his family and to his beloved relatives our sympathy with the great loss which his death has brought to them, and our participation in their own thankfulness for his noble life, which, we are assured, will overcome the sadness that his death has brought to us all, through our common faith in God's love and care.

(4) That we urge all our congregation, and all the people of our community, to follow the example of his noble life, even as he followed the example of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE VESTRY OF ALL SAINTS' CHURCH ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN TYLER.

Resolved: "That in the death on January 5 of MR. JOHN TYLER, the beloved Senior Warden of All Saints' Church and our fellow vestryman, we personally, as well as the members of our church, have sustained a great loss, which will be felt among us for a long period of time. Mr. Tyler was by inheritance, as well as by experience and inclination, a true and consistent Christian and Churchman. His father was a vestryman in old Monumental Church for many years, and a teacher in its Sunday school, with the rare and almost unprecedented record of having three of his scholars become bishops of the Church.

Mr. Tyler was superintendent of Monumental Sunday school and teacher in both Monumental and All Saints' Sunday schools. No man had more of that simple faith that trusts in God. Broad and tolerant in his views towards others, with respect for the religious opinions of all men; without controversy and without discussion, he pursued his life and followed his convictions and his faith with undeviating steps, and at the same time with the most tolerant charity for all who sincerely differed with him; his unruffled good nature, his kind consideration and his remarkable sense of humor made him not only a charming friend and companion, but a man with whom it was a pleasure to come in contact at every vestry meeting or in any other church relation. His patient and cheerful acceptance of sickness and infirmity was a sublime tribute to his Christian character."

Resolved: "That we extend our heartfelt and sincere sympathy to his family in their loss."

Resolved further: "That a copy of these resolutions be inscribed upon the minutes of this vestry and that copies of same be sent to his family and published in the Southern Churchman and daily papers of the city of Richmond."

REV. CORBIN SPENCER MAUPIN.

REV. CORBIN SPENCER MAUPIN, who entered into rest on January 13, 1924, even in the streaming roar and relentless struggle of our modern world, demands and deserves far more than a perfunctory measure or a casual reference in a column which is devoted to the memory of the dead.

Born in Bedford County, Va., February 21, 1884, the day of his nativity almost coincident with that of George Washington. He sprang from a long and distinguished ancestry in which were exhibited and illustrated all the noblest ideals of Virginia and the South that died at Appomattox in the dawning vernal season of 1865. His father was William Cary Maupin; his mother Sarah Hatcher. Mr. Maupin was for years a member of the Masonic Order, a loyal son of the Episcopal Church. His ecclesiastical affiliations descending to him by a form of succession which, if not "apostolic," was at least hereditary.

His father was a most devoted and heroic soldier of the Confederacy, entering the lists at fourteen and bearing up the Stars and Bars unto "the utterance." All that related to the University of Virginia and its welfare appealed to him with resistless force, and he was an honorary member of the Alumni Association. The past of Virginia, its legendary and mystical lore, its historical incidents, had for him power and fascination. Much of his brief day on earth was passed in Warren and Fauquier Counties.

He loved especially to study the customs of the inhabitants of the Blue Ridge Mountains, where he formed close friendships with many of those unworried people, endearing himself to them by his unvarying kindness and consideration.

His manhood was spent in Washington, to a large extent, until his marriage to his cousin, Miss Margaret Lewis Maupin, daughter of the late Professor Chapman Maupin, that most critical and accomplished scholar, who died in July, 1900, in the flower of his manhood, with brilliant dreams of unfulfilled longings to perpetuate his broadening fame.

Mr. Rex Corbin Spencer Maupin, in every sphere and phase of his character, never failed to illustrate the vital truth of our sovereign poet—

"That man's the best cosmopolite
Who loves his native country best,"

and more than all, the still profounder deliverance, "he bore without abuse the grand old name of gentleman."

JOSEPH PACKARD.

Resolutions.

Whereas, Almighty God, in His wise providence, has taken out of this world the soul of our friend and fellow-vestryman, JOSEPH PACKARD, who for thirty-two years has served on the vestry of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, proving himself to be a wise counselor, devoted to every interest of the congregation, a leader in all that was best in the life of the Church, and a progressive spirit in everything that concerned its betterment and improvement;

And whereas, Joseph Packard has proved himself as a citizen and guide in the great movements of reform which have characterized the life of Baltimore for the last twenty-five years, and, as President of the School Board, lifted permanently to a higher plane the educational opportunities of this city, and who, by his integrity and the high standard of his personal life, has been an inspiration to many;

And whereas, Joseph Packard has represented the Diocese of Maryland as a lay delegate to the General Convention of the Church for thirty-six years, and has been recognized by churchmen throughout the country as a statesman and final authority on canon and parliamentary law, presiding at times over the meetings of both houses with perfect impartiality, and also in his relation to the Diocese, of which he was the Chancellor at the time of his death, unswerving in his faithful service, having attended fifty-one Diocesan Conventions and been at all times honored and respected by all as a foremost layman in the councils of the Church;

Be it resolved: That the rector, vestry and congregation of Emmanuel Church hereby acknowledge their deep sense of loss in the death of Joseph Packard and their debt of gratitude for the example of his life;

Be it further resolved: That the assurance of our sympathies and prayers be extended to his family, and that a copy of this minute and the accompanying resolutions be sent to his family, published in the Church press, and recorded on a separate page in the records of the vestry of Emmanuel Church.

Grant to him, Lord, eternal rest in the fellowship of the saints, and may his prayers for us continue to be offered and his spirit guide us as a congregation toward the ideal which he held up before us by the wisdom, simplicity and humility of his Christian life.

HUGH BRICKHEAD, Rector.

BLANCHE COLLINS KRISE.

"Not changed, but glorified! Oh! Beautiful
Language for those who weep, mourning the Loss of some face departed, fallen asleep.
Hushed into silence, never more to comfort;
Gone like the sunshine of another country
Beyond our ken."

This poem rings in my brains as I think of that beautiful soul, MRS. BLANCHE COLLINS (KRISE), wife of Albert Ellsworth Krise, of Norfolk, Va., whom death kissed on the morning of December 18, 1923, and transplanted as a celestial seed her soul in the Great Paradise of Saints. Mrs. Krise spent her entire life in her natal city where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Q. Collins, husband and son still live. From her graduation from college Mrs. Krise's life was devoted to the welfare of humanity, in religious, civic, educational, musical and philanthropic avenues, where her activities were very effectual.

Even during the last year of her life, when her physical condition barred her from active participation in the many welfare organizations with which she was affiliated, her counsel and influence were far reaching and patent.

Modest and retiring by nature, her quiet strength and poise, coupled with her deep interest in people generally, endeared her to many who knew her big heart and generosity. Best of all, she had that rare gift of friendship with which so few are blessed, and for which the world is so hungry.

As a communicant of St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, she truly was consistent and devoted, ever active and deeply interested in its every phase.

The writer knew her from her teens, and a more winsome, wholesome, attractively beautiful soul never lived. Lovable through childhood, girlhood, wifehood, motherhood, truly earth is sad that she is not here.

Words are weak when they come to express our sincerest thought of our friend who as a child of God lived in her house, if not "by the side of the road," yet was a friend to man.

Her soul has gone back to Him who sent it forth some forty-odd years ago. A husband, son, mother, father, two brothers and some dear friends are left on this side of the River of Life to find her dear face looking through death's shadows.

"Not changed, but glorified."

MISS ANNA J. MAGEE.

Resolutions.

By the death of MISS ANNA J. MAGEE, on December 12, 1923, St. Stephen's Church lost one of its most faithful workers and its most generous benefactor. Succeeding her sister, Miss Eliza Magee, as Treasurer of the United Offering, she increased by her zeal and assiduity the sum total of the gifts and the number of the givers. As long as her health permitted she was a faithful worker in the Benevolent Society. When she came into possession, as the last of the family, of the great bulk of the family fortune, she rapidly developed into a most liberal giver. Her benefactions became, indeed, the great interest in her life. She possessed the great grace of giving largely without any narrow limitations. It gave her the purest happiness to beautify the Church that she loved. She rejoiced to show her appreciation of the skill of her physician by generous gifts to Jefferson College and Hospital which he had long served. Her interest extended in a steadily widening circle to include the School of Industrial Art, the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and many worthy causes. She has erected an enduring memorial to her family and supplied a long-felt want in our city by her munificent bequest of a million dollars for a Convalescent Home.

Long and gratefully will the name Magee be cherished in St. Stephen's Church upon which the members of this loyal family showered so many benefactions in the shape of artistic memorial and helpful endowment, but none will be more lovingly remembered than Miss Anna J. Magee, who turned to its activities for interest and friendship in her last lonely years; who worked so faithfully in its societies; who during life so magnificently decorated and equipped its edifice and at her death made such generous provision for its future.

For the Vestry.

I. SMITH RASPIN, Secretary.

Ah, soul, it may come to the worst with thee ere thou art delivered, but thou wilt be remembered! God may keep thee waiting, but He will ever be mindful of His covenant, and will appear to fulfil His inviolable word!—F. B. Meyer.

Personal Notes

The Rev. J. W. Heyes, who for the past year has been in charge of the churches in Hyde County, Diocese of East Carolina, has recently accepted a call to Emmanuel Church, Farmville, and St. Barnabas, Snow Hill, in the same diocese.

The Rev. John F. Hamaker, who was for a short time chaplain at Porter Military Academy, S. C., has accepted a call to his former parish in Wadesboro, N. C., and is again in residence there.

The Rev. Pembroke W. Reed, rector of the Church of the Saviour, Baltimore, Md., has accepted a call to Christ Church, Richmond, Va., and will take charge on March 1.

The Rev. Royal K. Tucker has resigned from St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, La., to accept the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Louisville, Ky., and will assume charge on March 1.

The Rev. Carl Stridesberg, of West Englewood, N. J., has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Ascension, Wyoming, Ohio, and will take up his duties there March 1.

The Rev. Claud B. Reader, formerly of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, has accepted a position at St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Rev. Irving A. McGrew, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Germantown, Philadelphia, has returned there to accept the rectorship of Christ Church, Denton, Maryland. As rector of Christ Church Mr. McGrew will have oversight of parishes in the towns of Hillsboro, Greensboro and Preston, and of other churches in Caroline County at large. Mr. McGrew goes to Maryland early in March. His rectorship of Epiphany Church, Germantown, dates from 1915. He is a graduate of Hobart College and the General Theological Seminary.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall is at present supplying the Memorial Church of the Ascension, near Times Square, in New York City.

The Rev. Charles E. Byrer of the faculty of Bexley Hall, Gambier, is holding the Sunday services at Calvary Church, Clifton, Ohio, until the arrival of the new rector, the Rev. A. N. Slayton, after Easter.

The Rev. William Garner, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Houston, Texas, was elected Secretary of the Diocese of Texas, at the last Council, and should now be address at 201 West Nineteenth Street, Houston, Texas.

The offices of Bishop Johnson and Bishop Stevens are now located in the permanent Cathedral House, connected with the new St. Paul's Cathedral, which is rapidly approaching completion. The address is 619 South Figueroa Street, Los Angeles, and communications for the two Bishops of the Diocese of Los Angeles should be sent there.

The Rev. F. J. Bate, formerly Secretary of the Diocese of Texas, who for some years past has been rector of All Saint's Church, Austin, and student pastor of the University of Texas, became on February 1 rector of St. Matthew's Church, National City, California.

The Rev. William Henry Pettus, rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington, D. C., who was regimental chaplain of the Twenty-seventh Artillery, C. A. C., during the World War, has been commissioned by President Coolidge a chaplain in the Officers' Reserve Corps, with the rank of captain.

The Rev. J. R. Mallett, rector of St. John's Church, Wilmington, N. C., and Miss Lucy Murchison, of the same city were married in St. James' Church on February 12. Miss Murchison is a member of the family long prominent in the life of Wilmington. Mr. Mallett, a graduate of the University of North Carolina, and of the General Seminary, is having a very effective ministry at St. John's.

Thoughts
For the Thoughtful

The sweetest songs of faith are sung in the dark.

"Faith is born in a man's soul like a sunrise."

Wrong-doers run before weaker men, who have right on their side.

Nothing can strengthen our hearts like knowing that God has promised to be our strength.

Every man has a right to be himself. He ought not to be dominated, mastered, by any other except God.—Bishop Gore.

"We are in God's hand.
How strange now, looks the way He makes us lead;
So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
I feel He laid the fetter; let it lie!"

You remember that story of Charles Lamb amongst his friends, when one had spoken lightly of Jesus, and he said: "Don't do that! There is such a difference! If Shakespeare came into the room we should all get up, but if Jesus Christ came into the room we should all fall down."

This world is but a school to train us for the life to come: and for most of us—nay, for all of us—the best preparation for eternity is the thorough and conscientious discharge of the present duties incumbent upon us.—Eugenie du Maurier.

"Beneath the Shadow of the Great Protection,
The soul sits hushed and calm,
Bathed in the peace of that divine affection.
No fever heats of life, or dull dejection
Can work that spirit harm.
Not any power the universe can know
Can touch the spirit held with Christ in God,
For naught that He has made, above,
below,
Can part us from His love."
—Selected.

DELEND A EST CARTHAGO

Old Cato accomplished the destruction of Carthage by saying with sufficiently determined vehemence and repetition: "Delenda est Carthago." Gradually those words of his, like the strokes of a bell of wrath and doom, sank into the consciousness of the Roman people until their thought and will began to be attuned to its message. The destruction of Carthage became an implacable purpose not to be forgotten until it was fulfilled.

Carthage was one city that seemed to threaten the Roman peace; consequently Rome wanted to destroy it. In all the generations since nations have been imagining that if they could destroy this or that city or rival nation, they themselves would triumph. So they have destroyed their Carthages and their other foes, whatever they may have been; but ultimately they themselves have gone the way of their enemies. Carthage was destroyed; but when her time had come, so was Rome.

What the world needs now is to stop imagining that by destroying this or that rival interest peace and greatness will be assured. It is not a question of destroying our particular Carthage, be it France against Germany, Italy against the Jugo-Slavs and the Greeks, the white races against the yellow races. It is a question of destroying the whole system which in the long run will overthrow the Carthages and the Romes, and all other nations which imagine that somehow through war we can gain a decent world. The time has come when we have got to learn to put the same sort of passionate determination and unrelenting perseverance into destroying war itself, which patriots in many generations have devoted to destroying their enemies. For unless the nations do come together to destroy war, then war, as the impartial enemy of every nation, will sooner or later very completely and implacably destroy us all.

The Federal Council of Churches, that invaluable agency of Christian cooperation, has put forth recently a leaflet (which may be obtained at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York), entitled "International Good-Will, The Ideal and Task of the Churches." In brief and definite fashion it sets forth why the war system is unchristian and unnecessary and what is the task for the churches and the world. It suggests also a specific program for the interest of Christian people, and it concludes with this "Call to Christians of America."

"We call upon all Christian people in every church and every home

"I. To Pray. Let us pray as a people for forgiveness for our long apathy to the continuance of the war system, forgiveness for our blindness to the utterly un-Christian character of war, forgiveness for our national selfishness, for our lack of love to enemies, for our self-satisfaction and self-righteousness, for our race pride and arrogance. Let us pray for fresh enlightenment of our minds that we may see clearly where the pathway lies, for a new spirit of devotion to Jesus Christ, our Lord, for a new desire and a fixed will to do His will in our international relations.

"II. To Study. The ancient war system of the world will never be abandoned nor the war spirit cast out by mere emotional condemnation. Let us therefore devote ourselves to the conscientious study of these great and terrible questions of modern life. Let us learn to think clearly, accurately and sanely on these problems and tasks. Let us educate our youth and our children to have faith in the possibility of achieving a Christian international life and to find constructive methods for its realization. For permanent world peace can come only from justice, justice from impartial law, and impartial law only from orderly society, organized on the principles of universal goodwill, revealed to us in Jesus Christ.

"III. To Work. Let us unite with fellow-thinkers and fellow-workers of all lands and nations. Let Christians by the million consciously and definitely join the ranks of those who seek first of all the kingdom of God and His righteousness in international life. Let us all move forward together. Separate individuals and unrelated companies cannot win a great victory.

"In order to carry forward with vigor the Christian Crusade for a Warless World we earnestly urge

"1. That each constituent body of this Council, at its next regular session, pass a clear and ringing declaration on the responsibility of the Church and of individual Christians in helping establish a system of international relations that will secure world justice, world order and world peace.

"2. That each City Federation or Council of Churches and each Ministerial Association in all cities and towns establish a Committee on Goodwill, and report to the Federal Council's Commission, and that local churches and congregations be encouraged to keep in touch with the Commission.

"3. That colleges, theological schools and seminaries provide required courses for their students on international questions. Let them also provide special courses for persons preparing for service in this noble cause.

"4. That all organizations, groups and regular study classes within or affiliated with the churches and all Sunday schools promote the use of suitable study and reading courses.

"5. That church members be zealous in the performance of their duties as citizens, regarding this as a vital part of their Christian obligation to secure the supremacy of the spirit and ideals of Jesus in national and international life."

Could there be any better activity for Christian people in Lent than a study of the way in which Christian energies may be definitely enlisted in an intelligent and deliberate crusade for the destruction of war?

UNITY THROUGH SERVICE

Few bishoprics in the Church are more important now, or will be more important in the coming years, than that of Washington. In the city where the government of the nation has its seat and toward which, therefore, the attention of the nation is constantly turned, the leaders of the Church, as well as of the State, have a certain representative character for the whole people. If in relation to the other great energies of our national life, the spokesmen of religion in the capital seem inadequate and unimportant, then by a reflex influence the instinctive estimate of the power of religion will be diminished in men's minds everywhere. And if, on the other hand, the message of the Church can be proclaimed in Washington with truth and with power, so that there in the place where the destinies of the nation are so largely shaped it shall be made manifest that there can be no ultimate right shaping of those destinies except as religion enters in, then all over the country men will have a new and nobler sense of the necessity of religion for fully proportioned life.

In the light of considerations such as these, it is a matter for gladness in our own Church that the National Cathedral is to be built, and indeed is being built, on the noble height of Mount St. Alban. The burial of Woodrow Wilson's body there brought the Cathedral to the attention of America in sudden and vivid fashion. But it is not only, nor chiefly, as a place of burial for the great dead, a Westminster Abbey for the America of tomorrow, that it need ultimately depend for its hold on the imagination of the American people. Rather is it to be hoped that along with its beauty and its commanding site it should become commanding also for the quality of the message which shall be spoken from its pulpit. Its pulpit can lift preachers up to the attention of the multitude. The needful thing is that there shall be men associated with that Cathedral who have a message which the multitude ought to hear.

Bishop James E. Freeman was elected as head of the Diocese of Washington less than a year ago. In God's providence the far greater part of his ministry as Bishop should lie in years yet to come. What leadership he will rise to and what capacity of prophethood he will achieve in the name of the Church through those expanding years, the future alone will tell. But his first address as Bishop to a Diocesan Convention is one of happy augury. Speaking to his Diocese, and in a sense to the whole Church, he avoided the theological controversies which provoke division. He did what so greatly needs to be done everywhere in the Church—that is to say, he tried to lift his own thought and the thought of his hearers up to that challenge of our militant duties which transcend small discussions and which bind men into one.

He said:

"The world needs today the prophet who believes and practices the thing he preaches: it is yearning for the witness who has been with Jesus and learned of Him; yes, for the witness who with boldness and fidelity dares to attack both the follies and the vices of his age. It will rejoice to heed and follow the man who has the courage, even in the face of public opinion or the conventions of polite society, to condemn practices or usages that are indecent, vicious and destructive of the moral character. Never before, perhaps, in human history has the prophet of God had a more commanding place of power and influence than he holds today. In the language of John Brierly, 'let him come with a new mandate for the soul upon his lips, and though his speech be in the dialect of a Galilean peasant, the world will hear him gladly.'

"I am by no means to be regarded as pessimistic in my outlook, but I dare to affirm that there is vast need for a mighty revival within the Church today. A distinguished English writer has recently said that 'religion is losing ground and materialism is gaining ground, chiefly because the power of religion to change men's lives is now almost wholly unknown, or if known is regarded as an example of mere emotionalism working on weak intellects.' These are solemn words and need to be heeded. If we have piped to the people and they have not danced, gether lest we all be overthrown.

we have piped the wrong strain. No great revival of religion has ever been ushered in save through the passion of the prophet. Repeatedly through a revival of preaching and a fresh accent upon spiritual values, the Church has worked a reformation in human society. The Saviourhood of Jesus, the utter indispensableness of it to a world confused and distracted, must with increasing zeal and power be presented today. The whole accent of our ministry must be placed upon this: 'there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved.' I might, with propriety and in accordance with well-established custom, make this, my first address to you as Bishop, deal with diocesan organizations and agencies, with the pressing need for more money with which to carry on our missionary, parochial and diocesan work. I confess to you that it is becoming increasingly clear to me that too much accent has been placed upon these things, too little upon the spirit that alone can generate them. Our missionary appeals fall upon dull ears and unresponsive hearts because they smack too much of the counting-room. We cannot get dollars out of unconverted or half-loyal people. Where the love of Christ constrains there is no difficulty about an adequate income to meet all needs. Our religious faith is not preached in terms of self-abnegation and self-surrender, hence there is little evidence of self-sacrifice. Now as never before we need to declare to our people His word: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' If the Church would stop publishing year books containing statistics or the records of multiplied organizations and address itself more completely to its primary business of saving men and women from the enervating and soul-destroying influences of a pleasure-mad, mammon-worshipping age, where marital ties are so loosely regarded that they safeguard neither the sacred things of home or child life, and where Sunday is converted into a carnival, in a word, if the power of the prophet were restored and religious principles that lie at the very foundations of our nation were preached without fear or favor, we should witness the Church's altars once again thronged with devout and faithful worshippers. No denatured pabulum will serve the present need. No pulpit that purveys negations and speculations will be heeded. The power of the Evangel to attract and win the reverent devotion of men has not waned. The uplifted Son of God can still hold the vision of mankind. We may as well face the facts as they present themselves today; either we press with insistence and flaming zeal the mighty teachings of Christ, or so-called Christian civilization must suffer an impairment worse than that which the wild havoc of war produces. If worldliness cannot be banished from the sacred precincts, if those standards of living enunciated by Christ cannot be maintained, if the sanctities of life cannot be preserved, the material riches in which we trust will prove of no avail when the forces of evil hold the place of sovereign power. The issue is joined; it is either Odin with his valhalla of cruel emissaries, or it is Christ made regnant in the hearts of men. 'Choose ye this day whom ye will serve,' is the bold challenge of this critical hour."

This is indeed a "critical hour." A civilization needs to be saved, and the full power of Christianity will be required to save it. The consciousness of that would put a new face on theological intolerances. When men are confronted with the enemy at the gate, they suddenly begin to attach a new value to every person whom they can claim as an ally. And when the whole Christian Church begins to understand the intense reality of the crusade for the most elemental spiritual convictions which it has got to wage in our world today, it will begin to understand that differences in theological definitions are mostly a very small matter in comparison with the need of fighting to-

PERSONAL RELIGION

By the Right Reverend Byod Vincent, D. D.

There is a side of the Christian life which seems to need fresh recognition and emphasis again today. It is that of personal religion, especially in the matter of personal faith.

This needs to be distinguished, to begin with, from corporate religion and corporate faith. The first believers we know were taught and baptized simply "in the name of the Lord Jesus." But as that baptismal formula expanded into "the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," naturally this Triune name had to be explained to converts, especially to pagan converts. They had to be told something about the Father, Son and Spirit. Meanwhile, we also see, there was growing up in the Church's own consciousness a clear distinction between "faith," on the one hand, as an attitude of Spirit—as a belief in, and personal devotion to, Jesus as the Son of God and Saviour—and, on the other hand, "the faith" as a body of saving truth to be believed in the same connection. This came to be referred to in the New Testament, Scripture as "the faith once for all delivered to the saints"; as a sacred "deposit" to be faithfully guarded and handed on; as "things heard" authoritatively from the apostles themselves, to be "committed in term to trustworthy men who should be able to teach others also." So creeds grew up; settling first into the form of the Apostles' Creed, still used, in a more or less modified form, as a baptismal confession in the Western Church. In the East, Christianity, face to face with Greek thought, in an age of intellectual keenness never since excelled, beset by all sorts of philosophical criticism and skepticism, found itself simply compelled, in self-defense, still further to define and declare every utmost theological implication of its faith. So we came to have the so-called Nicene Creed, which, by the way, began originally with the words "We believe," not "I believe," and so was meant only to declare the Church's corporate faith, but which has almost ever since been used also as a baptismal confession in the Eastern Church. In other words, in all the old historic churches, including our own, believers, instead of directly professing belief in Jesus Christ Himself and being baptized into Him, as was the earliest way, have for centuries been confessed and baptized into the Church's corporate faith about the Father, Son and Spirit. To be sure, our own Church tried at last, in her catechism, to make this all more real by teaching us that it meant chiefly belief in the Father who made us, the Son who redeemed us, and the Spirit who sanctifies us. All the same, the general or the prevailing practice was to make Christians believe that they were saved, not by any spirit of personal faith of their own, but by accepting the Church's corporate faith and being incorporated into her membership.

Now all that has been said so far is not meant to discourage in the slightest degree the need and value of such a corporate faith. Quite the contrary. We can easily go back to the origin of the Apostles' Creed and see how the Church in contrast with the fictions of the mystery religions and the illusions of the Docetic heresy, felt bound to declare the reality of the Person of Jesus in a creed of historic facts, every one of which was sustained by the letter of the Scriptures themselves. And again, we can see how, if we ourselves were compelled today, as the Church was then, to push all the theological implications of Christianity to their utmost, we should reach much the same religion of difficult distinctions and final conclusions which the Church reached then in the Nicene Creed. It was all true work; it was all brave work; it was all necessary work. No institution built up on truth can survive and flourish without an open declaration of that truth—without a standard to which to report. The only point just here is as to the use made of the Creeds then, or which may be made of them now. But, on the one hand, as to the obligation of the Church's corporate faith on all members of the Body, as to loyalty to her standards, there can be no room for question; and, on the other hand, as to the perfect freedom of interpretation of the Creeds, short of actual denial, there seems equally no room for question.

But now, when, at the Protestant Reformation, men had begun to study the Scriptures again, they rediscovered, as it were, that old original truth and duty of personal religion. They rediscovered that Jesus of the Gospels, at once so human and so divine, the Jesus who had so long been lost to sight in the glorified Christ in heaven, or hidden from view by the worship of the mere Christ-Child in the arms of His almost defied mother. They saw once more the personal responsibility of each individual soul before God: and so the need of a personal faith in Jesus as well as a corporate faith about Him. Neither kind of faith was necessarily exclusive of the other. Each was seen to be the compliment of the other. But so, at any rate, personal religion came to mean again a Christian's own personal faith and life in Jesus Himself as one's own personal, living Lord and Saviour. Protestantism has always made much of this blessed truth; but has also often been forgetful of its complimentary truth. But the people of our own Church, always loyal to the corporate faith, again need, it seems to me, a fresh urgency in this matter of personal faith.

I doubt whether we all realize, as we might, what perfectly natural dispositions enter into such personal faith.

There is trustfulness, the spirit of personal trust in Jesus to the uttermost, as one's own personal God-sent Saviour. My individual faith sets up instantly this close personal relation between Him and me; and nothing could be more intensely real and personal than the trust He then asks of me. It is like, only infinitely more intense than, the trust I henceforth have in the good doctor who has saved my life. No matter how we think of His redeeming work, whether as the imputation of His merits, or as the impartation to us of His Spirit, we know that our whole hope of salvation centers in Him. "For," said Peter, "there is no other name under heaven given among men in which we can be saved." And there are Jesus' own words: "Ye believe in God; believe also in Me. . . . I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me. . . . Come unto me and I will give you rest. . . . Because I will, ye shall live also." "I know," said St. Paul, "Him whom I have trusted, and I am absolutely sure that He will keep safe that which I have entrusted Him with (i. e., my whole self) until the great day."

Gratitude and love, too, are inseparable from such a personal trust. Nothing less will satisfy such a Saviour. Peter was forward enough in confessing the corporate faith: "We believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; yet even that did not save Peter from shortly denying this same Lord with oaths. What did save Peter at last was his response to his Lord's appeal to his love: "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?" "Yea! Lord, thou knowest that I love Thee." And what could be more real and beautiful than the converted Paul's rededication of his life: "To Him that loved me and gave Himself for me?"

Obedience is no less truly and beautifully a personal matter with such a beloved Master and Friend. Not obedience as a slave, to a mere law of commandments. "No!" said Jesus, "I shall not any longer call you servants. Hereafter I am going to call you friends. And ye are My friends; if ye do whatever I command you."

Obedience means imitation, too, of Jesus as such an Ideal Human Example. And imitation, in spiritual things, works under a wonderful law—the law of spiritual assimilation. It is the principle contagion just by study contemplation. It is the fact of our growing into our Master's likeness just by constantly looking at Him and longing to be like Him. So long, and only so long, as I hold a hand-glass before my face, my face is perfectly reflected in it. So, St. Paul's says, "We all, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are ourselves changed into the same image from glory to glory, even by the Lord the Spirit." And still more wonderful; this law of spiritual assimilation passes at length into that of spiritual identification. So completely, for instance, had Paul thus given himself—in trust and love and obedience and imitation—to his divine Master, that he was at last even able to say, "It is not I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." "I in you and ye in Me" is the way the Master Himself put the matter.

And so, lastly, through such a personal faith, may I come even to worship such a personal Saviour as God. Yes, even as Thomas did, as "my Lord and my God." For all that God is, as Spirit and in character, I see so perfectly summed up and incarnate, as God in Jesus—and I see Jesus Himself so conscious of it all, that before Him I do worshipfully bow my head and my heart and my knee. For I do not, I cannot, know God in all this, except as I see Him in Jesus. And so as Jesus is mine and I am His, He becomes to me also my Lord and my God.

Do you still ask how you can reach such a personal faith—how it can become real for you? The first answer is, "Simply by living with Jesus." When He chose His apostles, we are told that it was only in order that they might "be with Him"—not that He might teach them theologically or train them ecclesiastically—but simply that they might be "with Him," and so catch first of all the impress of his wonderful personality, the contagion of His Spirit, His example, His life. When the rulers and the people, after He was gone, curiously watched the first disciples, we are told only that "they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." And so we ourselves—how shall we ever know Him if we do not go where He is? How shall we ever be drawn to Him personally if we do not put ourselves under the influence of His beautiful, wonderful Personality? Yet remember that there, in the four Gospels, always within reach of your hands and your eyes, you have far more than a mere story or picture about Jesus. There you can still see and feel Jesus Himself, His very living Presence and Power, as truly as if you had lived by His side when He was on earth. There you can actually hear the very same words He spoke two thousand years ago; you can see the very same wonderful things that He did then. Live with Him constantly every day, there in the Gospels, if you want to see Him and hear Him and really know Him.

Talk with Him, too, even as you walk with Him; and like the first disciples, feel your hearts burn within you. For He is nearer to you now than He was to them then—not merely with you, but also in you. Open your heart to Him as the sin-laden and sorrowing and suffering and God-hungry did then, and found comfort and help and were satisfied. Ask what you will of the Father—that is, of the things of the Spirit—"in My name"—he says, and "it shall be given you."

Work with Him. "For I have appointed you," he says, "that ye, too, should go and bring forth fruit." In other words, He has called us up, into fellowship with Himself, that we may actually share—think of it!—in His own mighty work of saving a lost world—of setting forward among all men the coming of the kingdom of heaven.

Commune with Him—sacramentally. He asks it of us. And I wonder whether we always realize what an intensely personal thing the Holy Communion is? For whatever else it is or is not, it was meant at least to have all the intimacy of a family meal. It is the Lord's Supper; the celebration of a Son's utterly self-sacrificing obedience; the memorial of a dying Brother's love; the ever renewed pledge, not only of His life given for and given to us, but also of our life given to Him. Indeed, the whole spirit of the sacrament is in those beautiful interpreting words: "All this have I done for thee. What doest thou for Me?"

Therefore, be ready to suffer like Him, and, if need be, to suffer for Him, too. Self-denial and self-sacrifice are necessary parts of that way of life He chose—for Himself and for us. "Even though He was a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered," but, "If any man wants to come after Me," He said, "Let him, too, take up his cross and so follow Me."

And, finally, wait for Him. For this, too, is another help to our personal faith—I mean, our hope of the eternal reunion with Him as our Saviour, Master and Friend. Heaven ought to have, heaven can have, no more real happiness and blessedness for us than that. It is the hope in which all the early Christians actually lived and worked and suffered and died. For it was just this hope which their Divine Master Himself had so distinctly given them when He went away. "I am going to prepare a place for you," He said, "and I will come again and take you to Myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." It was a promise which became assurance even upon the cross itself: "This very day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise."

Three other thoughts in conclusion:

1. First, I know how extravagant and unreal all such ideas of personal religion seem to some men, even nominal Christians. I know how often such religion degenerates into mawkish sentiment and mere cant; and how distasteful all that is. But while it is perfectly true that real men cannot talk much about such things, any more than they can about their love for their wife and children, still this personal devotion to our Divine Master can become, even with men, something true as the sun and deep as the sea and stronger than death itself. More than that. While it is perfectly possible for some men to be actuated only by principles—doing what is right, just because they think it is right—still, on the other hand, it is equally true that, for the great majority of men and women, there is no power which will hold them up steadily to right Christian living, like the strength of such a personal devotion as I have tried to describe. It is this devotion to Jesus as our still living, personal Divine Saviour, Master and Friend which, differentiates Christianity from every other religion in the world. Their founders and leaders left behind them only ideas and institutions; they themselves are gone. The marvelous difference in the case of Christianity's Founder is that He says to us: "Behold! I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

2. Secondly: Because such personal religion, such a personal faith, is so true and vital a need, its cultivation ought always to be going on in our parishes side by side with Christian nature in the corporate faith. Especially is all this needed in our own land and day, for the multitude of the still unconverted. The last pastoral injunction of the aged Paul to the younger Timothy was: "Preach the Word. Do the work of an evangelist. Make good in thy whole ministry." Laymen care little about mere theology. They are hungry for a simple, intelligible, practical gospel. They know that there is plenty of reality in such a personal religion short of mere empty sentiment and cant; and the man who preaches to them the strong and godly Jesus of the Gospels will never want a hearing. The pastor's own preaching may well be supplemented, too, by "Classes in Personal Religion"; and also by special seasons of evangelism in every parish, by men of special gifts for it.

3. And lastly: I hope that the day will come when this dear Church of ours will have the courage to go back to the primitive practice for centuries before there were any creeds, and strike out our second baptismal question: "Dost thou believe all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed," and substitute for it some such question as this: "Dost thou believe in Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of men?"

Not that I would encourage either the denial or the ignoring of the creeds, but only limit them to their right place and use. They should still be kept to the front, like the Te Deum and the Gloria in Excelsis, in the Church's worship, as her corporate declaration and defense of the historic Christian faith. I would have them run up as a standard to the masthead and nailed there!

But what I should also like to see done in the interest of personal faith is to go back to the simple, primitive, New Testament conditions of Christian discipleship and Church membership, by requiring at baptism only a confession of personal faith in Jesus Himself as a personal Saviour instead of faith in the articles of a creed. I would have a return to our Lord's own method with His disciples of "calling" them at first, only to "follow" Him and be "with Him"—that is, just to put themselves under the influence of His blessed and mysterious Personality and then let them grow up in this way (as Bishop Gore so plainly points out that the first disciples did) into the full apostolic confession of Him at last as "the Son of the living God."

Suppose that the baptismal question and formula were made to read something like this:

"Do you renounce, etc.?" "I do."

"Do you believe in Jesus, the Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of men?" "I do."

"Do you accept and want to follow Him as your personal Saviour and Master?" "I do."

"Do you desire to be baptized in this faith?" "I do."

"Will you then obediently keep, etc.?" "I will by God's help."

"Then I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

It seems to me that there is absolutely no comparison in vital reality between such a direct confession of personal faith and an indirect profession of faith in the declarations of a creed.

More than that. I am profoundly convinced by frequent personal assurance that there are many men and women who ought to be in the Church and whom the Church needs, but who in these days of intense and honest intellectual scrutiny, hesitate about committing themselves at once to all the articles and definitions of a creed. I know that there are many of these who do really love Jesus Christ, who believe in Him however vaguely as divine and who would gladly be baptized and enrolled as His disciples and followers if they could do it now as Jesus asked men to do it at the beginning, and so grow naturally and almost inevitably into the full realization and confession of His unique Sonship and Lordship as the Church herself declares this.

A LITTLE JOURNEY IN THE WEST

By the Reverend James Sheerin
Part I

RETURNING East by a Southern route, the traveler comes through a territory less advanced in civilization than is found in California, and therefore it may be assumed less developed in ecclesiastical life, be it in schools, hospitals or parishes. There was originally a similar mingling of Spanish, Mexican and Indian factors. The Roman Catholic Church is usually in control of Pueblo Indians in their villages, largely, if not altogether, an inheritance from the days of Mexican jurisdiction. But thus far the newer and more American element does not dominate as in California. Nevertheless, there are notable exceptions. Phoenix, Arizona; Albuquerque and Santa Fe, New Mexico, have everything that may be regarded as typical of the best American civilization. The presence of Episcopalians is manifested by well conducted modern hospitals, sanitariums or schools, and the ratio of communicants in those highly developed communities is almost up to Eastern figures. One can trace this favorable showing to the early presence of strong and broad-minded Episcopalians like Governor L. Bradford Prince, of Santa Fe, whose influence was not only felt locally, but was powerful in National Church Councils. The bishops have been men of high character, as well as broad and sympathetic with tians of other names. Dunlop and Kendrick were men of large vision in Church work. Of course things ecclesiastical are on a small scale, just as the secular institutions are. It is almost shocking to go to the only Episcopal Church in Santa Fe and find that it scarcely holds 200 people. It is tasteful enough in architecture, and is built solidly of stone, but is subject to a criticism rather common to other Episcopal "plants" in refined communities. It gives no impression of reaching or helping more than the select few.

Kansas has a status of life that is not, as religious things go, naturally Episcopalian, and the "churchly" clergy who control our work there are not too willing to become a cooperating part of its larger religious life. In the State noted for prohibition and Protestantism, Episcopalians who controlled the Church in Kansas were oftentimes the positive or aggressive kind who pull against such ideals. Yet the proportion of communicants to population in Topeka is better than in cities of the same size further North. Like Nebraska and Iowa, Kansas may be described as a rural State, since there are few, if any, cities exceeding 100,000 people. Therefore, the normal condition is that there are a few well developed parishes in the larger centers, with next to no work in smaller towns and agricultural districts.

Missouri gives one the impression of being much more of an Episcopalian State than the others, though I made no special effort to verify this. As Western Church statistics go, Kansas City and St. Louis have a fair share of Episcopalians, the per cent being something like one in one hundred or more. The church buildings tend to be impressive. Perhaps no American city has a more complete or better placed cathedral than St. Louis has. Usually our cathedrals are only in the making stage, and are sometimes set far from the people, but here is one in the heart of St. Louis about the size of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, with a reredos equal in beauty to Trinity's, and with steeple and all the proper adjuncts of ecclesiastical architecture strangely finished. There are also other powerful parish churches in that handsome city, and from the Bishop to the humblest rector one gets the impression of the Church holding a place of respect in the community rarely surpassed. Strongly suggestive of this was a meeting held in the cathedral the Monday I was there. It was an all-day rally of the Ministerial Alliance of St. Louis and vicinity, made up of ministers of all denominations, welcomed to the cathedral by the Dean and the Bishop, who did not hesitate to have their share in so "unchurchly" a gathering! There are flaws, no doubt, in the Church work of St. Louis, and, like almost all other places, Episcopalians there are true to their chief prayer, "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done"; but as the traveler goes about its streets he notes, in contrast with certain further West sections of the country, that he is again where there are powerful churches willing as well as able to help less fortunate districts of Christendom. It could hardly be that such an apostolic man as Bishop Tuttle should live so long in the community without producing a powerful impression, and there has always been in the Mound City a considerable number of older families, many of them of Southern blood, whose dignified loyalty to Prayer Book ways helped lay foundations not easily shaken by the inrush of alien methods and races. Possibly also St. Louis was helped Episcopalianward by the fact that it was largely German in its second generation of increasing population. It was from the Lutheran portion of that great race that many thousands came into the Episcopal Church in New York City, through the attractive work of great East Side chapels.

Indiana has had a career somewhat like Kansas or Iowa. Being a "city" church largely, Episcopalians having had few populous centres in which to make gains have not specially flourished, and the rural field was never definitely invaded. Besides, the kind of Churchmanship in power was not primarily fitted to cope with the problems of a people so Protestant in nature. There must have been good work done in early times in Indianapolis, for in its very handsome central circle, a monumental bit worthy of some great European city planning, there stands Christ Church, looking all that a church should look in such an imposing community centre. Statistics show the Episcopal Church, as a whole, very weak in this city, something like one communicant in nearly 200 inhabitants. As in so many places, it has not kept pace with the population.

Cincinnati brings us back to a greater degree of strength, such as that of Pittsburgh, about one communicant in seventy. Harking back from these two solid cities to the farthest West, the one great inference subject to proof is that there is no longer a frontier in American civilization; nor is there a hard and fast distinction to be made in the relative merits of Churchmanship, even though there be differing degrees of strength in numbers or property. It is undoubtedly true that the external marks of Churchmanship that came in the wake of the Oxford or Catholic movement are much more prevalent and uniform in the West. Almost every church one enters has candles on the altar, and the small town church is apt to render a mode of worship that is only found in the few ritualistic churches of the larger Eastern cities. Thus far it may be that they are too "high" to be typically Episcopalian. This often has an adverse effect on the traveler who prefers less ceremony, and has certainly been a factor in retarding the Church's growth in the West. But, allowing for all that, it is nevertheless true that there is an Episcopalian standard to be found East, West or South, and that it includes a love of art and beauty of language, as well as architecture that is not so evident in other quarters.

Speaking of the nation as a whole, there is a growing standardization in social life. This is probably more marked than in Colonial days, or in the era before the War of the States. In every part of America one can immediately understand the English language, a fact that is hardly true of the much smaller England. The same books, the same home conditions, the same music, the same pictures, and practically the same plays are found everywhere. If there is any advantage, it is probably on the side of the small Western city, where home life is a delight as compared with the barrack-like existence of cramped quarters in New York City. There are critics who reprehend such uniformity of citizenship, and yet without it there would be less domestic comfort, as well as less ability to influence the world as a whole.

The standardization of social life and political views, wherein a nucleus of agreement is always found, is not unlike that of the Church, which for the most part is one in spite of its occasional fads and fancies in ritual, or even when loudest in doctrinal disputes. Its oneness is best seen where there is loyalty to the principle of comprehensiveness, though it may be hard to include in that good sense of toleration all the eccentricities of ritual and belief some men seem gifted in generating.

As to religion in general, "New Thought" vagaries are quite prevalent in such centres as Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. The newness is not always so apparent as its disciples assume, nor is it necessarily indigenous to the new California soil. Such sects seem to thrive more there than in Baltimore, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, but hardly to a greater degree than in Boston, Concord, or New York. If Fundamentalism be taken to mean a rather unintelligent loyalty to verbal inspiration or a narrow keeping of the Sabbath, as it originally did, then it does seem to be more general among good Christians in the West and the South; and yet no New Yorker would dare boast much of his superior freedom and brotherly love in view of recent controversial outbreaks! Given an outward reverence toward the Scriptures, and a readiness to observe old-fashioned ideas of Sunday, the average American Christian is apt to be sufficiently satisfied, as well as indifferent, to what some imagine is a deep-laid scheme to revolutionize the theological theories of Christianity. In other words, theological debaters do not seem to grasp the fact that the ordinary Christian man or woman usually takes his theology without observation, though he is inclined to become desperately fanatical if he suspects anybody of trying to overthrow the Ten Commandments, or weaken his belief in the literal authority of the Bible, or casting the least reflection on the divinity of his Lord and Master.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

EFFICIENCY STANDARDS.

It seems strange that so few Diocesan Service Leagues or Fellowships have addressed themselves to the question of Standards of Efficiency. The Diocese of Texas took the lead in this regard some time ago, and it is interesting to compare their League Efficiency Chart with the requirements of a similar group in one of the other communions. Of course there are a number of things noted in the requirements for a standard Epworth League that bear no analogy to our young people's groups as they are at present constituted. Then, too, the very vital question is raised as to whether or not our young people will set for themselves so elaborate and developed a schedule of requirements under any conditions. The civic clubs have found it necessary to have attendance campaigns and various other devices to stimulate interest, and it may be that the Church has had to do similarly, yet it is a "consummation devoutly to be wished" that we should be able to build up a morale sufficiently stable to save us from unnecessary competitive efforts. Sometimes this type of competition engenders bad feeling, and it may even stimulate indirection.

Some leagues are shabbily conducted and need to be checked up, so that a case may be made for and against Efficiency Standards. With national organization, some basis must be established, but we need to be on our guard that the requirements be simple and fundamental, and that when once established they shall be rigidly maintained. In some dioceses there have been Standards of Efficiency for Church Schools, and they have not always been efficacious, yet competition does stimulate the adolescent age.

It will be a helpful thing to have this matter thrown before the Open Forum of diocesan groups and their reaction published in this department. Letters have come to the editor asking how general has been the establishment of League Efficiency Charts, such as in use in the Diocese of Texas. As a basis of discussion the two Charts of Requirements are appended below:

The League Efficiency Chart of the Diocese of Texas is as follows:

Requirements for a Standard Epworth League.

Prescribed by the Epworth League Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1922.

In order to be eligible under the Standard of Efficiency, a chapter of the Epworth League (c) must have been chartered by the Central Office; (2) must have accurately kept records, using the uniform Secretary's Book, which shall be submitted to the proper committee of the Epworth League Conference for examination; (3) must have the four departments organized and active and every member assigned to work on some department.

1. A written policy of work for the year, including the budget plan for raising revenue.

2. Monthly business meetings, with written reports by officers correctly recorded: Council meetings monthly; the maintenance of a Junior or Intermediate League.

3. Quarterly reports to the District Secretary; correct list of officers reported to the District Secretary.

4. Average attendance upon the weekly devotional meeting equal to 60 per cent of the chapter membership; constant stress to be laid upon active participation in the devotional meetings by the members of the chapter.

5. Net gain in membership during the year equal to 10 per cent of the membership at the beginning of the year.

6. One subscriber for the Epworth Era to every four members of the chapter (estimated on Epworth Era Day).

7. One study class in any authorized Epworth League course, or a Reading Circle using the Chautauqua League Course; a paid pledge on the Epworth League Missionary Special.

8. Maintaining the three Epworth League covenants—the Quiet Hour, the Fellow Workers' and the Christian Stewardship.

9. At least 5 per cent of the chapter membership studying for the Christian Culture Diploma; chapter representation at the Summer Assembly.

10. A definite plan of recreational activities and social service. In estimating the grade of a chapter each numbered paragraph counts ten in a possible one hundred. Awards shall be made upon a percentage basis. Certificates will be awarded at the annual Epworth League Conference as follows: To the chapter making 70 points, a certificate with a red seal; to the chapter making 80 points, a certificate with a green seal; to the chapter making 90 points, a certificate with a blue seal; to the chapter making 100 points, a certificate with a gold seal.

Young People's Conference of Second Province.

Newark, N. J.—Pledges to raise at least one thousand dollars for the Japanese Restoration Fund and one thousand dollars for the priorities in Porto Rico, the appointment of a central council to plan another conference next year and to study further provincial organization and a dinner for five hundred persons were some of the features of the first conference of the young people of the Province of New York and New Jersey, held at Christ Church, East Orange, N. J. over the week-end February 22-24. This conference was called by a committee of the Provincial Board of Religious Education, under the chairmanship of Canon Farrell, of the Diocese of Newark, and the response to it exceeded all expectations. Over six hundred young people, representing over one hundred parishes, were in attendance at the various sessions. There were one hundred and fifty official delegates from seventy-six societies present for the full three days.

The whole conference proved to be one of unusual interest. The young people were alert and keenly interested. Not counting the special speakers, every matter of business was conducted by the young people with but one exception, and that matter had to be referred to a committee of young people before it was accepted. The delegates were entertained in the homes of the parishioners of the Orange parishes.

Service Suggestions, from "The Fellowship," Diocese of Massachusetts.

For Parish Service.

1. Sing in choir.
2. Serve as acolytes.
3. Be ushers at the evening service.
4. Decorate parish house.
5. Build radio for an invalid or shut-in.
6. Send Christmas missionary boxes.
7. Call on shut-ins.
8. Help give entertainment for worthy causes.
9. Volunteer your services to your rector.
10. Send one of your young people to the Concord Conference.

For Community Service.

1. Volunteer one afternoon a week to some welfare work in your community.
2. Tutoring students behind in their work.
3. Help in recreational activities.

For Diocesan Service.

1. The Church Home Society is very much in need of automobile service, both for carrying children and for helping the social workers make their visits. A list of persons who may be called upon for emergency use of their cars is much needed. Volunteers can notify the so-

AMERICAN INSTITUTE FOR NEGROES.

Any one who is at all familiar with the negro criminal population of jails and penitentiaries is certain to be impressed with the fact that it is most unusual to find a negro criminal who has a high school education. Indeed, so great is the effect of Christian education upon the colored people that St. Paul's School at Lawrenceville has a record of entire immunity from any appearance in a criminal court amongst its graduates.

On this account we feel that the work of the American Church Institute for Negroes is well worth the careful attention of our readers as it is reported to us from the recent meeting of the National Council:

"In all but one particular, the year 1923 was the most encouraging since the Institute was organized. Below are some of the most interesting details:

1. For the first time since the Institute was organized, Southern Churchmen during the past year have contributed to the Institute and its schools, for endowments, buildings and maintenance, more than the total sum of all gifts from all other sections of the Church.

(a) Southern Churchmen contributed approximately$209,000

(b) Churchmen from all other sources, including appropriations from the National Council..... 180,000

2. The Institute during 1923 made appropriations to ten schools, including the Bishop Payne Divinity School. Fourteen theological students are enrolled at the Bishop Payne Divinity School and 2,850 students are enrolled in the nine Industrial High Schools and in the Junior College at St. Augustine's, Raleigh, N. C. Of the 2,850 students, approximately 1,600 are in the Junior High School and High School departments. These high school students are being prepared as teachers in the public schools and for other positions of leadership. Eighteen trades and industries are taught in our Institute schools.

3. The total sum necessary to build the new academic building, to cost $80,000, for the Junior College work at St. Augustine's, has been received, in cash and pledges. The General Education Board agreed to give $40,000 of the total sum necessary to build and equip the building, if we should raise the remaining $40,000 necessary to complete this priority. Including this priority item for St. Augustine's School, about $125,000 of the $380,000 priority program allowed the American Institute for Negroes by the National Council has been raised.

4. The Junior College at St. Augustine's School has been organized and inaugurated its first session in September, 1923. It is hoped that in the near future sufficient funds will be given to make possible at this splendid school the completion of a full college curriculum for our negro church students.

5. One of the most interesting developments in religious educational work among our negro students was the organization, on February 15, in a convention held at St. Augustine's, of the National Students' Council of the American Church Institute for Negroes. Rev. Paul Micon, of the Department of Religious Education, was authorized by the Institute to organize a National Students' Council paralleling that of the National Students' Council organized by the Department of Religious Education. The National Students' Council of the American Church Institute for Negroes is a coordinate branch of the National Students' Council. It is primarily intended for negro students in Southern colleges and universities, and will be affiliated with the National Students' Council in such a manner as to avoid segregation, except as a necessary executive arrangement. In the organization of this branch of the National Students' Council it is not intended to interfere with the present status of negro students now members of the college units of the Students' Council in Northern colleges and universities. It was agreed by the delegates representing twenty-three colleges and universities, including several of the largest Institute schools, that no scheme of proportionate membership in the older National Council could ever give the colored students more than a small minority if there were only one Council. The delegates gathered at St. Augustine in the name of the National Students' Council represented a constituency of nearly one thousand Church students in the twenty-three colleges and schools represented. They adopted a constitution and a program paralleling in all essential particulars that of the older National Students' Council. The action of the Council was referred to the American Church Institute for Negroes.

6. We are greatly encouraged by the fact that the General Board of Education continues to take an increasing interest in the schools of the Institute. Substantial evidence of its interest is found in the fact that, in addition to the $40,000 appropriation to the new academic building at St. Augustine's School, it has made several other pledges of large sums upon the condition that the remainder of the priorities for these schools are raised.

7. The only discouraging thing the Institute must report to the National Council is that the revenue of the schools and of the Institute is approximately $30,000 less than the sum necessary to balance the budgets of the schools, and that at least $200,000 is necessary for urgently needed buildings and equipment in order to complete the authorized program of the Institute for this triennium."

AN IMPORTANT FEDERAL MEASURE.

The importance of the moving picture industry and its influence upon the life of our people today is impressively shown by the following report of the recent conference held in Washington, and we heartily commend the bill now pending in Congress providing for Federal control of this industry:

"The Moving Picture Conference recently held in Washington, D. C., the chief promoters of which were the constituent bodies of the World Prohibition and Reform Federation, produced some revelations not altogether familiar to the average citizen.

To begin with, the fact was brought out that almost the whole of the moving picture industry of the United States is controlled by five Jews—Fox, Zukor, Loew, Loemle and Lasky. These men apparently have but one thing in mind—the profits they can make from the industry. They having discovered that films of a low moral grade will attract the floating masses, they have foisted upon the general public such a mass of films of inferior moral quality that thousands of good citizens fear to have their children make a practice of attending moving picture exhibitions.

The moving picture industry has become one of the most powerful influences upon the minds of young and old of anything today. The daily attendance at moving picture theatres is greater than the daily attendance at our public schools, high schools, colleges and universities combined.

Think what a factor for good such an industry might become. If handled rightly, it might become the world's greatest educator in the line of history, science, geography and travel. The mysteries of the depths of the seas are photographed and brought to light. The creatures of the air are brought low and put upon the screen. The remotest mountains, forests, villages, cities, valleys, canyons, savage tribes, wild animals and the civilized peoples of the other far-off lands are brought before us and seen by us the same as though we were circumnavigating the globe and wandering into the distant deserts, mountains and woodlands, or flying for miles into the air or descending for leagues into the depths of the sea.

Shall this great industry continue to be the mere means of fortune to a few unscrupulous men and the cause of corruption to the minds of millions of the youth of the land, or shall it be used to uplift and to educate in all the realms of social and mental activity? Shall it continue to be used as a means of propaganda against our fundamental law, or shall it be used to inspire to morality and to patriotic service?

It goes without saying that so long as the five men who now control the industry have their way, things will continue as they are, and Will Hays, who is paid by them and controlled by them, and who has fought the only laws which have been of help in certain States, may not be looked to as the solution of the problem, either for alteration or betterment.

It will be as reasonable to put our entire public school, high school and university systems of education in the hands of five persons whose sole object was the enrichment of their own purses as to permit a great industry like the moving picture industry to be placed in the hands of five such men.

For this reason we are in favor of House Resolution No. 6821, providing for the appointment of six Federal commissioners to have control of the moving picture business throughout the United States, introduced on February 9, 1924, by Representative Upshaw.

This bill will, if it becomes a law, permit producers to have their picture plays inspected before manufacture. It would likewise permit the commissioners to prohibit any production which had not been inspected if the same were not up to standard.

The same argument for Federal inspection and regulation of foodstuffs may be used for the inspection and regulation of moving pictures, for they both have to do with the welfare of the human race.

You can secure a copy of the bill by addressing the World Prohibition and Reform Federation, 206 Pennsylvania Avenue, Southeast, Washington, D. C."

AN APPEAL FOR THE SACRED PLACES OF THE HOLY LAND

December 3, 1923,

Russian Ecclesiastical Mission,
Jerusalem.

To the Rt. Rev. Bishop James H. Darlington:

My Lord:

I have recently learned from a pamphlet entitled "An Emergency Involving the Holy Sepulcher and Other Sacred Places in the Holy Land," about the foundation in the United States of America of a special committee for the purpose of raising voluntary subscriptions in aid of the sacred places in the Holy Land.

In our times of desecrations of the ideals that used to rule and ought always to direct the human race, when materialism reigns supreme and religion is neglected, every heart that is yet capable of responding to everything good, that suffocated in this atmosphere of doubt and unbelief, welcomes these glad tidings as a beneficent wind, purifying the air and bringing strength to man. As the Scripture says, there are still true men among the spiritual Israel and the 7,000 faithful have not bent their knees to the modern Baal and their lips have not prayed to him (1 Kings 19-18). Be the name of our Lord hallowed for this (Job 1-21). It moves us, Russians, more deeply still by the fact that this pious and noble initiative comes from the Episcopal Church, closely related to us in spirit, who has for many years aspired for the union with the Eastern churches in order to praise one Lord with one heart and one accord.

Yes, the times are hard and the financial position is critical. The World's War and the Russian Revolution, as it is mentioned in the appeal of the said committee, have been the reasons of this crisis in a large degree because (here I quote with pride the words of the appeal), "They have stopped the abundant revenues and donations and the streams of pilgrims from Russia, who brought generous sums of money for the maintenance of the Holy Sepulcher and Sacred Places in the Holy Land." It is the Episcopal Church who now undertakes to continue the task, formerly carried out to a large extent by members of the sister Church of Russia. May the blessing of our Lord rest with this pious intention and with all those who will respond to your appeal.

There is no need for any proofs for the necessity of such a help to the Eastern Church. After the loss of the greatest part of her revenue, every Christian heart, in answer to your appeal in aid of the land of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, will offer its pious gifts for the sake of the Redeemer.

In this letter I want to attract the attention of your lordship to the words of the appeal, where it speaks of the large interest and generous help that came from our motherland, the Russian Church and people to the holy places of Palestine, and dare to express the conviction that in their days of calamity they will not be forgotten and will find relief from those whose hearts our Lord will move with commiseration for their misfortunes. He will inspire their hearts with mercy in fulfillment of the words of the Holy Apostle, that every pious thought and deed of a follower of Christ will find its reward not only in the life to come, but on earth too (1 Tim. 4:8). This is what has urged me to address the present to your lordship.

At the same time as the appeal, I have received a letter from the Right Reverend the Archbishop of America, Alexander, now residing in Constantinople, with whom I am in regular cor-Bishopcourt, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Southern Churchman:

After receiving the accompanying appeal, I first consulted by mail Archbishop Platon, and he replied to me under date of January 31 from the Russian Cathedral, New York, as follows: "He is writing you the truth and he appealed to me with the same request, but in view of the fact that I have no means of helping him, nor have I the possibility of having such means, I cannot be of use to him in this matter. I put my trust in God, and if you desire—on you."

Last week, when in New York City, I called at the office of the Committee for the Preservation of the Holy Places in the Holy Land, which was appointed by the Federal Council of Churches, to inquire if these Russian mission churches could not be included in the amount being raised at the present time to pay the debts of the Jerusalem Patriarchate, which are also so pressing, and which must be met immediately if these sacred shrines are not to pass into hostile hands.

Unfortunately, Mr. Townroe, of that committee, was not present, but Mr. Shibley Jamal, representing the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, who is a member of the committee and is returning this week to Jerusalem, advised me that the only thing to do would be to send, as I suggested, this appeal to our Church press, so that the piteous and critical condition of the Russian mission might be known, and perhaps some be moved to relieve it by immediate gifts, as in their case there is no "moratorium."

Cannot there be a special offering taken in each of our dioceses this Lenten season to liquidate these debts of the Jerusalem Patriarchate, incurred by the Patriarch Damianos and his Council during the crisis of the World War, as Bishop Garland, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, has set the example? This Patriarchate has recognized our orders fully, following the recognition of the Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, and it will be a crime against history, and ingratitude on our part to those who have so carefully preserved these holy places for Christianity, against Mohammedans and others through the centuries, and who still minister to the 70,000 of the 90,000 (it is said) Christians of Palestine, if America, to whom alone they look for aid, does not help immediately.

Bishop MacInnes and English Government representatives are doing all they can in Palestine.

JAMES H. DARLINGTON,
Bishop of Harrisburg.
To the Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Va.
February 15, 1924.

respondence, telling me about the foundation of the committee. He advises me to write you, knowing you to be a man who, responding to all that is good, can lend us a helping hand in our hour of need. If he has not written you on this subject I make bold in the present to describe the extremely precarious situation of the Russian Ecclesiastical Mission in Jerusalem, who has the guardianship and management of the Russian possessions in Palestine, sacred and dear to our people; the Oak of Abraham near Hebron, the grave of St. Tabetha in Jaffa, places sainted by memories of the Life of St. John the Baptist and his parents in Beth Shaar and Ain-Karene, sacred places on the Mount of Olives, on the shores of Tiberias and many others. The Russian Mission has erected here eight churches, hospices for pilgrims, etc., and is now endeavoring to preserve all these till the day when our Lord will be pleased to relent in his rightful wrath and stop His punishing arm (Es. 9:21).

The war and revolution have endangered the position of the mission, bringing heavy indebtedness and threatening it through a nearly complete loss of all revenues, with absolute annihilation. Our places of worship and other institutions, not being protected by a moratorium as those belong to the Patriarchate of Jerusalem, are on the eve of sale by auction for debts reaching the large sum of about $100,000. Thus having heard of the generous initiative of the Episcopal Church for the relief of the sacred places of Palestine, we address ourselves to this Church, and through her and you to the noble American nation, who has acted so generously in alleviating the sufferings of the population in Russia, with the entreaty not to forget this urgent need of the Russian Church and long suffering nation in their days of innumerable calamities, and help us to save this inheritance and find the necessary funds to pay their debts.

It is with heart full of hope and trust that we look to America, who has so often shown us sympathy in our misfortunes and has helped us morally by raising a voice of protest against the persecution of our leader, the Most Holy Patriarch Tikhon, by a refusal to recognize the rule of those who have brought us to the reign of beast, and who aim to crush the Divine Spirit in man by at last the pious intention to safeguard the holy places from utter devastation and destruction. We cannot stop hoping that the great nation of the new world will come to our aid materially and help us to save the sacred inheritance of the Russian people, who in these days of black despair finds a sole consolation and refuge in prayer and devotion.

When our Lord will remit our sins and will mercifully send us His blessing; when the dark clouds overhanging the destinies of our country and nation will be dispersed; then the Russian people, following the call of the heart, will come to Palestine and find the sacred places preserved, their thankful prayers will be raised to heaven and their souls will be filled with grateful feelings towards the great nation, whose help was so efficient in their years of impotence, and towards the Church, who undoubtedly in the near future will be united with us, to sing with one heart and one mouth the glorification of our Lord and Saviour.

I have the honor to remain, my Lord, your lordship's most obedient and humble servant.

JEROME ARCHIMANDRITE,
Chief of the Russian Ecclesiastical Mission in Jerusalem.

Church Intelligence

Meeting of the National Council and Its Departments

The meetings of the National Council and its six departments were held in New York February 19 to 21.

Mr. William M. Baldwin, representative from the Province of New York and New Jersey, had resigned at the meeting of the Synod January 29, and Senator William J. Tully, of New York City, was elected in his place. Senator Tully was also elected a member of the Department of Religious Education, in place of Mr. Baldwin.

Bishop Johnson, of Missouri, was present, and spoke on the Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund, whereupon the Council adopted a resolution heartily commending this fund.

The President, in his opening address, referred to the death of the late Presiding Bishop, Dr. Garrett, of Dallas, Tex. The Council spread upon the records their sympathy with the Diocese of Dallas and their great respect for Bishop Garrett.

The Council sent the following message to the new Presiding Bishop, Dr. Talbot:

"The National Council of the Church sends its affectionate greeting and assures you of its readiness to serve whenever it can be of assistance in your work and of its prayers for God's blessing upon you in the discharge of your new and grave responsibility."

Two missionary bishops, the Rt. Rev. Edward A. Temple, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. George C. Hunting, D. D., who had died since the last meeting of the Council, were commemorated by minutes, also adopted by rising vote.

The Treasurer made a preliminary report for 1923, showing that the receipts amounted to $2,820.56 in excess of expenditures. This condition was due to the large amount received in legacies during the year. A full report will be submitted by the Treasurer when final figures can be obtained.

The Rev. Fred D. Goodwin, of Warsaw, Va., was appointed Secretary for Rural Work under the Departments of Christian Social Service and Missions.

The Field Department reported that the Dioceses of East Carolina, Southwestern Virginia, Kentucky, and the Missionary Districts of Alaska, Utah, Arizona, Honolulu, North Texas and Liberia, have met or exceeded their quotas for the full Program of the Church for 1923, whereupon the Council adopted a resolution, congratulating these Dioceses, and expressing its appreciation of their hearty cooperation.

A plan proposed by a committee for the organization of a Provincial Field Department in the Province of the Pacific was presented and approved.

The Field Department had established the office of Auxiliary Secretaries to the Field Department. The name had been found to be confusing and request was made that the National Council authorize the change to Associate Secretaries, which change was made.

The first Braille edition for the blind of "The Service of Holy Communion" was "The Litany," which had been issued by the Council, was found to be entirely exhausted. Arrangements were made to have additional copies of these books printed, with the addition of the Penitential Office and a selection of hymns.

A committee of the National School for the Training of Colored Women as Church Workers was appointed, composed of the following:

Dr. John W. Wood, Rev. R. W. Patton, Miss Claudia Hunter, Mrs. T. W. Bickett, Rev. George Plaskett, Mrs. Delaney, Miss Grace Lindley, Miss Emily Tillotson, Miss Mildred Carpenter, Miss Adelaide Case, Mrs. Kingman Robbins, Miss Eva D. Corey, Mrs. A. S. Phelps.

Also, at the request of the Woman's Auxiliary, a committee to confer with the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary on a residence near headquarters for missionaries on furlough, volunteers and women workers in the field, was appointed, composed of the following members:

Dr. John W. Wood, Rev. A. Parson,

THE CONSECRATION OF BISHOP CROSS.

Promptly at 10:30 o'clock on Wednesday morning, February 20, the full vested choir of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, struck the notes of the processional hymn, "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," and a long line of choristers, clergy and bishops marched up the aisle of the church, in which the Rev. Edward Makin Cross had ministered for more than seven years with affection and power, to begin the service at which he should be consecrated as Bishop of the Missionary District of Spokane.

Bishop McElwain, acting for the Presiding Bishop, was the chief consecrator; Bishop Page, of Michigan, former Bishop of Spokane, and Bishop Freeman, of Washington, a former priest of this Diocese, were the co-consecrators. Bishop Page read the Epistle, Bishop Freeman read the Gospel, and both assisted in administering the Sacrament. The preacher was the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop of Wyoming, under whom Bishop Cross served in the early part of his ministry. The presence of His Grace, the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, Primate of All Canada, added a special interest, and in the absence of Bishop Johnson, of Missouri, he read the Litany. He also joined in the laying on of hands. The presenters were Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, and Bishop Bennett, of Duluth; attending presbyters, the Rev. George S. Keller and the Rev. Addison E. Knickerbocker; registrar, the Rev. Hanford L. Russell; master of ceremonies, the Rev. Phillips Endecott Osgood, and assistant, the Rev. John G. Larsen, of Spokane.

The Presiding Bishop's Mandate was read by the Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota; the Certificate of Election by the Rt. Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler, D. D., of North Dakota; the Certificate of Ordination by the Rev. George G. Ware, of Hoquiam, Washington (father of Mrs. Cross), and the Consents of Standing Committees by Mr. Paul N. Myers, Senior Warden of St. John's Parish.

An Episcopal ring and a pectoral cross, gifts to the Bishop-elect, were blessed by the Rt. Rev. Harry S. Longley, of Iowa. Ten bishops joined in the laying on of hands.

The service was beautiful and deeply impressive throughout, and the large congregation which filled every available space in the church was manifestly interested in that which was taking place—the outpouring of spiritual power for service to be rendered.

The preacher took for his text St. John 18:37: "To this end was I born and for this cause came I into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice.—Pilate said, What is the truth?"

Following the Service of Consecration luncheon was served to the bishops, clergy and invited guests at St. John's Church Club. Mr. Paul N. Myers, Senior Warden of the parish, presided as host and later acted as toastmaster. Short addresses were made by the Rev. F. D. Tyner on behalf of the clergy, Mr. W. H. Farnham, Treasurer of the District of Spokane; Bishop Freeman, who, it has leaked out, nominated Bishop Cross; the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Jr., who presented an alarm clock as the gift of the Twin City Clericus, and the newly made Bishop.

During the evening the wardens and vestry of the Church of St. John the Evangelist gave a reception in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Cross and the bishops attending the consecration.

All the events of the day bore strong witness to the position Bishop Cross has made for himself in the parish and Diocese he has served, and to the interest that will follow him into his new work.

The annual meeting of the Church Missions Publishing Company was held recently at the office of the company, the chairman, the Very Rev. S. R. Coladay, presiding.

The reports of the various officers were read and approved.

The company has published during the year past accounts of two Church institutions for the Negroes, viz., "The Story of a Hospital" (St. Agnes, Raleigh, N. C.)—the last literary work of its late superintendent, Dr. M. V. Glenton—and "A Visit to St. Paul's Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va.," the latter a second edition brought up to date with the assistance of the founder and principal, Archdeacon

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CHURCH MISSIONS PUBLISHING COMPANY.

The annual meeting of the Church Missions Publishing Company was held recently at the office of the company, the chairman, the Very Rev. S. R. Coladay, presiding.

The reports of the various officers were read and approved.

The company has published during the year past accounts of two Church institutions for the Negroes, viz., "The Story of a Hospital" (St. Agnes, Raleigh, N. C.)—the last literary work of its late superintendent, Dr. M. V. Glenton—and "A Visit to St. Paul's Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va.," the latter a second edition brought up to date with the assistance of the founder and principal, Archdeacon Russell. It has re-issued two missionary plays that are steady sellers, viz., "The Blue Cashmere Gown" and "How the Light Came," and bought out "The Whole Armor of God, a Mystery Play of the New Year," by Alice C. Chase, Woman's Auxiliary Educational Secretary for the Diocese of Western Massachusetts. In its fall numbers stress was laid on two subjects of special interest at the present time, the old Glebe House at Woodbury, Conn., the birthplace of our American Episcopate, and a sketch of the life of Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, late Presiding Bishop of the American Church, Bishop of Missouri, and, in the earlier years, pioneer Missionary Bishop of Idaho, Utah and Nevada, and dear also to the Publishing Company as its second and actively interested president. This biography, by the Rev. Melville K. Bailey, was supplemented for the first quarterly issue of the present year by "The Bishop Tuttle Calendar," with portraits of the Bishop and of twelve of his contemporaries of the House of Bishops, accompanied by his words of appreciation of their lives and services. The addition of the Church throughout the country is called at this time to "The Old Glebe House and Its Historic Background," by the able committee of leading Churchmen drawn from several dioceses and under the chairmanship of Bishop Acheson, engaged in raising funds necessary to restore, endow and open to the public this dignified early Connecticut home-stead, to be a monument of the founding of the American Church in the early days of national independence.

Resolutions of thanks were passed to the Rev. George T. Linsley for contributing this sketch and to the authors mentioned above for their literary work for the company.

Mention was made of the January issue, "Our Lady of the Olives," a drama by F. D. Graves, of Fresno, Cal., and of the number in press, "Memories Here and There of John Williams, Fourth Bishop of Connecticut," written for the company by the Bishop of California, Dr. Nichols, the rector in former years of Christ Church in this city.

On motion it was voted that "the officers and managers of the Church Missions Publishing Company desire to place on record that they heartily concur with the statement issued by The American Committee for the Independence of Armenia." "That the honor of America, no less than every dictate of reason, demands that the Senate reject the Lausanne Treaty." The Secretary was instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the American Committee for the Independence of Armenia, to the Connecticut Senators, to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and Senator Joe T. Robinson.

The Lenten Offering.

At the last meeting of the Executive Board of the Diocese the Diocesan Department of Religious Education was charged with responsibility for the promotion among the Sunday schools of interest and enthusiasm in connection with the Lenten Offering for this year, and the department is already formulating important plans for this work.

The Board also went on record as expressing the hope that the various Sunday schools will designate their gifts for the Field Department (Nation-Wide Campaign). This course was followed in this Diocese in 1923 with very gratifying results.

Week Day Religious School.

St. Margaret's Church, Bronx, the Rev. Francis B. Hodgins rector, has started in its parish hall a Week Day Religious School, and has an enrollment of forty, not counting teachers. The teachers are from the public schools, there being within a stone's throw of St. Margaret's three public schools, each of them having enrollments running into the thousands. The instruction is along conventional lines. It starts at 3:30 and is held weekly.

St. Stephen's College, Annandale, has let contracts for a new science building to cost $120,000. A new dormitory to be ready for the fall of 1924 is also to be built. Excavations will start as soon as weather permits. Cornerstones are to be laid on commencement day. St. Stephen's is running to capacity, and has been for some years.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, the new rector of St. Paul's Church, successor in that office of the late Rev. Robert Talbot, D. D., assumed charge of his parish for the first time on Quinquagesima Sunday and was the preacher at the 11 o'clock service on that day.

Mr. McCallum comes to Washington from St. Luke's Church, Lebanon, Pa., where he has been rector since 1919. Mr. McCallum has announced a special series of sermons to be delivered on the Sundays in Lent, and beginning with Quinquagesima Sunday, when the subject of his sermon was "John the Baptist's Call."

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington was held in Brookland Parish on Tuesday, March 4, at 2 o'clock. The special address was delivered by Rev. Thomas Burgess, Secretary of the foreign-born American division of the Department of Missions and Church Extension of the National Council. He told of the work among the foreign-born in the large cities and the organized effort of the Church along this line.

Improvements in St. Thomas', Thomasville.

The contract has been let for a Church school annex to St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville. This annex will incorporate seven class rooms for the larger grade classes, a large primary room and a Bible class room. The building will be of brick and conform in character to the present church building. In addition to this building, the contract was also let for the installation of a modern heating plant, the gift of a generous friend of the parish. These improvements will cost $7,500 and will add both to the convenience and appearance of the church plant.

Meeting of Bishop and Council.

A hundred per cent attendance marked the first meeting of the year of the Bishop and Council of the Diocese of Georgia, held in Christ Church, Savannah, February 27, the departments holding their meetings the previous day. The Treasurer reported a total payment of $26,326.27, which is 94 per cent of the pledge, but considerably below the amount of the quota. In the amount paid to the General Church the Diocese is fourteenth on the list of those dioceses meeting their share of the budget, with 105 per cent, and the amount over not designated. The Executive Secretary's report for the 1924 pledges showed that $28,293.63 have been pledged on a $38,000 quota.

The Department of Missions reported the gift in the Diocese of $1,000 for the building of St. John's Church, Moultrie, and with a much reduced amount to be collected, it is hoped to complete this church within the year. It is "Priority No. 42." Several vacancies were reported among the missionary clergy. The Department of Religious Education reported the resignation of Rev. W. A. Jonnard as Executive Secretary on his acceptance of the rectorship of St. John's Church, Savannah, and the Council elected Mr. Jonnard vice-chairman of the department. The Publicity Department announced the first issue of the new Diocesan paper, "The Church in Georgia."

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beekwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

First Meeting of the Diocesan Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee of the Diocese of Alabama held its initial meeting February 15 in Birmingham in the office of Bishop W. G. McDowell. This Executive Committee was by canon created at the Diocesan Council held in Birmingham in January.

The Secretary of the Diocese is ex-officio Secretary of the Executive Committee, and the Treasurer of the Diocese is ex-officio Treasurer. The members of the Executive Committee are as follows:

The Bishop Coadjutor, Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Chairman; Rev. E. C. Seaman, Secretary; Mr. R. H. Cochran, Treasurer.

The Standing Committee—The Rev. E. W. Gamble, the Rev. O. deW. Randolph, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D. D., Dr. W. B. Hall, Mr. H. J. Wingfield, Mr. Algernon Blair.

From Convocation of Mobile—The Rev. J. F. Plummer, Mr. Paul T. Tate.

From Convocation of Montgomery—The Rev. P. N. McDonald, Hon. Charles Henderson.

From Convocation of Birmingham—The Rev. J. M. Stoney, Mr. J. W. McQueen.

Two members were unable to attend, Dr. W. B. Hall and Mr. H. J. Whitfield. All others were present for morning, afternoon and evening sessions.

The following departments were organized:

Departments of Missions—The Rev. J. F. Plummer, Vice-Chairman; the Rev. O. deW. Randolph, Secretary.

Department of Finance—Mr. Algernon Blair, Vice-Chairman; the Rev. J. M. Stoney, Secretary.

Department of Religious Education—The Rev. P. N. McDonald, Vice-Chairman; the Rev. O. deW. Randolph, Secretary.

Department of Christian Social Service—Mr. J. W. McQueen, Vice-Chairman; the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, Secretary.

Department of Church Pension—Mr. J. W. McQueen, Vice-Chairman; Mr. Paul T. Tate, Secretary.

Department of Publicity—The Rev. E. C. Seaman, Vice-Chairman.

A Field Department, comprising all members of the Executive Committee, was established to continue the work of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

This Executive Committee will meet quarterly.

Each department has the right to add as many as four associate members. The Field Department added Mrs. D. E. Wilson, President of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. M. S. Barnwell. The Department of Religious Education added the Rev. V. C. McMaster, Director of the C. S. S. L. and Y. P. S. L., and Mrs. H. E. Mussey, Supervisor of the C. S. S. L.

The three clerical and three lay members of the Standing Committee are ex-officio members of the Executive Committee.

In addition to the sessions of the Executive Committee, the Standing Committee met on the same day, the chairman, the Rev. E. W. Gamble, presiding.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.

That the home fires are burning was abundantly evident at the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in Maryland in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, February 27.

Maryland is the home of the Woman's Auxiliary. This year registered the largest attendance at the opening service of Holy Communion, and the new and beautiful parish house was crowded to capacity at the afternoon meeting to welcome Bishop McKim, of Tokyo, and Dr. John W. Wood, recently returned from the East. The presence and message of the Church's apostle in Japan were a benediction as he testified to the indestructibility of the spiritual temple in Japan, even though nearly every vestige of material fabric had been demolished.

Bishop McKim paid a well merited tribute to Mrs. Albert Sioussat, President of the Maryland Branch, referring to her as the senior presiding officer of the Woman's Auxiliary in the American Church.

The always exuberant John Wood—he well merits his doctorate, but those who have known him for a generation like to remember that he has always been the Church's John Wood—strengthened faith and encouraged new zeal and effort in his report of "accomplished impossibilities" in the mission field.

The desired reconstruction fund for Japan might be declared in advance to be an impossibility, but in the light of what has been done by the Church in response to the Master's call, we could well believe that in a short time we would be singing our laus deo for an accomplished impossibility.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

The Wilson Memorial Service.

Through a combination of circumstances the community memorial service for President Wilson in Spartanburg, S. C., was held in the Church of the Advent, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton rector.

It was announced at the Sunday evening service at this church that a memorable service would be held at the hour of President Wilson's funeral. When later the Mayor issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens to observe the hour from 3 to 4 P. M. on Wednesday, February 6, there was embodied in the proclamation the suggestion that the community should attend the service at the Church of the Advent. This suggestion was accepted by the city authorities, the American Legion and the citizens in general, who united in a service of great beauty and unique religious and patriotic appeal.

The service was an adaptation of the Burial Service. The choir entered singing "The Son of God Goes Forth to War" as a solemn yet triumphant reminder of the great spirit who in ceaseless battle for the right and in patient bearing of his cross had linked himself with the immortal company of those "who followed in his train."

As the organ breathed forth the solemn but softly beautiful strains of Chopin's Funeral March the ministers of the city, the Mayor and the chaplain of the American Legion marched up the aisle to seats in the choir. They were closely followed by the American Legion with the Stars and Stripes and the flag of the Legion at their head.

Behind these came the Wofford Battalion in full uniform with their colors. The service was chastely and severely simple. Ministers of the city read brier and appropriate selections from the Bible. The choir sang the great funeral chant, "Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Refuge." Dr. R. P. Pell, President of Converse College, read the Lesson. Prayer for the nation was offered by Dr. W. L. Ball, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and for the President's family by Dr. S. T. Hallman, pastor of the Lutheran Church and President of the Ministers' Association. The hymns were "Abide With Me," "How Firm a Foundation" and "For All Thy Saints Who From Their Labors Rest."

Dr. Henry N. Snyder, President of Wofford College, delivered a masterly address, dealing briefly but comprehensively with the life and service of the great President. The address seemed to express the inmost feelings of the great congregation, which was like a gathering of men and women every one of whom had suffered deep and personal bereavement.

Perhaps Dr. Snyder rose to the climax of his address when he proposed that beside the grave of the unknown soldier in Arlington there should be placed another grave that should contain the remains of the great war President, in order that he who made the supreme sacrifice of life, and he who reached the heights of spiritual consecration untrod by human feet before, might lie side by side amid the memorials of a nation's love and reverence.

At the close of the service Chaplain C. M. Griffin, of the American Legion, read an appropriate adaptation of the Committal from the Burial Service, and the rector read verses one, two and four of the familiar hymn, "Now the Laborer's Task Is O'er."

"Taps" was sounded by the bugler of the American Legion; the benediction was pronounced by the chaplain, and the procession moved down the aisle to the solemn strains of Beethoven's Funeral March.

The church was crowded to its utmost capacity with a sympathetic congregation of eight hundred persons, many of whom stood reverently throughout the service.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop.

Easton Cathedral Installs Radio Receiving Outfit.

The Cathedral of this Diocese is, so far as is known, the first in the country, possibly the first in the world, to install a radio receiving outfit with a high-powered amplifier, and unite as a congregation with the National Cathedral worshippers at the 4 o'clock services on Sunday afternoons.

Programs of the Washington services are secured early in the week that the choir may become familiar with the hymns, psalms and music, and on Sundays the congregation and choir participate in the worship. At the first service held the congregation crowded the church, and Dr. Bohanan, Dean of the Cathedral, explained in a simple way what it was hoped such services might accomplish, urging the people to come, not for religious entertainment or amusement; not simply to hear well rendered music by a good choir of singers; not alone to receive the instruction or inspiration which comes from hearing the message of a great preacher—all these, of course, but primarily to unite with Christian brethren in a distant city in a service of common worship to a common Father. The Dean pictured the possibilities of a deepened sense of corporate unity, and a new meaning in the old article of the Creed—"the Communion of Saints—the Fellowship of the Faithful"—when in every diocese, or possibly in every church, the Christian people at a common hour, united in a common service, singing the same hymns, offering up the same prayers, and hearing the same message from the National Cathedral, as the centre of the Church's life.

Following the custom instituted three years ago of holding Diocesan services at the Cathedral, with delegations from all parishes present, the Diocese of Easton has arranged this year for a series of illustrated lectures on the Life of Christ by the Rev. L. N. Caley, D. D., of Philadelphia. These services will be held at 8 o'clock on Tuesday evenings.

News Items of Interest.

On February 26 the twentieth anniversary of the coming of Rev. C. Malcolm Douglas as rector of Christ Church, Short Hills, was held. A largely attended reception was given him by the parishioners and a purse of several thousand dollars, with the request that he might mark the anniversary by going with his family to Europe this summer. The good traditions of Short Hills as a town where the Episcopal Church has been maintained in such a generous way that no other Church has come in, have been maintained by Mr. Douglas, so giving it a unique character. It is a community of moderate size, but the parish stands well in the front in its generous gifts and in providing an unusual number of capable men and women workers in Diocesan and General Church activities.

The death of Mr. John A. Gifford, long Senior Warden and longer still an officer of Trinity Cathedral Church, Newark, removes almost the last of the group of Newark Churchmen who were prominent in the middle of the last century. Mr. Gifford died in his ninety-third year, having retained his faculties to the end. He was a man of great dignity and gentleness of character and manner. He had been a prominent citizen and banker in Newark, a representative of his parish in the Diocesan Convention, and an active member of very important Diocesan committees.

Plans are maturing for the observance of the semi-centennial of the Diocese in November next. It is generally agreed that every parish or mission church in debt shall be urged to mark the year by cutting down or removing its debt, and this work is already organized in several parishes. It is purposed also to have the history of every church or mission in the Diocese written for present use and for preservation.

Men's Bible Class Banquet.

With addresses by three well known speakers, and an attractive program of vocal and instrumental music, the Men's Bible Class of St. Paul's Parish, Philipsburg, the Ven. F. T. Eastment, rector, held its first annual banquet in the parish house recently. The affair was attended by more than a hundred men, many of them leading citizens of the community, and interesting addresses were made by the Hon. P. E. Womeldorff, the Rev. Malcolm DePui Maynard, of Bellefonte; Judge Singleton Bell, of Clearfield, and George W. Zeigler, Esq.

A meeting of men was held in St. John's Parish, Carlisle, recently, at which addresses were made by the Rev. Malcolm DePui Maynard, of Bellefonte, and the Rev. Archibald M. Judd, Executive Secretary of the Diocese. Refreshments were served by the women of the parish, and individual talks were given bearing upon the Church's work, and the method for doing it. As a result of the meeting, a Men's Club was formed. Much interest and enthusiasm was evident, and it is believed the Club will become a potent factor in the life of the parish.

The annual dinner of the Men's Club of St. John's Parish, York, Pa., the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, rector, was held on February 7, with an excellent attendance. The Rector's Aid Society served a fine dinner. Mr. E. J. Sinclair, president of the club, presided at the dinner. The speaker of the evening was Frank Richardson Kent, of Baltimore, who gave a vivid story of his trip to Alaska with President Harding, and impressions of a newspaper man abroad after the World War. Officers were elected for the ensuing year.

A Men's Bible Class has been formed in St. John's Parish, York. The class meets in the parish house on Sunday mornings. Under the leadership of Professor Elmer E. Wentworth, formerly of the faculty of the Yeates School, the class is growing in interest and enthusiasm.

At the recent annual visitation of Bishop Darlington to All Saints' Church, Williamsport, there was presented for confirmation by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Durlin S. Benedict, LL. D., a class which was more than twice as large as any other in that parish during the past four years.

The Men's Club of St. Paul's Parish, Columbia, Pa., the Rev. G. F. Caruthers, D. D., rector, is growing in numbers and activity. On Saturday evening, February 16, the men served a roast beef dinner to about 500 people. The supper was all prepared by the men, twenty-five of whom were arrayed in white coats and caps.

Rt. Rev. G. C. Hunting, D. D., Bishop.

Nevada Convocation.

The report of the seventeenth annual Convocation of the District of Nevada, held at Reno, January 27-29, is overshadowed by the death of the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. George Coolidge Hunting, D. D., Fourth Bishop of Nevada, which occurred one week later. Apparently in his usual rugged health, he presided at the meetings, and, with Mrs. Hunting, entertained the clergy and their wives at the Bishop's House for dinner on the evening of the 28th.

The main work of Convocation centered around the methods of applying the suggestions contained in the Bishop's pastoral address, such as Bible reading in the public schools, now made possible by a decision of the Supreme Court of the State; the establishment of the Home Department for Religious Education in the scattered homes of the State; ways of meeting the apportionments for the Church's Program; and how to attain obedience to the law of Church and State.

An especially large number of the laity were in attendance. A fine spirit of unity, earnestness and affection marked the sessions, and Nevada Church people are glad of those happy days, seen now through the shadow of loneliness overhanging the District.

The Rev. J. M. B. Gill Accepts Call to Petersburg.

The Rev. J. Munro B. Gill, a native of Petersburg, has accepted the call issued him about six weeks ago by St. Paul's Church, Petersburg. Mr. Gill will come to his new charge about April 1.

St. Paul's Church has been without a pastor since the resignation of the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, who is now rector of Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. Gill is at present connected with the General Council of the Episcopal Church with headquarters in New York. He has been in that place since his return from China last fall. Mr. Gill has been in the ministry for about fifteen years.

The pulpit has been temporarily filled since Mr. Dandridge left by the Rev. John G. Sadtler.

NORTH TEXAS.

The Annual Convocation.

The fourteenth annual convocation of the Missionary District of North Texas was held at Emmanuel Church, San Angelo, February 3 to 5.

Bishop G. H. Kinsolving, of Texas, preached the convocation sermon, by prearrangement with the late Bishop Temple. This naturally took the form of a memorial address. Bishop Kinsolving had officiated at the marriage of Bishop Temple, and assisted at his consecration to the episcopate, while the latter was rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco. He had, also, a few days before, committed the Bishop's body to the grave.

The outstanding act of convocation was its unanimous decision to make the endowment of the episcopate of North Texas the District's memorial to the late Bishop Temple, the first Bishop of the District of North Texas. A committee consisting of three members of convocation and three members of the Woman's Auxiliary was commissioned to enter forthwith upon an active campaign looking to the raising in the next five years of fifty thousand dollars towards such endowment. Mr. Will Stith, of Abilene, was elected treasurer of the fund.

The Rev. Thomas J. Sloan, chairman of the Council of Advice and rector of the Church at San Angelo, presided at the business sessions. Every active clergyman of the District was present and there was an unusually large attendance of lay delegates from all parts of the field. The Woman's Auxiliary, which met at the same time and place, was also well represented.

Only necessary changes were made in the Standing Committees and the officers of the Convocation were all re-elected. The personnel of the Council of Advice and the Examining Chaplains remains unchanged. The Rev. Frank Etelson takes the place of the Rev. Frank H. Stedman, on both the Trial Court and personnel of the delegates to the Provincial Synod. Mrs. E. H. J. Andrews was elected on the Board of Religious Education, vice Mrs. H. W. Rix, resigned. The Rev. E. H. J. Andrews was appointed Chairman of Publicity.

The routine business of the convocation was disposed of with dispatch and without incident, the various reports and treasurers' statements showing the District to be in a thoroughly well-organized and flourishing condition, with all indebtedness paid and the General Church quotas for both budget and priorities fully met for 1923.

Resolutions, expressing the sense of loss sustained to the District and the Church at large by the death of Bishop Temple, and of sympathy with Mrs. Temple and her sons, were adopted by both convocation and the Woman's Auxiliary.

A strong program, proposed by the Board of Religious Education, involving special field activities and a summer camp for young people, was endorsed.

Miss Mabel Cooper, at an afternoon and a night session, demonstrated the

The Songs Unsung.

W. B. Lydenberg.

Sweet is the song unto the listener's ear,
But sweeter still the songs that are not sung;
There's many a melody choked by a tear,
And many a victory in silence rung;
A victory of kindness or of love,
A victory of hope in grief begun,
A victory of faith helped from above,
A victory of humble duty done.
Such songs, though heard not by the mortal ear,
Still fill the world with harmonies divine,
Which now drive back some fast-impending tear
Or now displace some sorrow with sunshine,
And, rising to the gates of heaven fair,
Allure the ears of listening angels there.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The First and Great Commandment.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Luke 20:40 says that they dared ask no more questions. Matt. 22:35 says that a scribe asked Him another question. The natural explanation, suggested in Matt. 22:33, is that the Sadducees and Pharisees dared ask no more questions, but the scribes did.

This, the last controversial question ever asked our Lord, is remarkable in that it converted the man asking it. The scribe bore public testimony that our Lord had spoken the truth. That scribe thereby destroyed his chances of advancement. He broke with his leaders and antagonized his party. He gave up his ambitions. He destroyed his worldly prosperity. He proved himself too good a man for a tool and was discarded. He asked:

"Master, which is the first commandment of all in the law?" and Jesus answered.

"Hear, oh Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," repeating to him the summary of the law as it has been known by His followers ever since, and ended: "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

This is quotation. Scattered rays of divine truth appearing in the prophets and rabbis are here gathered into one great beam of light. But it is also originality. The combination and its meaning never appeared in the world before. The scribe who asked the question was probably the one who had remarked, "Master, thou hast well (or beautifully) said." For him, thereafter, all chance of a professional career was at an end. He said:

"Well, Master, hast thou said the truth; for there is one God; and there is none other but He; and to love Him with all the heart and with all the understanding and with all the soul and with all the strength and to love his neighbor as himself is more than whole burnt offerings and sacrifices."

"Thou art not far from the kingdom of God," answered our Lord.

That scribe turned away a ruined man. He had publicly endorsed the teaching of Jesus and closed his own career. But he knew truth when he met it face to face; and, knowing truth, he said that truth is true. He lost his occupation, of course. He went downhill, financially. Somewhere, in a little attic, years after, he died, unless Peter or James or John hunted him up and made him one of Christ's men. But somewhere, in one of the Father's mansions, that scribe lives now, still knowing truth when he meets it and still ready to stake all on the acknowledgment that truth is true.

From the spiritual meanings of this great saying of our Lord's we turn open-eyed away. They are their own best comment. They cut through all codes straight to the heart, and tell of love. On Love, of which the world is built, hang all the law and the prophets.

Studying the Bible.

There is a current story of a Kentuckian of the old school who, on being approached by a ubiquitous book agent with a beautifully bound assortment of Bibles, remarked: "No—not for me. I read that Book many years ago. I never read the same book twice!"

Then there is another story, a true story of a barber who discovered an old and worn copy of the Bible in the bootblack's box. Although he was nearly forty years old, this man did not know the existence of such a book. He took it home and read it night after night, moved by the simplicity of the words—uplifted by a new spiritual insight that had come to him.

Taken simply as a great book, or rather as a collection of great books, the Bible is the literary masterpiece of the ages. And it is in the New Testament that we may find the most exalted code of moral philosophy that has ever been given to mankind.

It is strange, therefore, that when a course of literature is given in our colleges we find that Shakespeare holds the center of the stage in Elizabethan letters—and the Bible is taken for granted; stranger still that when we are taught the various codes of the great philosophers of antiquity, Socrates, drinking the hemlock, is an outstanding example of how one may die greatly—and the death of Jesus Christ is taken for granted.

The teaching of the Bible in schools has often led to friction, but this is due to the intolerance of those in authority. They insist, too often, that it be accepted by every race and creed as the Word of God, set down by divinely inspired men whose work was infallible. And so the Bible is not generally taught—but must be taken for granted. The result is that the Bible is lost to us as a background for other great books of literature. The book that has had more influence on our greatest writers than any dozen other books is itself closed to us.

Perhaps the greatest criticism of our modern life is that, in many cases, children are not given a proper insight into the true values of life. The older generation need not clasp its hands in holy horror at the modern boy and girl, for it is the neglect of the fathers and the mothers that is being exhibited in the desires and in the life of the children.

It is easier to take the kids to a movie night after night than it is to read aloud to them at home. It is easier to turn on the victrola for them than it is to encourage them to play the piano. And the "older generation," in the general hustle and bustle, in the striving for financial and social preference, has taken the easiest way.

After all, the place for the study of the Bible is not in the public schools, nor is it in the colleges—it is in the home. It is not the fault of the children that they grow to manhood and womanhood without the Bible as a background for their every-day life. Children love the Bible. Though they are often too young to appreciate the great spiritual lessons of the greatest of books, still they glory in the battles of the ancient kings. The story of creation, than which nothing better has been offered by the materialistic philosophers; the story of Noah's Ark; the victory of David over the giant Goliath; the crucifixion of Christ, and the rending of the temple veil in twain—these things are never forgotten, and in the hearts of children there may be graven the lesson that there is somewhere a power greater than man—a God that they may love and to Whom they may pray.

Taken as the Word of God, or taken simply as the greatest book in our literature, we can ill afford to be ignorant of the teachings of the Bible.—Atlanta Constitution.

Only in Thee.

Jesse Joutite

Torn by despair and loneliness,
Jesus, I come to Thee,
Vouchsafe to hear, vouchsafe to bless,
Show my Thyself the Way.

Tortured in soul, gray doubts o'erflow,
I struggle on hopelessly;
Oh, lift the clouds that I may know
The perfect Truth in Thee.

My vision is dull, my faith is weak,
I am nigh overcome by the strife;
I will not other comfort seek,
For in Thee alone is Life.

I wait, I wait Though the shadows are deep,
Mine eyes still are fixed on Thee;
Thy loving promises Thou wilt keep—
And hast Thou not promised me?

The Old Man at the Top of Mootung San.

A friend in America gave us money enough to put up a cottage at the top of Mootung San, a mountain that rises about 4,200 feet from sea level, just three miles from the mission compound. This cottage is a Godsend to us, for up there it is never uncomfortably warm, and while we do have fierce winds and rain-storms, yet the cool breezes, and the wild flowers, and great gray rocks, and above all the sunrises, and wonderful moonlight nights, are an inspiration for the whole year of work down in the valley.

Two of the young girls who have given their lives to this work out here were with Captain Swinehart and myself this summer, camping upon this mountain. One morning we were startled to find that not far from our cottage a little grass tepee had been built in a day and a night. We could not imagine who could have come up to that lonesome place, for Koreans are very much afraid to sleep at the top of this mountain.

Not long after we found little balls of cooked rice and other evidences of offerings to spirits, placed in many of the walks that lead to the highest peaks of the mountains. Around the little hut had been strung straw rope to which were attached tiny pieces of paper—these we knew to be offerings to the mountain spirits. Not long after, through a cloud that was then sailing around the mountain top, we saw a strange figure approaching us. "He looks like Caliban," I whispered.

It was an old man, and when he came up to us we saw how thin and worn he was, and his two-piece (only) suit of thin brown scratchy native linen that surely looks like sackcloth was all too inadequate to keep out the cold and damp.

He told us that he had had many children, but that only one had been spared to him, a boy of twenty-one, and now this boy had become a leper! He had come up to the top of this lonely mountain to offer little cakes of rice to the spirits, in the hope that some unseen power could help him. He told us that he was worshipping "Han-nanim" (God), and that he did not care if his own life were taken from him, if only his boy could be cured.

Oh! how glad we were to tell him that we knew we could get the boy into the leper hospital, and we all agreed that we would raise his support between us. The old father was grateful beyond words, and his humility and sweetness of spirit were an inspiration to us during the whole vacation time. His little hut had no floor, but he slept right on the ground. Many times there were fierce storms up there, and the rain descended in torrents. We gave him an old sweater, and some boards to floor his hut with, but many, many mornings he crept into our kitchen to dry his pitifully thin clothes. He never complained, but always had an engaging smile for us when we asked him how he slept during the night.

When we came down from the mountain he begged to be allowed to carry one of the loads that we tied our bedding and personal belongings up in. He shouldered his jickey bravely, and, like a true soldier of fortune, came down the mountain side with his load upon his old shoulders. Not once did he groan or complain!

On Sunday we always conducted a little Sunday school while up there, and we persuaded the old man to join us. It was a joy to teach him about the true way to God, and to tell him about Jesus Christ. He committed two Bible verses, and said he would hunt up a church in his village to attend.—Mrs. M. L. Swinehart in Presbyterian of the South.

The Jesus of the Scars.

Jesus showed Himself after His resurrection, first to Mary of Magdala. Supreme devotion and fidelity to the last hour had earned for her this reward.

The second appearance was made to Peter, a private meeting between the prodigal disciple and the risen Lord. With rare delicacy Jesus met Peter alone. What was said no man knows. But assurances would be given the blatant denier that his infidelity was freely forgiven.

Later two of the disciple brotherhood were walking to Emmaus. They were talking earnestly together of the events of the past few days. Jesus had died on the cross and had been buried in a rock-hewn tomb. The air was filled with strange rumors of His rising again from the grave. Incredible! No man had risen from the dead. Yet, was He not different from other men? With emotions gliding from the heights of a brave hope to the depths of a dread despair they plodded heavily along the road, wondering if this rumor could be true.

Then a stranger joined them and in a casual way asked, "What are these words you are exchanging with one another as you walk?"

They stopped, puzzled. Finally Cleopas replied:

"Have you been dwelling alone in Jerusalem and so have not come to know the things that have taken place in these days?"

"What kind of things?" the stranger asked.

"About Jesus the prophet, mighty in deed and word . . . and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered Him up to the sentence of death and crucified Him . . . some women of our company amazed us. After going to the tomb and not finding His body, they came saying that they had seen also a vision of angels who affirmed that he was alive."

With a gentle rebuke for their dullness, the stranger proceeded to show the two travelers how they ought not to be surprised.

And he began with Moses, and the symbol of the brazen serpent, on through the types, figures and prophets, interpreting their meaning as they walked. Evening closed down on their walking conference, and he accepted their invitation to stay and eat. While breaking and blessing the bread their eyes were opened. They recognized Him, and He vanished out of sight.

Immediately Cleopas and his companion set out for Jerusalem, eager to bear the news. They gathered with the other disciples in a room. Outside their circle was a hostile or indifferent world. Within the room there was uneasiness and distress. With anxious hearts and staring eyes they listened. "The Lord is risen; indeed we have seen Him."

Suddenly as a sunbeam flashes into a dark room, silently and quietly Jesus entered and stood in the midst and breathed, "Peace be unto you."

How graciously the Lord accommodates Himself to the moods of men.

To the two men on the way to Emmaus He opened the eyes of their understanding, unfolded the Scriptures, let them see how it was that Christ should suffer on the cross.

Long years before, in the early days of these two travelers, the village rabbi had drilled them in the books of the law and the prophets. He prepared the way for Jesus to unfold their meaning. As hundreds of humble, unknown, modern Sabbath school teachers store the minds of their scholars with texts and Bible imagery. Germs of truth that the Holy Spirit can use in latter years. Probably these men had forgotten their old rabbi. But Jesus used His faithful service, and started where He left off.

He took the Scriptures and stabbed the spirits of the two travelers into life. The written word was the only way into their heavy hearts. "Sorrow for the death of Jesus had clogged all the other channels through which human sympathy could enter." Doubt, dismay and despair were only tenants dwelling in their hearts, and Jesus expelled them by Scripture memory, instruction and light.

To the "eleven and the others" assembled in the room the appeal of Jesus took another form. He offered His body—"see My hands and feet, that it is I Myself." And He ate before them.

Physical, tangible evidences of His resurrection!

Again Jesus graciously accommodated Himself to the mood of the stricken disciples.

Why Jesus should die distressed them. Thousands since that day have failed to see that a God who was only a spirit and had no body could never have been held in the cross by nails.

But Jesus was God and man, real enough in His humanity to suffer, die and be buried and able to rise again from the dead and enter a room where the door was shut.

"He who did most shall hear most; the strongest shall stand the most weak.

'Tis the weakness in strength that I cry for! my flesh that I seek.

In the Godhead; I seek and I find it. . . ."

Thomas was not with the eleven. We lean towards the hope that he had good reasons for being absent. But eight days later he was in a room with the other disciples and the door was shut. He was stoutly asserting nothing, but his hands in the wounds of his Lord would satisfy his mind. The wounds had been the cause of his despair and the sight of them only would restore his faith.

"Except I see I will not believe." Resurrection was a vain dream.

Again Jesus appeared. In His glorified body, free from His self-imposed limitations of Galilee, He passed through the closed door and stood in the middle of the room and greeted them with, "Peace be unto you."

At the sight of his Lord and Master all the misgivings of temperamental Thomas vanished like mists before the warming sun. In solemn awe he exclaimed, "My Lord and my God."

If he had said, "Lord, God," it would have been a cry of surprise. If he had said, "Oh, Lord; oh, God," it might have been the adoration of his soul. But he affirmed, "My Lord and My God," a confession of faith.

A God with marks of strife and death on His body, and a resurrection smile on His face, is the only remedy for the sins and wounds of humanity.

If we have never sought, we seek Thee now;

Thine eyes burn through the dark, our only stars;

We must have sight of thorn-pricks on Thy brow,

We must have Thee, O Jesus of the Scars.

The heavens frighten us; they are too calm;

In all the universe we have no place. Our wounds are hurting us; where is the balm?

Lord Jesus, by Thy Scars, we claim Thy grace.

If when the doors are shut, Thou drawest near,

Only reveal those hands, that side of Thine;

We know today what wounds are, have no fear,

Show us Thy Scars, we know the countersign.

The other gods were strong; but Thou wast weak;

They rode, but Thou didst stumble to a throne;

But to our wounds only God's wounds can speak,

And not a god has wounds, but Thou alone.

—Dr. George M. P. Hunter, in Presbyterian Banner.

For the Young Folks

Echo.

You always know what an echo will do;
Whatever you say it sends back to you.
If you speak gently with voice low and sweet,
The echo your words and tone will repeat.

If your words are cross, and your voice is shrill,
The answering voice sounds crosser still.
Send a pleasant call with might and main,
You will hear a happy shout again.

When we are happy and cheery and bright,
The world around us is sure to go right.
We must be careful of voice and of word,
For they come back, as life's echo is heard.

"God Is Everywhere."

Bobby came through the living-room where mother was sewing buttons on little sister's shoes.

"Mother, please come upstairs with me to get my marbles," he said.

Mother looked up in surprise as she answered, "Why, Bobby! Why do you want mother to go with you? They are in your box by the door—just where you left them."

"But, mother"—and Bobby looked in the fire and seemed reluctant to finish his sentence—"it's dark upstairs, mother."

"Yes, but you can reach the button, son; and, besides, you know where to find the marbles without even a light, don't you?" asked mother.

Bobby did not answer for a moment; he continued to look into the fire and his foot moved restlessly back and forth on the rug. Mother held her needle closer to the light and slipped the thread through; then as she reached for another button, she looked across at Bobby. "Well, little son?" she interrogated gently; but Bobby did not see the tenderness in her eyes.

"I'm afraid, mother! I'm afraid of the big dark!" came Bobby's answer. It was out at last, and his face flushed a little as he faced her.

"Then mother will go with you," she said quietly; and, taking his hand, she led him up the steps. As they reached the nursery door she put out her hand to press the electric button, but Bobby cried out, "Here they are; I can get them without the light," and he stooped over the box where his playthings were kept.

"There is nothing to hurt my little boy," replied mother. "There is nothing to be afraid of. Are you afraid now, Bobby?"

Bobby pressed her hand lovingly as he answered, "No, mother; I'm not afraid when you are here," and his face brightened and he jingled his marbles up and down in the bag.

The next day was Sunday—a warm, sunshiny Sunday morning. The birds were singing happily when Bobby waked up, and when, a little later, he set out for Sunday school, he felt as happy as the little birds. He kissed mother good-bye and waved to baby sister; then he slipped his hand in daddy's and they started off.

There were many little boys and girls at Sunday school, and they sat in a row, on chairs made just for little boys and girls. After they had sung the Sunshine Song and dropped their pennies into the box to send across the sea to the little children who did not know about Jesus, it was time to say catechism. Miss Mary opened the catechism and asked, "Where is God?" Then she pointed to the line in their own catechism and taught them to say, "God is everywhere."

That was a short and easy one to remember; and soon she began to tell them the lesson story. But Bobby was not listening. He sat very still; his little pink catechism held fast in his sunburned hands, and his eyes looking far away.

"God is everywhere—God is everywhere." The sentence was saying itself over and over in his mind. "I just wonder if He is everywhere," he thought. "I'd like to know for sure. Maybe He was upstairs all the time and I didn't know it. God is everywhere."

That night mother missed Bobby. She looked in the dining-room and the hall and in the living-room, and when she did not find him she began to call, "Bobby, Bobby!"

"Yes, mother," came Bobby's voice from upstairs; and, as she went up, he came to the nursery door to meet her.

"Mother, God's up here," he said. "I'm not afraid in the big dark now. God is everywhere."—Western Christian Advocate.

Jimmie's Dog.

Jimmie lived on an island off the coast of Maine. One night, when he was quite a little boy, his father brought him a young dog. Of course Jimmie was delighted and the two had good fun playing together. He named the puppy "Prince Rupert." The dog was not a collie or any special kind of dog good to have on a farm, so the family were much surprised when, one day, after he had been with them several months, he came driving the cows home at milking time without one missing.

Jimmie was glad, for he was saved the long walk to the pasture. After that the dog brought the cows home every night. But one evening Jimmie's mother saw that one of the cows had not come home. She called Prince Rupert and scolded him and told him to go back and get the other cow. But he only walked around and wriggled and seemed unwilling to go. Finally his mistress stamped her foot and said, "Go, get the other cow!" so sharply that Prince Rupert started off for the pasture. He did not come back, and finally Jimmie and his father went to see what was the matter. They found the dog sitting on a rock, guarding the cow and her new baby calf. He knew that she had to stay and take care of the calf and could not come home that night.

In the evenings at home Prince Rupert helped Jimmie fill the kitchen stove corner with wood. Every time Jimmie went down cellar for an armful of wood, the dog went too, and brought up a stick in his mouth. He would lay it on the pile and then straighten it with his nose.

Prince Rupert grew to be so big that when he sat up in the wicker rocking-chair his head came way up to the top.

Wouldn't you like a dog like Prince Rupert to help you work and play?—Our Dumb Animals.

Winter.

The bare, dark branches of the trees
Are swaying to the winter breeze,
And where green leaves once decked the bough
Cold icicles are hanging now.

The skies are grey, the wind blows chill
The songbirds' notes of joy are still;
The storm-clouds gather overhead,
And all the pretty flow'rs are dead.

The colder still the keen wind blow,
The air is filled with flakes of snow,
And in the silence of the night
The land is wrapped in dazzling white.

How short and dark each winter day,
How soon the daylight fades away!
And, when we look ahead, how far
The long, sweet days of summer are!

Yet see, from out its snowy bed
A snowdrop lifts its dainty head,
As though the snow itself would fain
Assist the flow'rs to grow again.

Upon its slender stem of green,
Amid the cold and wintry scene,
The little snowdrop comes to bring
To us the first sweet breath of spring!
—Constance Lowe.

True Story of a Little Wilderness Pet.

Devere told me this story of the Mackinaw woods. He was a baby about three years old when it happened. The family were living in a log cabin on timber land owned by Devere's father. His father was "lumbering" at the time, which means that he was cutting down his big trees and hauling them to the saw-mill to be made into boards.

Devere says that one lovely spring day he and his mother and sister went walking in the woods. Some one must have lifted the latch and walked in their house while they were away. If it were Goldilocks who did this, she forgot to close the door when she left, because the door was standing wide open when the three returned.

Finding the door thus open, somebody on four feet had walked in before the family returned. Devere found him in the bedroom sound asleep in a corner. He was a soft, pretty little fellow. Devere called his mother and his sister to come and see who was sleeping in the bedroom.

"Why, it is a fawn!" said Devere's mother, "and a fawn is a deer's baby."

Devere petted the pretty animal on his velvety head, and the fawn opened his beautiful eyes. Strange to say, he didn't act afraid. He trusted the baby, too. When he was wide awake he walked round the bedroom and the living-room. He allowed the children to pet him and behaved as if he felt perfectly at home.

After a little while the wee fawn walked out of the house and bounded away into the deep woods. Devere almost cried, because he wanted that fawn for a pet.

Next day the fawn came back. He walked to the cabin door, and when it was opened in he came as if he were an old friend.

"The flies are bothering him," said Devere's mother. "That is why he wishes to come into the house."

The children brushed the flies off the fawn's coat and then played with him as if he were a kitten.

Ever after the fawn came every day to see the children. Every day before they invited him into the house they brushed off the flies that troubled him. In a few weeks the little fawn grew so tame that he came from the woods when the children called him. Devere says they didn't give him a name, but called him the "Little Deer," and when they wished him to come to play they would sing out, "Come on, come on, come on!" and the fawn would come leaping from the evergreen thickets.

The little fellow was gentle and liked to be petted. Most of all he liked to have the flies brushed from his velvety body. All sorts of flies troubled the little fawn, and that was doubtless the true reason why he liked to stay in the house when he came visiting, rather than to play out doors.

During the hunting season in the autumn the baby boy's pet stayed close by the house all the time, and other big deer came with him to hide from the hunters.

Next spring back came the little fawn to play with the children again, only, of course, he was no longer a tiny animal.

Three years the little boy lived in the log cabin in the Mackinaw woods with his family, and all that time the deer came often to be petted and to play with the children.

Devere is a young man now; he says he often wonders about what became of his wildwood playmate; and he says that long ago it used to make him feel sad when he thought of his pet going to the log cabin expecting to see friends, and finding no one at home to welcome him then or ever after.—Frances Fox in Exchange.

The Dusting Game.

My mamma was dusting her room one day, And I was very busy at play. "I wish you'd help me, dear," she said. Then I felt my face getting awful red. For I wanted to take my dollie out, And my lips they curled up in a pout.

Then mamma said, "Suppose we play This room is a hospital—just for today— The chairs shall be patients, don't you see?

And I will play I am Dr. B—, And I will wise prescriptions write; And you shall be nurse in cap all white.

"Now, you must rub these patients all; Be careful that they do not fall. Rub backs and legs and arms with oil; See, playing often lightens toil!" Soon every chair was in its place, And "Nursie" had a smiling face.

—A. M. Wallace.

Betty's New Muff.

Betty had a beautiful new white muff. All the other little girls looked at it longingly. But each one of these little girls had other pretty things of her own, all except Janie Babcock, and poor little Janie had not even a pair of mittens to put on her red, rough little hands. Once, when Betty was looking across the aisle, Janie slipped one of these little rough hands into the muff as it lay on a chair next to her. It was for only a moment, but such a happy moment!

The day was bitter cold, and after Sabbath school was over Janie hurried toward her home as fast as she could go. Her bare hands were drawn as far up into her short coat sleeves as she could get them, but they were almost frozen. As she ran along she was thinking of Betty's muff. Then she heard some one running along behind her, and in another moment she saw dainty little Betty beside her.

"You haven't got any mittens on, Janie," said breathless Betty, who had a very kind heart hidden away under her pretty clothes. "And I saw you put your hands in my muff in Sunday school, and I can go as far as your house and then run into our yard the back way, so you can take my muff as far as your gate."

"Won't your hands be cold?" asked Janie, her eyes round with the wonder of it all. But without waiting for an answer she slipped her numb fingers into its welcome warmth and buried her face in its beautiful fur.

"Not with fur inside my mittens," laughed Betty, with a happy skip. And she felt even much warmer than she had when carrying the muff down to Sabbath school.

The rest of the way home was all too short for Janie, and when she reached her gate she gave the muff a most loving pat as she handed it over to Betty.

"Oh, this won't be the last time, little goosie," said Betty, giving her a kiss. We'll walk home every Sunday like this."

And they did.—Ex.

"Dare to Have a Purpose."

"I've been having my glasses changed," said the young girl who boarded the train with a friend she had met in town. "How do you like them?"

The other took a good look, and then spoke with the privilege of long friendship.

"I liked your old style of mountings better," she said. "They were so inconspicuous and becoming to you. Why did you change them?"

The girl with the glasses laughed a bit nervously.

"I didn't mean to," she confessed. "I liked them very well myself, and meant to keep them. But the optician recommended these so highly—he just talked me into having them." She paused, and added rather ruefully. "It isn't a bit of use for me to decide a thing beforehand. Some one is sure to come along and make me do something else."

The other girl looked at her with friendly interest.

"That's only because you don't decide hard enough," she declared. "You always leave a loophole of possibility of change. It's all right if you are not sure you have decided for the best. But—like this time—when you know you're right, you ought to decide and stay decided. Burn your bridges, lock the door, and throw the key down the well—you know what I mean. Set your teeth, and say, 'No, no, no,' when somebody tried to change your mind about it—that is, if you can talk through set teeth. You know the story of the old woman who said wobblin' is weakenin', when the girl couldn't decide about taking along an umbrella. The wobblin' in your decision is weakening. I had to break myself of it, and I know," and that last confession took the hurt out of her little lecture and drove it home all the better.

Lots of things that we must decide upon daily are not worth a second thought. There is one good way about them. Decide upon that, and dismiss the matter. Other things are of more moment, and need careful decision. But when that decision, too, is made, they should not be allowed to take more time and thought. Nor should the decision be changed for whim or for any outside argument or interest, unless you are shown clearly and convincingly that you are mistaken and wrong in your decision. The old revival hymn can be applied to these decisions quite as well as to spiritual ones. You must, if you would be one of the "unwobblin'" ones,

"Dare to stand alone;
Dare to have a purpose true

And dare to make it known," and stand by it, unshaken, unmoved by opposition.

In spiritual affairs "dare to be a Daniel," standing by your decisions for right, your principles of righteousness, your Christian opinions—but, in these, contrary to the old hymn, you never "stand alone." One who agrees with all such decisions stands close by and backs them and the decider up through any attack and effort of evil.—East and West.

The Silver Trail.

"You never will learn that lesson," said Fred impatiently. "Here I learned mine an hour ago and you are still studying."

"I know it," answered Ben humbly; "it takes me so long to learn anything, but I hate to give it up. I don't like to be in class and not know my lesson."

"Well, if you can't learn, you can't," said Fred. "You have studied long enough. Come out in the garden and help me weed. You can do that, even if you didn't have gardens in the city."

Fred and Ben were cousins, and Ben, whose parents lived in the city, had come to spend a year with his uncle and aunt while his father and mother were away. He half sighed now as he rose to follow his cousin. Fred was so smart, he read his lessons over once or twice and then he knew them. He guessed he wouldn't study any more on that lesson today; as Fred said, he couldn't help it if he couldn't learn.

The two boys knelt down by the garden beds to weed. All at once Ben noticed a kind of silvery network upon the soil.

"Why, look here!" he exclaimed excitedly. "Here's a silver trail. I wonder what beautiful insect made it. See, it crosses the path here and disappears under that rock."

"Oh," said Fred indifferently, "that's nothing but an old slimy snail. They crawl around here every morning. They are all wet and slimy, and some of the moisture on their bodies comes off on the grass and dirt."

"But it is so pretty and silvery," said Ben. Then he thought a minute.

"Fred," he asked, "isn't a snail the slowest thing there is?"

"Of course," answered Fred impatiently. "Aren't you going to help me weed now?"

Ben rose to his feet.

"No, I am not," he answered decidedly. "I am going back and learn that lesson. Then I will come and help you. You can be doing something else until I finish, then I will weed with you. I guess if a snail can make such a lovely thing as a silvery trail I can make some kind of a one myself, even if I am slow. The snail did not break his trail and I won't break mine."

Fred looked after him a minute. "There's that knife-tray for mother I have had half finished for weeks," he said. "I think I will finish it now while Ben is studying. I can't let my cousin and an old snail get ahead of me."—Boston Zion's Herald.

For the Summer.

The more we roll our snowball,

The larger it will grow,

And so we'll roll and roll until

We've used up all the snow.

And when it's big as big can be

We'll put it in the shade,

And p'raps we'll have it when it's hot

To cool our lemonade.

REX CORBIN SPENCER MAUPIN.

REX CORBIN SPENCER MAUPIN, who entered into rest on January 13, 1924, even in the streaming roar and relentless struggle of our modern world, demands and deserves far more than a perfunctory mention or a casual reference in a column which is devoted to the memory of the dead.

Born in Bedford County, Va., February 21, 1884, the day of his nativity almost coincident with that of George Washington. He sprang from a long and distinguished ancestry in which were exhibited and illustrated all the noblest ideals of Virginia and the South that died at Appomattox in the dawning vernal season of 1865. His father was William Cary Maupin; his mother Sarah Hatcher. Mr. Maupin was for years a member of the Masonic Order, a loyal son of the Episcopal Church. His ecclesiastical affiliations descending to him by a form of succession which, if not "apostolic," was at least hereditary.

His father was a most devoted and heroic soldier of the Confederacy, entering the lists at fourteen and bearing up the Stars and Bars unto "the utterance." All that related to the University of Virginia and its welfare appealed to him with resistless force, and he was an honorary member of the Alumni Association. The past of Virginia, its legendary and mystical lore, its historical incidents, had for him power and fascination. Much of his brief day on earth was passed in Warren and Fauquier Counties.

He loved especially to study the customs of the inhabitants of the Blue Ridge Mountains, where he formed close friendships with many of those unworlly people, endearing himself to them by his unvarying kindness and consideration.

His manhood was spent in Washington, to a large extent, until his marriage to his cousin, Miss Margaret Lewis Maupin, daughter of the late Professor Chapman Maupin, that most critical and accomplished scholar, who died in July, 1900, in the flower of his manhood, with brilliant dreams of unfulfilled longings to perpetuate his broadening fame.

Mr. Rex Corbin Spencer Maupin, in every sphere and phase of his character, never failed to illustrate the vital truth of our sovereign poet—

"That man's the best cosmopolite
Who loves his native country best,"

"and more than all, the still profounder deliverance, "he bore without abuse the grand old name of gentleman."

DR. HENRY E. SHEPHERD.
Baltimore, Md.

MRS. MARY SHORTER FRY.

Born in Columbus, Ga., November 23, 1847.
Died in Mobile, Ala., January 20, 1924.

MARY SHORTER FRY, widow of the late Thomas Slaughter Fry, and daughter of the late Rueben Sims Shorter and his wife, Kate Ward Shorter.

In 1885 she was married to Captain Fry, who had gone from his home in Orange Court House, Va., and was living in Mobile, Ala., a gallant officer of the Third Alabama Regiment, C. S. A.

Of this union there were nine children. Four daughters survive, Mrs. George R. Vaughan, Mrs. S. S. Rubira, Jr., and Misses Ethel and Elcie Fry, all of Mobile; five grandchildren, S. S. Rubira III, Marion Fry Rubira, Carroll Shields Rubira, Frances Rubira and Maury Westcott Fry.

A loving mother and grandmother; a devoted friend of all children and a sincere friend to all who needed help and comfort. Her life was richly blessed with the friendship of those to whom she was a loving friend.

A devoted member of Christ Episcopal Church, Mobile, Ala., for fifty-eight years. For some years her health had not permitted her to take an active part in church work, but her home life radiated love and friendship, and to those who affectionately called her "Aunt Molly" the call to her heavenly home leaves a void that cannot be filled.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

MISS SUE A. LANGSDALE.

Entered into eternal rest on February 25, 1924, at her home in Onancock, Va., SUE A. LANGSDALE, daughter of the late John H. Langsdale, of Princess Anne, Md., and Susan Garrison Langsdale, of Accomack County, Va.

She is survived by two first cousins, Margaret Groton, of Onancock, Va., who was her God-child, and L. W. Groton, of Newport News, Va.

She was a devoted and loyal churchwoman, a lovely and gentle Christian, and a staunch friend. She leaves behind her the beauty and glory of a rare character. "And their works do follow them."

MISS FANNIE KENNERLY.

MISS FANNIE KENNERLY, daughter of the late William C. and Margaret Withers Kennerly, passed into life eternal from her residence, Kenilworth, White Post, Va., on Wednesday, February 6, 1924. Her Master and her church were the supreme objects of her lifelong devotion, and her highest thought and service were dedicated to the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom near and far. Her personal interest led many into the communion of the church, and through her Junior Auxiliary work, which she so loved, and for which she was pre-eminently fitted, she has given to the young people of the congregation the broader outlook and wider sympathies that an intelligent interest in the full program of the kingdom inspires. As her body was lovingly laid to rest in Meade Memorial Churchyard it was carried through lines of boys and girls carrying flowers, typical on that cold wintry day of spring and resurrection. Her life and influence will be perpetuated in those young lives through generations to come. Faithful unto death, she has passed to her assured reward, and those who remain rejoice in a rich heritage of loving memory and a conscious sense of unbroken communion.

Meeting of Bishop and Council.

A meeting of the Bishop and Council of the District was held at Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, on February 13. Celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30; business sessions opened at 9:30, with Bishop Tyler presiding. Every clergyman in the District was present at this meeting, as were also the woman worker among the Indians at Cannon Ball, Miss Elizabeth A. Bowen, and the house mother at the Church Hall, Valley City, Mrs. Margaret Helferty. It was a very interesting and helpful meeting.

Reports were made by the chairmen of the five departments of the Council. The Rev. H. Cowley-Carroll, chairman of the Department of Field Service, attended the Conference at Manitou, Col., in January, and made a report to the Council of the actions and recommendations made at that Conference. The chairman reported that the Field Department had held several Demonstration Group Parish Conferences in the parishes and missions of the District. At the Dean's suggestion the chairmen of all the departments of the Council were made members of the Department of Field Service.

The special feature of the report of the chairman of the Department of Religious Education, the Rev. Charles W. Baxter, was the growth and success of the District Home Department of the Church School, which is reaching out among the scattered Church families and the rural districts, and which has become self-supporting as well as contributing to the Nation-Wide Campaign Fund.

The Rev. Charles Leo Abbott, chairman of the Department of Christian Social Service, dealt with the phases of the modern social life which challenge the Church and her workers.

Plans for caring for the outlying places before they acquire resident clergymen were made following the report of the Rev. N. E. Elsworth, chairman of the Department of Missions and Church Extension.

The congregation of St. Mark's Mission at Oakes has been steadily working towards the erection of a church for some time past, and last September their hopes were realized and the work begun. They are now worshipping in their new church, although not completely furnished or the basement completed. There is to be a formal opening service of the church in the early spring.

American Seamen's Friend Society.

That another high record in the number of vessels entering the port of New York since the war was established during 1923 is shown by a survey which was made public recently by the American Seamen's Friend Society, 76 Wall Street, which maintains a large sailors' home on the North River waterfront. According to their information the number of incoming vessels for 1923 exceeded the record of the previous twelve months by 446. There were 9,337 ships registered as arriving at New York through the period just closed.

The development of coastwise shipping, almost entirely composed of vessels of American registry handling domestic freight, has been the principal cause of the increase, since the number of ships from foreign ports remained practically the same as in 1922. During 1922 the coastwise vessels entering New York reached 3,363, then a remarkably high number, but last year this total was 3,986, an increase of 623, or almost twenty per cent. In the opinion of Dr. George Sidney Webster, Secretary of the Society, this fact indicates a real growth toward an American merchant marine and has already relieved the railroad freight congestion, particularly in long transcontinental shipments, to a marked degree. The monthly average of coastwise ships coming into the port for 1923 is 332, as compared with 280 in 1922.

The larger amount of shipping has brought increased numbers of seamen to this port throughout the year. On these ships which registered alone this amounted to at least 15,000. As a result the facilities of the Society's Sailors' Home were taxed to capacity during almost the entire year. At the same time the proportion of American-born sailors has been maintained, and observations show that many of them are finding their way from the Great Lakes into coastwise or foreign service.

While it appears that the total number of seamen shipping from all American ports was larger than ever last year, the port of New York certainly received more than its share of the increase.

"God of the granite and the rose,
Soul of the sparrow and the bee,
The mighty tide of being flows
Through countless channels, Lord, from Thee.
It springs to life in grass and flowers,
Through every grade of being runs,
While from creation's utmost towers,
Its glory shines in stars and suns."

The Saviour said, "This do." We have no choice. We have the direct command of Him whom we are professing to obey. He says distinctly and authoritatively, "This do." In the face of this direct command, can we be indifferent, negligent, or lacking in obedience? There are some among us who explain away by a kind of sophistry the need and practice of Holy Communion, and yet call themselves Christians. The Saviour distinctly says, "This do."—Exchange.

For my home give me love and obedience;
For my country, sacrifice and service;
For my Church, reverence and devotion.
And in everything make me true to Thee
Through Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Conquering Tide.

On the far reef the breakers
Recoil in scattered foam.
Yet still the sea behind them
Urges its forces home.

Its chant of triumph surges
Through all the thunderous din—
The wave may break in failure,
But the tide is sure to win.

The reef is strong and cruel;
Upon its jagged wall,
One wave—a score—a hundred,
Broken and beaten fall.

Yet in defeat they conquer,
The sea comes flooding in—
Wave upon wave is routed,
But the tide is sure to win.

O mighty sea, thy message
In clanging spray is cast;
Within God's plan of progress
It matters not at last

How wide the shores of evil,
How strong the reefs of sin—
The wave may be defeated,
But the tide is sure to win.

"The Best Translation"

A sweeping statement that a given translation is the best is one thing; to have one of the leading authorities, as for instance, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, unqualifiedly say that the American Standard Bible gives us the best translation, is quite another. Read Dr. Morgan's letter:

"I certainly value it, and am using that edition constantly. It is by far and away the best translation that we have had."—G. Campbell Morgan.

Heresy

This is the truth, he cried, and sharply drew
A line between him and his erstwhile friend.
So was the battle set in keen array.
To either standard flocked the impetuous hosts,
Forgetful of the common blood that flowed
In veins that claimed a heavenly parentage,
While all about a crowd unshepherded
Beheld the strife and passed with scornful eyes.

But One there was who saw the conflict grow,
And yearned to gather all within His fold.
Yet had He naught to say but one soft word:
"It is my sheep who hear my Voice. They know Their Master's face, and follow!" Only this Can knit the Household in the bond of Peace.

"LET US RISE UP AND BUILD"

THE Church was thrilled by Bishop McKim's brave message after the earthquake in Japan last September, "All gone but faith in God," and the National Council proudly recalls the prompt and generous action of our people in providing emergency relief for the Japanese Church.

Knowing that temporary relief must be followed by careful reconstruction, the Council sent its President and the Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions to Japan to study the facts, confer with leaders and report a program.

At its meeting, on February 20th, the Council received the report of Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood, containing a complete plan for reconstruction, based upon personal investigation and conferences with clergy and leaders of the Japanese Church, with Dr. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital, with architects and building experts and with Japanese statesmen such as Viscounts Goto and Shibusawa.

Transcending the need for physical restoration, they report that following the disaster there has developed the greatest opportunity ever presented for making Christ known to Japan. In this we must play our part and reap the rich fruitage of the consecrated effort or more than sixty years.

They declare the experience and conviction of the leaders of the Japanese Church to be that for successful evangelistic effort it is absolutely essential that in addition to churches there be both a complete and balanced system of education for the development of Christian leaders and medical work as a practical demonstration of Christianity.

The Council at its meeting had the benefit of the advice of Bishop McKim, Bishop Reifsnider and Bishop Tucker, who unqualifiedly endorsed the report of Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood and the convictions upon which its recommendations were based.

The estimated cost of the restoration of buildings and equipment and for necessary expansion to make the work complete and efficient is $3,000,000.

The Council has appointed a committee to lay the facts before the Church, confident that the Church, in facing this larger task of permanent reconstruction, will exhibit the same splendid spirit of devotion and sacrifice that responded so effectively to the emergency appeal. "Let us rise up and build."

For the Thoughtful

Love to God is sure to express itself in ways that men can understand.

God has plenty of work that can be done by people with one talent.

Let us use Lent as a period of training in which we strive to sow the seed which Christ gives us, and to carefully cultivate the soil for which we are responsible. We know that we will never regret it; we are merely too inert to secure the blessing.

Why Do the Prophetic Time Periods of Daniel 12 Expire Simultaneously the Present Year?

2,500 years ago the question was asked, "How Long Shall It Be to the End?" (Dan. 12:6). It was answered by FOUR PERIODS, but the meaning of these was "sealed" or hidden "till the time of the end," when it was promised, "the wise shall understand."

That time has come and those periods are found to culminate in a single year—1924.

Is not this the "finished mystery" of Rev. 10:7?

STUDYING THE CHRISTIAN WAY OF LIFE

Elijah long ago learned a great truth which religious men have been experiencing afresh all down the centuries, namely, that God may speak not through the wind, nor the earthquake, nor the fire, but through the still small voice. Not by convulsive and dramatic happenings, but through those quiet breathings of new influences which at first seem insignificant, His mighty messages for His world may come.

We remember that truth when we contemplate such an influence as that which goes under the name of "The National Conference on the Christian Way of Life." It was not made much noise. It has attempted no wide propaganda, no conspicuous publicity, nor any effort to rally and proclaim a list of impressive sounding names. But it has been doing a far deeper and more significant thing than that. It has been gathering together in little groups at many places in America, thoughtful men and women to discuss face to face what they think Christianity really means, and what it ought to mean as the solvent of our industrial, racial, and international relations.

This venture had its origin in a resolution by the administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, approving the holding of a National Conference on "the meaning of Christianity for human relationships, with especial attention to industry, citizenship, and race relations in the United States, and the function of the Church in social and civic affairs. A nominating committee was appointed to select a "national committee, of which they shall themselves be members, and to convene it as soon as possible, with the understanding that the national committee shall be wholly free in planning for the Conference and that the Federal Council assumes no responsibility for its findings or for its financial support." At the first meeting of the National Committee, held at Lake Mohonk there was a long discussion as to the various types of conference which might be held. It was finally agreed that the conference desired was one which would most effectually stimulate group thinking. An effort was to be made, therefore, to stimulate discussion of chosen topics everywhere throughout the nation.

From the beginning it has been hoped that the Conference might be on an even broader basis than that of the Federal Council of Churches, including all who believe that the following of Jesus' way of life might transform industrial, racial and international relations. As the number of study groups increases it is clear that this search for Jesus' way of life is catching the imagination of men and women of varying religious beliefs within the churches, as well as of those who have no formal relationship with organized Christianity.

The purpose of the National Conference on the Christian Way of Life is to promote the serious study and full discussion of industrial, racial and international problems in the light of the spirit and teaching of Jesus. The method of procedure is not that of propaganda on behalf of opinions already formulated, but rather an open-minded appeal to the facts of experience in the effort to gain new light and a larger understanding of truth. For the sake of brevity this enterprise is referred to as "The Inquiry."

This widespread study and full discussion by average Christian citizens of industrial, racial and international problems has been launched in the hope of discovering how in these relationships with their specific situations today for individuals and communities, there can be achieved a more Christian way of life. Against the background of the inquiry in these three fields certain groups will also be studying the Church and the Christian way of life. However inadequate the contribution of this enterprise may prove to be in the direction of its declared purposes, it will relate itself vitally to the problem of education in a democratic world. The process of this inquiry will, therefore, be most successful if it serves to create in the minds of wayfaring men and women responsible habits of thought in dealing with the problems of human relationships—a desire for accurate facts before arriving at "opinions," a willingness to discuss controversial questions in groups which represent conflicting experiences, and a mood of expectancy which will eventually release for social redemption the larger spiritual resources, of the Kingdom of God.

As a climax to this program of study and inquiry a nation-wide conference on the Christian way of life will be held when groups throughout the country have become so aroused to the enterprise as to insure that it will be a real conferring together and truly national in representation. This National Conference, perhaps two or three weeks in duration, will clarify and deepen the purpose of those who have shared in the Inquiry and give direction to the thought and study which ought certainly to be a continuing result after this enterprise as such has gone out of existence. The purpose of such a Conference will be to insure that whatever of value has emerged from the process may become fully related to the normal activity of civic, social and religious organizations of the country. Because this conference should be planned and directed by men and women throughout the nation who have been really a part of The Inquiry itself, it is proposed that in the spring or summer of 1925 an interim conference be held, drawing together those who have thus far been active participants in the enterprise, including the National Committee and the Commissions, to hear reports of progress and to make plans for the immediate future. It is only at such a meeting that final plans for a truly National Conference can be projected, its date and place determined as well as the size and method of representation.

Doubtless there are many among our readers who have never heard of this particular effort which is being made to crystallize the thought of Christians with regard to the great problems of our day which Christianity must meet. There may be many, both among ministers and laymen, who would like to share in this process of conference and discussion. Any who will write to the offices of the National Conference of the Christian Way of Life at 129 East Fifty-second Street, New York, will receive information and material by the help of which they can gather groups in their own communities to think and study together.

Surely no nobler ideal could be pursued than that which this movement has lifted up before itself, nor could there be any finer confession of the sovereignty of Jesus for our life today, than this:

"Amid the confusion of our international, interracial and economic relationships there are many voices telling us that the solution of our difficulties is to be found at the end of one road or of another. Groups of people have organized around theories of the nature of social institutions, of the kind of government needed for the world and of the way in which the physical necessities of life should be produced and distributed. No one of these groups tell us what we need to know above all else; they do not answer the question: what is life for? How should it be lived?

"Of the leaders of history One at least made the tremendous assertion that He had an answer to this question. He proposed no theory of government, no scheme for social betterment. Rather Jesus typified and advocated a way of life which He asserted we all might live if we would. To search out the meaning of this way of life in the tangle of every-day relationships—racial, industrial and international—is the program of The Inquiry as it leads through cooperative study, discussion and endeavor and through the suggested National Conference into the permanent organized life of the nation."

FOLIA CHRISTI

By Richard C. Cabot, M. D.

CHRISTIANITY is like an oak whose vital sap shoots out towards the light in the glowing green of its myriad leaves, each differently beautiful. We peer into the shadows of the towering leaf-masses, depth beyond depth, a mystery that has no vagueness, but only the richness of the tree's multitudinous life. In despair of picturing its stature, I fix attention on a few of its leaves, each, as Goethe said, characteristic of the whole tree, each unlike any other that has been created.

I. The Eternal Values.

It is characteristic of Christian experience that like the "Two Old Men" of Tolstoi's story, we set out dutifully upon a pilgrimage to Jerusalem and then quite unexpectedly hear the Master's call from some wayside hut, where "one of the least of these" His brethren is in such dire need, that when we have begun to answer the call, we give up the original journey (though for this men reproach us), because our goal is already at hand. Failure of the plan as we made it; success thrust upon us in an imperishable experience which we never could have foreseen. I worked hard once to cure a good woman's child of rickets. I used the approved methods laboriously. The family sacrificed much to follow out my plan. It failed utterly. The child suffered from the treatment, but did not improve. But because the Spirit of Christ was in that family, they took the will for the deed, never blamed me for my blunders and gave me their priceless, almost wordless, affection, never sought at the outset, eternal in its value to me. Out of failure this jewel remains.

So to many of us the Spanish War of 1898, with its thousands of youthful lives sacrificed to typhoid fever in our unsanitary southern training camps, with its food scandals and its stubborn refusal to allow women nurses at the front, seems but a dubious and tear-stained success. But because there was high endeavor and Christian idealism in it, nevertheless, we have the permanent treasures of Mr. Dooley's kindly fun, surviving all the blunders and ineptitudes, an eternal value saved from the mess. Mr. Dooley's immortal II. The Motto of Modern Science in the New Testament been foreseen or dutifully sought for. But its perfection may atone for all our sins of 1898. "The last shall be first."

desires. It is as base or as noble as those desires.

It is sometimes said that science, art and economics are left out of Christ's teachings. I find the keynote of pure science in the words "Seek and ye shall find. Knock and it shall be opened unto you." Pure science, the inspired and self-forgetful searcher for the truth is a part of religion. Applied science uses the fruits of this search to attain various phrases of man's desires. It is as base or as noble as those desires. When in war we wish to crush the population of a helpless non-combatant city, applied science with the aeroplane and the poison gas bomb carries out our wishes. But pure science is always a part of the divine impulse to ask questions and get answers, seeking the Lord where He may be found—not elsewhere. The kingdom of science cometh not with observation, is not dropped beside us while we wait, but is an answer to loud knocks, penetrating questions; which the tyro has neither the vigor nor the insight to ask. When a man of science has planned a crucial experiment, his work is for the time over. The answer—yes or a no—must come because he has knocked at the right door seeking the Lord, not casually or at random, but where he may be found. But above all, because he is seeking an answer to a question which his long discipline has fitted him to ask. It is not unrelated to the passionate petitions of prayer, which find their answer because they clearly, perhaps desperately, ask, framing their need into a question, instead of leaving it as a desire, a yearning, a hope or a wondering. As the act of prayer differs from these ruminating passivities, so the crucial experiment of the scientist, shot like an arrow towards a mark, differs from our lifeless awareness of the facts of nature and of mind which is at the door of truth, but fails to knock.

III. Repentance and Confession While in Power.

In June, 1922, a few moments before his death, Saunderson, Headmaster of Oundle School in England, was speaking to the "National Union of Scientific Workers," out of his love of pure science and his discipleship of Jesus Christ. Though wholly unaware that a fatal apoplectic stroke was but a few moments ahead of him, he was very tired and could only shoot out bits of his matured wisdom in fragmentary shape:

"What a curious thing is the form of government! Its characteristics include no repentance, no regret, otherwise it would acknowledge itself less than the Master." (Black type mine.) I have had nothing to do with government, but some acquaintance with a hospital, a college and a charitable agency and with the methods by which from year to year the governing boards of these institutions seek to win public support through printed reports and appeals. At such moments our Christianity is largely forgotten and we become imperial Romans, acknowledging no weakness lest we seem to be less than the masters of the situation. Individuals may repent, especially in private. But governing boards—in my experience—never. Yet Christianity, as I see it, approves not him who thanks God that he is not as others are. Christ's zeal is on the poor wretch who in public, not alone in his closet, cries, "God be merciful to me a sinner." We consider in committee, gingerly and amid murmurs of disapproval, the possibility of letting the public know that we—this hospital, this charity—are not only blunderers but at times sinners. I have an idea that would be the most fetching appeal we could make if it was concrete and honest enough in its confessions. But whether or not such public repentance, such open admission of failure would win confidence and financial support, it certainly would make our institutions less pagan, more Christian. Think of the self-righteousness of party platforms! But it is not much less un-Christian than the smugness of our "annual reports," those impeccable exhibits of the doings of a group of peccant persons, keeping a bold front up to the last moment. Surely, as Emerson said, "we descend to meet" when the meeting formulates an annual report of the doings of those, each of whom knows himself for a blunderer and a sinner, but whose united front is pictured stainless. Christianity will first live in the publicity of these public organizations when they cease boasting, defending and concealing all that is not presentable.

IV. Casting Our Burden on the Lord.

One of the noblest public confessions of a weakness and possible failure known to me was in Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address. There the confession meant, I am sure, as such, never planned as a literary gem, or a forensic artifice, but spoken as the unburdening of a great and sorrowful heart, painfully aware of the littleness of man before God and of his own and his nation's failure, this confession resulted in a masterpiece of style. Surely Lincoln had no idea that it would be an effective speech or that students of literary art would be studying it decade after decade beyond the occasion for which he wrote it. It is this which makes me believe that a public confession of its shortcomings and its wrong doings and a sincere reliance on the inherent rightness of this deed to begin its own reform, might be the most eloquent and effective financial appeal of a hospital or a college.

Lincoln confesses that he and his fellow mourners are utterly incapable of the great act which they had come to Gettysburg to perform.

"But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Clearly seeing his incompetence, he cast his burden on the Lord, made confession of incapacity, made strength out of his weakness, a glorious exaltation of the Power which alone could dedicate and consecrate their lives, the day and place on which they had met and the lives of those who had fallen. Then literary mastery and national leadership was added unto him because he sought not these, but the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.

A LITTLE JOURNEY IN THE WEST

By the Reverend James Sheerin

V Concluded

SOMETIMES it seems as though the Episcopal Church which, by its inherent sense of liberty, could be a reconciler between Fundamentalism and Modernism, has been too forgetful of its proper relationship to Christians of all names, and too indifferent to the tremendous swing upward of American social and religious life. Partly because of its small size in the West, but chiefly because of its aloofness to American religious ideals, the Episcopal Church has taken an insignificant part in the great affairs of citizenship. Seldom does one see an Episcopal clergyman at great conferences on Child Welfare, or in the gatherings of university men. In various ways it has seemed as if the average Episcopalian, especially if he is disposed to be very "Churchly," was content to let American civilization rush by him to its destined end if he can only preserve his externals of Churchmanship. This may be my chief criticism, subject to all sorts of corrections by further knowledge, namely: that the Episcopal Church everywhere, particularly in the great Middle West, has been untouched by and has left untouched the overwhelming majority of humanitarians and Christians in the swiftly moving world about it. The lay people who trouble themselves least about debated points of doctrine and ritual are often in these movements to a surprising proportion, but their ecclesiastical leaders are too often absent, and seem at times mere supercilious critics on the outside.

When some missionary, like Bishop Paddock, does otherwise, and freely mingles and cooperates with his fellow Christians and social workers, becoming thereby a valuable part of the stream of social progress, he is likely to be called fool in a sense different from that of the novelist when he wrote of a heroic helper of his fellowmen as "God's Fool." Probably under the rules of efficiency as understood by flourishing lodges and successful industries, he was all that his enemies imply; but one wonders what St. Francis would have said of him, or what would have been the judgment of the Blessed Master of St. Francis?

It would not do to repeat the charge made by that large-hearted man of God, Bishop Peterkin, when he spoke of "a troublesome belt of small dioceses" that always stood in the way of Christian unity, but it is an interesting fact that one can, almost like a Gulf stream, note lines of Episcopalian growth running in different directions; and wherever they are, it is possible to trace the successful haven that was hidden in the measures. That the thirteen original states have a larger proportion of Episcopalians is not due to their having colonial churches, for the Revolution left them for a time worse off, because of that fact. It is due rather to the character of the men who gave the Church a new start in the new nation. It is customary to trace the unusual strength of the Episcopal Church in Connecticut to the High Church Bishop Seabury. But, without denying a part of it to the fact that he and his kind, had an aggressive enthusiasm for the Church, which did add to its impulse of growth, there is back of that good Churchman an atmosphere which it never lost. It is not too fanciful to place in its foreground of that atmosphere Bishop Berkeley at Newport, and the President of Yale and his fellow-workers, who forsook Congregationalism for Episcopalianism in the Colonial Church. This added an intellectual aspect to the Churchly enthusiasm that helped make the Episcopal Church a power in a state, where learning was especially respected. Furthermore, the Revolution did not paralyze it as much there as elsewhere.

Pennsylvania has never quite appreciated the permanent spirit of strength given to its religion, especially around Philadelphia, by William Penn and his compeers, whose descendants are mainly Episcopalians with a wholesome strain of Quaker character added. The Episcopal Church owes to this and to William White, as well as to Alonzo Potter, the firm hold it has to this day in that staid old section of America. Much the same conditions may be observed in Boston and New York. Boston had a harder task because Unitarianism presented a liberal front that sometimes competed successfully with the more gracious side of Episcopalianism. But it had fine laymen always, and the line of Bishops was on the side of Christian breadth, allowing for the limitations of the day. New York had a similar experience to Connecticut's, i. e.: a High Church Bishop increasing its propaganda powers, and broad-minded Christian men, both clerical and lay, doing the actual work of the Church. This has been the dominant condition from Washington to Boston for a century. The exceptions only helped the rule. Within the past decade or two High Churchmen have been Bishops in this section of the United States. One of them has joined the Roman Catholic Church. One of them has died, and another has resigned. In most of them there was something else than a partisan Catholicity by which they were enabled to be more generally useful. The "highness," which is primarily an enthusiasm for the Church idea, may be described the heat within the body, and the broader application was the steam and the machinery, or one was the steam and the other the works! The two elements may be permanently essential if the Church is not to die a slow death.

I can see how all I have said may be taken as partiality for the broader type of Churchmen, and yet I should regret greatly if the essential qualities of the other were left out. It is not easy to set a standard up and say this and this only has the real element of successful work. What I am driving at is found in all kinds of Churchmen, but is perhaps more directly shown by what is paradoxically called a Broad-High Churchman, who is not ashamed of being Low sometimes! It could be put in terms of personality as known in history, but even then it were well to recollect that no one person, or set of persons, had it all.

Speaking to Dr. Huntington once of the qualities in a certain eminent preacher, I remarked, "He has a good deal from Robertson," and the great rector of Grace Church, added, "Yes, and from Coleridge, for all broader men have to go back to him!" It could be biblically presented something like this: Hooker begat Jeremy Taylor and Tillotson; Tillotson and Taylor begat Butler; Butler begat Coleridge; Coleridge begat Robertson; Robertson begat Milman, Kingsley, Stanley and Maurice; Maurice begat McVickar and Phillips Brooks, and Phillips Brooks begat Whipple, Hare, Tuttle, Washburn, Potter and Huntington; Huntington begat Lawrence, Spalding, Nichols, Parsons, and many others.

"A LETTER TO A MODERNIST."

Mr. Editor:

Will you say, please, in the Southern Churchman, that a recent correspondence of mine, printed under the title, "A Letter to a Modernist," is now issued in pamphlet form. It is part of an actual correspondence with a clergyman whom I love, but with whom I differ. Several hundred persons have written asking for copies of it. It has, therefore, been issued in pamphlet form and can be secured at actual cost, by writing the Rev. F. C. Smith, Diocesan Office, 69 Martin Building, Utica, N. Y. The pamphlet is entitled, "A Letter to a Modernist: A Plea for Charity, and an Argument for the Traditional Faith." Its cost is six cents per copy; fifty for $2.50.

DEFENDING A GOOD CAUSE WITH A BAD ARGUMENT.

Mr. Editor:

As a student for some years of the Bible from the critical as well as the spiritual point of view, and as a believer in the words "conceived by the Holy Ghost (what we could say 'Holy Spirit'); born of the Virgin Mary," taken in their natural and obvious sense, I have been led many times to regret the defending a good cause with bad arguments that one comes across now and then. It always

The background of such great names is always apt to be a noble army of the unknown, and its influence is apt to be found in every school of thought or group of workers. Sweeping Westward and Southward, from Richmond, was the evangelical Churchman who met and joined with the same kind going West from Charleston,—Richmond and Charleston being probably the strongest centres of Episcopalianism in the smaller important cities of the nation. The whole South is influenced by this, so that from St. Louis to New Orleans, East and West, one finds a firm position for the Episcopal Church not quite so apparent in the upper Middle West, and still less so in northern central parts. The varying degree of success is evident in the fact that St. Paul and Minneapolis have twice the proportion of membership that Chicago and Milwaukee have, and it is well known that Minnesota had very able men of strong evangelical views and liberal policies in Christian application whose like were not found in Illinois or Wisconsin. A Low Churchman without the aggressive missionary quality that makes an active High Churchman push his church is apt to have the same deteriorous effect that an aloof ritualism produces. Bishop Bedell, great souled preacher that he was, illustrated this in Ohio. He pursued the policy of never going into towns already fairly well served by other Protestants, with a result that some of the fairest and most prosperous towns under 10,000 inhabitants never knew the Episcopal Church, and so Cleveland ranks below Pittsburgh and Cincinnati as an Episcopalian stronghold. It is said that Wyoming is our strongest missionary state. If so, there is reason in the fact that it had Bishops who combined the zeal of High Churchmen and Evangelicals with the common sense of the more practical and less theoretical Broad Churchmen! Bishop Talbot is presumed to have been a good deal of a Churchman, but Owen Wister and Theodore Roosevelt saw the man beneath that, and so set him forward as a model of a true "sky pilot." Perhaps he had learned to smile when he presented Churchmanship as the Virginian made the cowboy do when he said a dubious thing!

All in all, this is my contention, that wherever you see the native breadth of the Episcopal Church, there you see it grow; and where it does not grow it is because it has not used this sort of liberal fundamentation, or else it has been beclouded by neighboring Church workers, who knew not of it or did not care for it. Herein lies a great lesson in developing the Kingdom of God.

reacts disastrously, not only on the defenders of the faith, but, unfortunately, on the faith itself.

I have reference just now specifically to the idea that the Virgin Birth was necessary on account of some suspicion of impurity connected with the human family per se.

One can not but be astonished at the quarters in which this argument is put forth.

Bishop Brent, in his "The Spiritual Value of the Virgin Birth," quotes some words from that "gruff old Bachelor," Michael Angelo, along this line, which I do not care to repeat. Undoubtedly, the Bishop is historically correct in portraying the thought of those ages. It is the idea itself that I am objecting to.

Coming down to recent times, we find that same idea in the writings of a man whom I am disposed to regard with feelings not only of the highest respect, but almost with reverence, Studdert-Kennedy.

It is strange to me that "Defenders of the Faith" along this line do not perceive how they are playing into the hands of the impugnors of the doctrine of the Church. These last use it to buttress the theory, for which there is not the slightest foundation, that the Birth stories of the two Gospels in which they are found, had their origin in this ascetic presupposition. And then they proceed to attack the Virgin Birth by defending the family as a divine institution. They even seem, sometimes, to gloat with satisfaction on the opportunity that is afforded them. I forbear to name names or even to make quotations. Evidently, in some cases, they fancy that they have destroyed the Church's doctrine when they have refuted the particular argument in question which has been adduced in its favor—a non sequitur, truly, but why give them the chance?

Let me illustrate by a parallel doctrine: the necessity of regeneration.

"Except a man be born anew (or, as some translate 'born from above'), he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

Now this, too, may be taken as a slur on the family as a divine institution, if one likes. Some practically do. They are quite well satisfied with the way in which they were born. This may be because of aristocratic connections, or, in some cases, to the view which is held concerning human nature in general. In both cases, the doctrine of regeneration is resisted.

Nevertheless, Our Lord's proposition is intended to be universal and to admit of no exceptions in the realm of human nature, as is proven by the reason He assigns for it—note that it is not only not an arbitrary assertion, but one that He implies, Nicodemus ought to have known anyhow without being told. "Art thou the teacher of Israel and understandest not these things?" Our Lord includes it, it seems to me, not among the things made known by revelation ("heavenly things"), but among the things "taking place on earth" and coming, therefore, within the domain of human observation and reflection. Be that as it may, Our Lord's reason for the fundamental and universal necessity of the rebirth is put into the proposition:

"What is born of the flesh is flesh; and what is born of the Spirit is spirit."

In other words, while the human family is not a vile and ungodly institution, and it is not true and was never meant that "we are conceived and born in sin," in the sense sometimes put into those words, yet it is true that there is such a thing as human nature, a kingdom of its own, and there is such a thing as heredity, by which every child that comes into the world is born into one of the kingdoms of the universe, which is not the highest, not the Kingdom of God par excellence, not "the Kingdom of God" in the sense in which Our Lord used the phrase when He took it over from John the Baptist and read His own meaning into it, a meaning which years afterwards the Apostle Paul gave as "Righteousness, peace and joy—in the Spirit."

Now I submit that this implies, rather distinctly affirms, a limitation upon human generation, but is in no wise a slander on human nature, or the institution of the family.

It is even so with the doctrine: "Conceived by the Holy Spirit; born of the Virgin Mary." It is not, in itself, a reflection or slander on the human family (unless wrongly stated), any more than the doctrine of regeneration is.

In fact, there are not wanting those who deny the Virgin

Birth, or, at least, set it on one side as either untrue or irrelevant, and yet can say of our Lord, as Drown says ("The Apostles' Creed To-day"):

"Jesus cannot be explained in human terms alone. He is not the mere product of human development. . . . If He be the mere product of the human race, then He is not the Redeemer and Saviour of the race. Christian faith sees in Jesus the new creation of God, the starting point of humanity. He is not only the Son of Man, but the Son of God."

Likewise, Lobstein, who holds to the human generation, declares with emphasis: "It is perfectly clear that the divine life, incarnate in Jesus Christ and imparted by Him to humanity, proceeds from a divine source; that it did not issue from the low depths of our sin-polluted earth, but that it is the emanation of a force, the ultimate cause and secret of which we do not discover in ourselves." And "We must conclude that the appearance of the initiator and dispenser of this divine life necessarily implies and presupposes a special manifestation of God, a creative and sanctifying intervention of His Spirit."

So substantially Keim and Schleirmacher.

Are these men slandering human nature?

I submit, then, to sum up, (1) That the Church's doctrine ought not to be made to rest upon any Manichaean or ascetic basis; and (2) That the Church's doctrine, while like the parallel doctrine of regeneration (vide Collect Christmas Day), it implies a limitation upon, it does not imply any slander on, human nature or cast any reflection upon the divineness of the family.

And what is true of the Church's doctrine is true also of the Scripture:

"Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the most High shall overshadow thee: WHEREFORE, that which is begotten shall be called holy, the Son of God."

THE RELIGION OF JESUS AND THE FAITH OF PAUL. Adolf Deissmann. George H. Doran Company. Pp. XII. 287.

Herein are the lectures delivered in the spring of 1923 at the Selly Oak Colleges in England by the Professor of Theology in the University of Berlin. They are admirable in qualities which the popular idea does not generally associate with German theology: they are luminous in style, reverently constructive in spirit, as well as careful in scholarship—which one does expect of the Germans. The first half of the book is entitled "Communion with God in the Experience of Jesus," and the second part is "Communion with Christ in the Experience of Paul." The whole book is untechnical enough to be read with devotional profit by the general reader, and yet is fertile enough in deep suggestion to be made the basis for study and preaching by men who would interpret Christianity to their people.

PERSONAL RELIGION AND THE LIFE OF DEVOTION. W. R. Inge, Dean of St. Paul's. Pp. 96. Longman's Green and Company. $1.10.

This little book by the Dean of St. Paul's in London, with an introduction by the Bishop of London, can be warmly commended to all who are seeking inspiring reading for this Lent. It contains chapters entitled "The Hill of the Lord," "The Soul's Thirst," "Faith," "Hope," "Joy," "Self-Consecration" and "The World." Then best of all is the final chapter entitled "Bereavement," in which Dean Inge expresses, out of the depths of his own experience, the sorrow and the comfort of God in the death of the exquisite little daughter whose picture forms the frontispiece of the book. This one chapter alone would make the book something to be treasured.

THE MAN HIMSELF. By Rollin Lynde Hartt. Doubleday Page and Company. Pp. VII. 291. $2.50.

An exasperating book, the chief merit of which may be that of a blister, which underneath its own disagreeableness does have the virtue of summoning up the healthy blood to the point where its irritation is applied. Mr. Hartt has apparently set out to capture the attention of his readers by ideas and phrases deliberately intended to be as subversive of usual thought as possible. His favorite name for Jesus is the complacently patronizing phrase "The young Rabbi," and he specially delights in calling the prophets "dervishes." There are some themes in his book which are positively helpful, especially his emphasis upon the revelation by Jesus of religion as an interior experience; but the book as a whole is so marred by a flippant journalistic sensationalism that any one who has instinctive reverence will need a patient temper to read it through.

CYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGIOUS ANECDOTES. By James Gilchrist Lawson. Pp. 523. Fleming H. Revell Company. $3.50.

In this large volume the author has gathered a number of very brief anecdotes, verses, and other illustrative material, and grouped them under the themes with which those who are seeking to convey religious messages will be concerned. The use of books of this kind has the danger of tempting a speaker or writer to compose a production made up of patchwork from other men's ideas, rather than as a living growth out of his own belief. But if used cautiously the book will also have value in suggesting the fact that a religious message, to be telling, must have that homeliness and directness which most of the selections in this book very helpfully represent.

MY FORTY YEARS IN NEW YORK. By Charles H. Parkhurst. The MacMillan Company. Pp. XII. 256.

This is a book which has the tantalizing effect of disappointing the reader through its very excellencies. Looking at its title one would suppose that he would read here a reasonably inclusive account of the remarkable ministry of Dr. Parkhurst in New York, in the course of which he achieved so conspicuous a leadership in community moral reform. But as a matter of fact, instead of an autobiography, we find only the fragmentary material out of which an autobiography has been begun. In the brief space of one hundred and forty-nine pages Dr. Parkhurst writes all that he has told us of the actual events of his life and ministry, and the rest of the book is made up of "Reflections" upon various religious themes. The one chapter entitled "Successful Assault Upon the Tammany Interest," is full, both of historical value and of homiletic interest, and it leaves one wishing that Dr. Parkhurst had written the whole story of his ministry in a fashion justly proportioned to this one chapter.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

LEAGUE CATALYSTS.

THOSE of you who have read Dr. Edwin A. Slosson's thrillingly interesting book, "Creative Chemistry," may recall in the early pages the story of the search for nitrogen in some available form, and the use of uranium in this new process. This rare metal, "which has the peculiar property of helping along a reaction while seeming to take no part in it, is called a catalyst." The analogy which Dr. Slosson uses is thus stated. "The action of a catalyst is rather mysterious, and whenever we have a mystery we need an analogy. We may then compare the catalyst to what is known as 'a good mixer' in society. You know the sort of man I mean. He may not be brilliant or especially talkative, but somehow there is always 'something doing' at a picnic or house-party when he is along. The tactful hostess, the salon leader, is a social catalyst. The trouble with catalysts, either human or metallic, is that they are rare and that sometimes they get sulky and won't work if the ingredients they are supposed to mix are unsuitable." Perhaps this casual interpolation may help to answer the question that comes up at every Conference, and which comes to my desk each month. The young people in our Congregation do not seem to mingle and lack congeniality. How can this be regulated? Remembering the warning about metallic catalysts, we cannot ask the impossible. But the refuge of indolence and the ultimate haven of snobbishness is to rest in a council of despair. Let us assume at the beginning that the Young People's Service League is an inclusive organization, for if it is not, it has little or no place in the Church's life. The Cotillion Club, the Assembly, the Greek Letter Society, and all similar organizations base their appeal largely on their exclusiveness. But that term and that notion has no place in a Church whose Master is the Lord Jesus Christ. The League must be available to all of the boys and girls of the Parish. The Parish, to a real degree, is the Community. If we are ever to correct the insularity with which the Church has been justly charged in the past, we must correct it once and for all in the adolescent age. Under the roof of the Church and Parish House, and in the life of organizations which are definitely fostered by the Church, social snobbishness can have no place. This is stated in dogmatic form, for it is a field in which we are glad of an opportunity to straddle our heart's convictions.

The next vital question is eminently practical. Granted the desire of the young people to mingle congenially, how is this to be accomplished? Now enter your social catalysts. Sometimes the counselors have this unique gift. I have in mind a Bishop, two clergymen, and two consecrated young women, who have been singularly successful at summer conferences and in the life of their Leagues and Fellowships, in this particular regard. Often the gift is possessed to an unusual degree by members of the League. Those who show any special talent in this regard should be members of the Hospitality Committee. Often the failure to commit this definite responsibility to a qualified group is the basis of the very situation complained of. If these human catalysts are not used, cliques are the inevitable result, and the shy, embarrassed, self-conscious type never find themselves or make any real contribution to the League's life. Where this difficulty is felt most, the chances are that the social has eclipsed the religious life of the League and that entertainments are projected which invite catastrophe, because the League is not prepared for the vigorous familiarity which they involve. There are types of mass play in which this difficulty can be easily avoided and the League does not need for its successful life the social emphasis that obtains in so many of the Protestant Communions. Whether for weal or woe, our young people almost never belong to those whose social opportunities are circumscribed or curtailed. Only too frequently it is the individual and corporate social life of our young people which offers the greatest obstacle to the League's successful efforts.

Too frequently this whole question is not dealt with frankly, but is a matter of whispered communication between the privileged few who attempt to define very sharply the limits of their fraternization. Nothing could be more helpful than for regional conferences of the young people, without any suggestion from counselor or clergy, to talk this matter over with vigorous frankness, and after they have seen and felt what is right, to set themselves to the fulfillment of their task, come what may. As old Cato was wont to end every speech with the phrase "Carthago delenda est," so I conclude: the Leagues and Fellowships must correct in the adolescent age the sins and shortcomings of adult communicant membership. This is fundamental.

Young People's Societies Hold Their Own Convention.

The Leader, for March, gives us the following story:

The Young People's Society of the Diocese of Southern Ohio has held its first convention. Practically all of the speeches were made by the young people themselves, and, with the exception of the program which was formulated by the Rev. Maurice Clarke, Executive Secretary for Religious Education in the Diocese, they also made all plans for the convention and saw to it that things went through as scheduled.

About one hundred and forty delegates representing fourteen member societies and five parish societies not at present connected with the diocesan organization attended the two-day convention.

The program began with a reception-dance as the opening event and included a banquet and other occasions for general good fellowship and entertainment as well as the more serious business of meetings, addresses and frank discussion.

The convention lasted from Friday night until Sunday noon. It closed with a service of Holy Communion and address.

Addresses made by three of the young people on "What the Society Has Meant to Us," developed some very interesting facts. One of the speakers, a member of St. John's, Worthington, said that the Young People's Society had kept together the young people of the parish and interested them in the work of the church for nearly a year while the parish has been without the guidance of a resident rector. The speaker from St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, expressed gratitude to the Society, not only for the occasions it provided for fellowship, but for the opportunity it gave for talking out his difficulties with young people of his own age. The third speaker, representing the Church of the Epiphany, Cincinnati, found that the Society had been of great educational value to the members and not only to them, but, on his own confession, to the rector of the Parish as well.

Mr. Clarke made a short address on the chart he had prepared illustrating the growth of the Society in the Diocese. The chart showed twenty-eight existing organizations and forty parishes without an organization at the present time. In the discussion which followed on "What can we do to promote the work of the Society in our Diocese?" it was suggested that conferences of the clergy be held and that teams of young people be sent on request into parishes where no society exists.

Miss Dorothy Mayer, a member of the Advisory Board and an officer of the Society of Epiphany Parish, introduced a discussion on the advisability of diocesan objectives. She offered the following suggestions:

A scholarship fund to be placed at the disposal of Bishop Reese.

Gifts for missions.

Scholarships for the summer conference at Gambier.

There was a difference of opinion as to the advisability of assuming any diocesan objectives. Some thought it unwise to bring anything of a financial character into the life of the organization, others believed that the assuming of diocesan objectives would be helpful in developing a diocesan consciousness as well as offering a means of expressing religious interest and enthusiasm. It was finally decided that a quota of $250 be set for the diocese as a whole, to be given to Bishop Reese for whatever kind of scholarship was most needed. It was understood that no assessment or apportionment to individual organizations should be made, but that subscriptions to the fund would be purely voluntary.

At a later session, Bishop Reese spoke on "Responses to the Call of Life Service in the Diocese of Southern Ohio," telling many interesting stories of young people who have gone from the diocese into Alaska, China, Japan and the Philippines in the Church's service.

Mr. A. P. Roe, of Bexley Theological Seminary, made an address in which he stressed the many opportunities for service found in the ministry. Deaconess Elizabeth Fracker, of Christ Church, Dayton, spoke on vocations for girls in the Church.

The convention ended with the celebration of a corporate communion at the regular Sunday morning service. Mr. McKechnie, of Japan, who was to have been the speaker at this service, was unable to be there. Dr. Edward Eubanks, Professor of Sociology in the University of Cincinnati, spoke on "The Quest of Life." The address in most impressive fashion led up to the idea that fulness of life can be found only in consecration of oneself in service for others.

Those who attended the convention felt that it had been a great privilege and an experience which should be made an annual event. It was therefore voted that an annual convention solely for the Young People should be held otherwise than at Gambier during the meeting of the summer conference.

Program.

March 23—Third Sunday in Lent.

Topic: The Church in Foreign Parts.

On a large outline map of the world mark with colored pins the places where our Church is working.

1. Bible Reading, Acts 16:6-12, The Macedonian Call.
2. Prayer:—

Almighty and Everlasting God, Who dost govern all things in Heaven and Earth; Mercifully hear the prayers of Thy people, strengthen the hands of Thy workers in foreign parts, let the influence of their lives, and earnestness of their prayers advance the coming of Thy Kingdom in all the world; and crown their efforts with the supreme blessing of peace and understanding among all nations; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

3. Papers:—

The Nippon Sei Ko Kwai in Japan.
The Work of St. John's University, Shanghai, China.
The Chief Need of Liberia Today.

4. Open Forum:—

Call the roll of missionaries from your own diocese.
Discuss their work and fields.

5. Hymn, "O Zion Haste."

6. Recitation of League Rules.

7. Sentence Prayers.

8. Benediction.

The New Presiding Bishop of the Church

With the death of Bishop Garrett, the Right Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., LL.D., Bishop of Bethlehem, automatically became the presiding bishop, by reason of seniority of consecration. In age Bishop Talbot is younger than either of his predecessors, being but seventy-five, and is noted for his activity, having been able until this year to perform the duties of his large diocese without the aid of a coadjutor.

The new Presiding Bishop was born in Fayette, Mo., October 9, 1848, and belongs therefore to that select group of our episcopacy that has been born west of the Mississippi River. He is the first presiding Bishop that was born in this district, and perhaps this marks a significant period in the history of the American Church.

Bishop Talbot is a graduate of Dartmouth College, from which he received the degrees of A. B. and A. M. and later been the chairman of the Joint Commission of the General Convention on Christian Unity, and has frequently written and preached on that subject. Besides the D. D. from Dartmouth, the General Theological Seminary conferred on him the degree of S. T. D. and the University of Missouri the degree of LL.D.

CHURCH WILL REBUILD IN JAPAN.

National Council Takes Steps to Restore Earthquake Devastation.

The National Council of the Episcopal Church on February 20 announced its purpose not only to rebuild its property in Japan destroyed by the September earthquake, but in addition to extend its work there in token of its faith in Japan and the Japanese people. With the additional work planned, the sum of $3,000,000 will be needed; and the Council unanimously pledged the Church to create this fund. Among the properties to be restored, all located in Tokyo, are St. Luke's Hospital, St. Paul's Middle School, St. Margaret's School for Girls, St. Paul's University and six churches, together with residences and offices for the bishops and staff.

The new work which will be inaugurated will comprise a series of primary schools through which, and the existing institutions, the Church will be able to conduct in Japan a complete educational system from kindergarten to university.

The following statement, addressed to the membership of the Episcopal Church, embodies the action of the Council:

The Church was thrilled by Bishop McKim's brave message after the earthquake in Japan last September, "All gone but faith in God," and the National Council proudly recalls the prompt and generous action of our people in providing emergency relief for the Japanese Church.

Knowing that temporary relief must be followed by careful reconstruction, the Council sent its President and the Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions to Japan to study the facts, confer with leaders and report a program.

At its meeting on February 20 the Council received the report of Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood, containing a complete plan for reconstruction, based upon personal investigation and conferences with clergy and leaders of the Japanese Church, with Dr. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital, with architects and building experts and with Japanese statesmen such as Viscounts Goto and Shibusawa.

Transcending the need for physical restoration, they report that following the disaster there has developed the greatest opportunity ever presented for making Christ known to Japan. In this we must play our part and reap the rich fruitage of the consecrated effort of more than fifty years.

They declare the experience and conviction of the leaders of the Japanese Church to be that for successful evangelistic effort it is absolutely essential that in addition to churches there be both a complete and balanced system of education for the development of Christian leaders and medical work as a practical demonstration of Christianity.

The Council, at its meeting, had the benefit of the advice of Bishop McKim, Bishop Reifsnider and Bishop Tucker, who unqualifiedly endorsed the report of Bishop Gailor and Dr. Wood, and the convictions upon which its recommendations were based.

The estimated cost of the restoration of buildings and equipment and for necessary expansion to make the work complete and efficient is $3,000,000.

The Council has appointed a committee to lay the facts before the Church, confident that the Church, in facing this larger task of permanent reconstruction, will exhibit the same splendid spirit of devotion and sacrifice that responded so effectively to the emergency appeal. "Let us rise up and build."

The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., LL.D.

was honored with the Doctor of Divinity. Later he attended the General Theological Seminary, and graduated there in 1873. Bishop Robertson, of Missouri, ordained him both deacon and priest, and his first charge was as rector of St. James Church, Macon, Missouri, where he also established some educational work that grew into St. James' Military Academy. In 1887 the House of Bishops selected him for the difficult missionary duties as Bishop of Wyoming and Idaho.

Wyoming was at that time the real pioneer, frontier State of the country, and the young Bishop found all the thrills that have been pictured in the wild west stories. He was so successful and popular with the people of the plains that Owen Wister has pictured him in his great novel, "The Virginian," in a heroic role. Bishop Talbot has himself pictured for us some of his early adventures in the witty and thrilling story of his work published in 1907, "My People of the Plains."

In 1898 Bishop Talbot was elected Bishop of Central Pennsylvania, which, at that time, included the present diocese of Harrisburg. For more than twenty-five years he has been the chief pastor of this important field and has given the Church the benefit of his experiences in his book, "A Bishop Among His Flock." He has also found time to show literary talent in another field, publishing in 1915 the interesting story "Tim: The Autobiography of a Dog."

The chief interest of Bishop Talbot seems to have been along the line of Church unity. For many years he has

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

THERE IS NOTHING NEW IN DISAGREEMENT.

It was in a butcher shop, but as usual in these days the topic of conversation was religion. On this occasion, however, it was relative to a particular church. The man behind the counter belonged to one of those primitive sects, which often display great zeal and enthusiasm, and this particular group had just completed a very handsome new church, about the merits of which he was expatiating to his customer. She, a more sophisticated person, and in touch with the thought of the day, remarked:

"I suppose, of course, you have modernists and fundamentalists with us for lo! these many years.

He evidently was somewhat nonplussed, but, after thinking a moment, decided not to be outdone, and replied:

"Oh, yes, we had them all in there before we moved into our new church."

Unwittingly he spoke more truth than he knew, for indeed have we not had both the modernists and the fundamentalists with us for lo these many years.

We shall find the first traces of disagreement in the New Testament, when that great innovator, St. Paul, undertook to bring people into the Christian Church without passing them through the preliminary stage of Judaism. The possibility of becoming a follower of the Saviour without first becoming a follower of Moses, in every exacting detail, was a new practice which amounted to the rankest heresy, and required a General Convention to be held at Jerusalem, and "much disputation" before it was allowed.

Another controversy the traces of which also exist in the New Testament was the theory that Our Saviour did not bear a human body at all, but was entirely Divine. St. John refers to this in the second and third verses of the fourth chapter of his first Epistle, when he says:

"Hereby know ye the Spirit of God. Every Spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

"And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that the spirit of Antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."

Then some three hundred or so years later St. Jerome, a great scholar and theologian, translated the Scriptures into the Latin language, and, instead of being received with joy, his work was condemned on all sides, and it was stated that he was trying to set forth a New Bible with strange doctrines. It took nearly a thousand years for this great work to receive proper recognition in the Church.

Again some centuries later another good Churchman undertook to set forth the extraordinary teaching that the sun was the centre of the universe, and that this earth and other planets revolved around it. This theory, which is now known as the Coperniscam Theory, and which is now universally accepted, was branded rank heresy, and its originator persecuted and excommunicated from the church.

So it has gone all through the ages. There never has been a time when every one thought alike within the Christian Church, and there probably never will be such a time.

The thing for us to do is to take St. Paul's advice to the Thessalonians into our hearts and lives, and "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good," remembering that there are many ways of finding God, and many paths that lead into His Presence, respecting and loving all, and remembering that each one in his quest for truth, must be guided by his own conscience.

YIELD NOT TO TEMPTATION.

The methods which the Devil adopts are varied and intricate. For instance a small card lying on your doorstep entitled "A Word to Non-borrowers" may seem quite harmless, but if its enticing invitation that you can borrow money so cheap is heeded it will lead the unfortunate small borrower into toils from which he will find it exceedingly difficult to extricate himself. A glance at the schedule of "interest cost" will show that on a loan of $40 the interest rate is $3.50 for four months, which is 25 per cent a year. On the same basis, and from the same schedule we see that on a loan of $200 the borrower has to pay $17.50 interest for four months, which would amount to $52.50 in a year, and would represent an interest rate of more than 25 per cent, yet this is what is called "borrowing money so cheap," and is accompanied by a pressing invitation that would make it appear that the lender was doing the borrower a great favor.

On this basis a person with no capital whatever, and as little principal, could borrow money at a bank at 6 per cent and re-lend it so as to make a clear profit of almost 20 per cent. It is one of the pitiful facts of life, however, that many poor people are obliged to avail themselves of this form of usury.

BETTER BABIES.

At last as much attention is being given to the raising of people as has been bestowed by the government on the raising of pigs, cows and horses for many years.

The Children's Bureau of Washington issues a series of nine letters on the Hygiene of Maternity and Infancy. These letters may be had by any person in the United States who will take the trouble to address a letter to The Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

In the State of Minnesota a correspondence study course on this same subject has been inaugurated by the State University acting through the State Board of Health.

This same plan has been simplified by the Bureau of Child Welfare of the State Board of Health of Virginia, which has arranged a correspondence for mothers, and prospective mothers, which is adapted to persons of limited education, the phraseology being of the simplest style. Although this is the plan of the Virginia State Board of Health, persons from other states are given the benefit of this course free of charge. The following is a synopsis of the lessons, and what is necessary to take advantage of them:

Part I.

- Lesson 1.—Expecting the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 2.—Preparing for parenthood.
- Lesson 3.—Helping to develop a Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 4.—Putting your house in order for the arrival of the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 5.—Arrival of the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 6.—The first days of the Healthy Baby.

Part II.

- Lesson 1.—The home of the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 2.—How to feed the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 3.—Growth of the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 4.—Guarding the Healthy Baby against accidents and illness.
- Lesson 5.—Summer care of the Healthy Baby.
- Lesson 6.—Training the Healthy Baby in habits and character.

How to Enroll.—(1) Write to the Director of Correspondence Course for Mothers, State Board of Health, Richmond, Virginia, for application card. (2) Fill out the card, being careful to answer all of the questions. (3) Mail the application card to Director of Correspondence Course for Mothers, State Board of Health, Richmond, Virginia.

Method of Instruction.—The course may be taken individually or in groups. In either case, after the lesson has been carefully studied, answers to the questions are to be written on good paper, preferably with ink; together with any point that is not entirely clear, and sent to the Director of Correspondence Course for Mothers, State Board of Health, Richmond, Virginia.

The Director will read all papers with care, and will make such suggestions as may be helpful in gaining a clearer conception of the subject. The paper will then be returned accompanied by the next lesson.

The course, which is in two parts of six lessons each, may be completed within twelve weeks and should be completed within six months from the date of enrollment, unless there is, in the judgment of the Director, sufficient reason for extending the time.

After satisfactory answers to all of the questions have been sent in, a certificate will be issued to the student by the State Board of Health. Either part may be taken singly, but no certificate will be given unless both parts are completed.

If the group method is used, those taking the course should meet at regular periods and together study and discuss each lesson, then some one member (chosen by the group), acting as secretary, should send in the answers. On recommendation of this secretary, certificates will be issued to each member of her group who has attended not less than ten periods of study and who has taken an active part in the discussions.

A physician from the Bureau of Child Welfare of the State Board of Health will be available upon request to visit any group free of charge, for conferences in regard to the course. During this visit arrangements may be made for her to hold clinics for the examination of well babies and children of pre-school age.

Intercession for the Church.

A day of Intercession for the whole work of the Church is planned this year, at last, for March 26. The President of the Council has issued a Bidding Prayer for use on that day and at other times, in public or private prayer. This is sent to the bishops and clergy early in March and additional copies are to be available on request, as many people like them for individual use.

It is hoped that in an increasing number of parishes the whole Day may be observed, and that in every parish some use may be made of the opportunity thus presented for corporate prayer, or that groups of parishes may combine in their observance.

In Church Missions House the hours from nine to four are divided into alternate periods of intercession and meditation led by city clergy, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion. The work of the Church overseas and at home, in education, in social service, among Latin-American countries, among foreign-born Americans, the work carried on by the Woman's Auxiliary, and the relation of Church and nation, are subjects of intercession.

Sewanee News.

A scholarship of $10,000 in memory of the Rt. Rev. Troy Beatty, D. D., has been completed by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Tennessee. This scholarship is to aid students for the ministry from the Diocese of Tennessee.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Tennessee have taken a very beneficial interest in the Quintard Chair of Dogmatic Theology, started by a group of theological students under the leadership of Bishop Manning, while he was rector of Christ Church, Nashville. The ladies have requested that they be allowed to assist in raising the necessary amount to endow the Chair. This matter was brought up at the recent Diocesan Convention at Clarks-ville, and was referred to the Bishop and Council of the Diocese.

During the recent meeting of the Board of Regents, Vice-Chancellor Finney announced a gift of $50,000 for the establishment of an endowed chair, which is to be known as the Francis S. Houghteling Chair of American History. This is the second gift given to the University in memory of Mr. Houghteling, who was a student at the University of the South, graduating in 1904.

TWO APPEALS FROM CUBA.

Bishop Hulse writes:

We could use several hundred hymnals in English at Baragua and elsewhere. We prefer the old hymnal, though beggars must not be choosers. If churches are discarding the old hymnal and putting in new ones, we will be glad to take the old ones, if they are not too worn.

We will also need hymnals with music.

The best way to send them is to wrap them in packages of half a dozen and send them by mail; mark them second hand books. We have received a number that way.

We need a number of organs; second hand organs if they are in good shape would be acceptable. They could be packed and shipped here more cheaply than we could buy them on the spot. Organs for places in the province of Camaguey can be sent to Mr. McCarthy via the port of Nuevitas, that would be cheaper than sending them via Havana. Organs down here are worth from $120 up. The cheaper ones are the small portable ones, worth $50 in the States!

If any one wishes to send hymnals direct in small packages, they should be addressed to,

The Rt. Rev. H. R. Hulse, D. D., Calle Quince Esq. a Ocho,
Havana, Cuba.

Or, if they will send them to Bishop Hulse, care of the Rev. A. R. Gray, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, the books will be forwarded.

For further information regarding the need of organs in Camaguey, Cuba, please address the Rev. A. R. Gray, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

son, and their friends, and all the members of the school, both faculty and students, were present at the inspiring service.

Annual Meeting of the Joint Diocesan Lesson Board.

The Joint Diocesan Lesson Board met at the Church House, Philadelphia, on Tuesday and Wednesday, February 5 and 6. Delegates were present from New Jersey, Washington, East Carolina, Harrisburg, Bethlehem, New York, Maryland and Pennsylvania. Communications were received from many other members regretting their inability to be present and suggesting points for discussion.

Officers were elected for the ensuing years as follows: President, the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D.; vice-president, Mr. George W. Jacobs; corresponding secretary and treasurer, the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, D. D.; recording secretary, the Rev. John R. Huggins. The following were elected as chairmen of the various departmental committees: Beginners', the Rev. Chas. S. Lewis, B. D.; Primary, the Rev. A. E. Clattenburg; Junior, the Rev. Cornelius S. Abbott; Senior, the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, D. D.; Bible Class, the Rev. George H. Toop, D. D.; Home Department, the Rev. Elliston Perot.

Schedules were adopted for the Junior Department, Winter Course 1924-1925, "What We Should Believe and Do as Taught in the Church Catechism," and the Junior Department, Summer Course, 1925, "Our Lord Jesus Christ and His Friends," and for the Senior Department, Winter Course, 1924-1925, "Life as Lived and Taught by Jesus Christ."

A number of women experienced in the work of the Beginners' and Primary Departments were appointed as auxiliary members to advise with these Departmental Committees looking to a betterment, if possible, of these schedules.

A special committee, composed of Canon Charles S. Lewis, of New Jersey; the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, D. D., of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Cornelius S. Abbott, of Washington; the Rev. Chas. B. Ackley, of New York, and Mr. Geo. W. Jacobs, of Pennsylvania, was appointed to consider the preparation of manuals to be published in permanent form for the use of Week-Day Church Schools.

The Primary Cycle was extended from three to four years by the addition of a course on "The Christian Child and God's other Children in His World Today."

The meeting was indeed an important one and the Board believes that the new schedules prepared for the coming year are far superior to those presented before. The Prospectus showing these schedules will be prepared by the publishers, George W. Jacobs & Company, 1628 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., and it will be ready for mailing about June 1. This may be had upon request with a free set of samples of the entire "American Church Series."

The Church Congress.

The Program for the Jubilee meeting of the Church Congress to be held in Boston, April 29 to May 2, 1924, is as follows:

Memorial Pulpit For St. John's, Mathews.

Those who have so kindly contributed to the pulpit in memory of the late Rev. John Roberts Mathews will be glad to learn that the contract has been given out and it is to be placed in St. John's Church, Mathews, for use on Easter Day.

The promoters thank those who gave—not only for their contributions, which made it possible to carry out the plan—but also for their faith in those who have the work in charge.

Only about twenty dollars of the needed sum remains unprovided for, so if those who knew and loved him and have not already given will make this up, this memorial will be completed. Contributions, large or small, will receive grateful acknowledgment.

Send to Mrs. Giles B. Cooke, President St. John's Guild, Mathews, Va.

Richmond Convocation.

A meeting of the Convocation of Richmond will be held at St. James' Church, Ashland, May 6 and 7. The meeting will begin with an evening service on May 6, and will end with a service at the same hour on the following day. All the clergy of this convocation are requested to reserve the time necessary for attendance at this meeting.

Admission Service of Girls' Friendly Society.

On March 2, in Pohick Church, was held an impressive admission service of the Girls' Friendly Society. Ten young girls and two associates who had passed the period of probation came together before the altar, made their promises and vows and received from their Chaplain, who is also their rector, their badges and heard from him the charge, "See that what you have promised with your lips you perform in your life." Four of those admitted were from Olivet Church, and six from Pohick Church.

These girls, who are being trained in church loyalty and church work by their faithful and enthusiastic president, Mrs. A. Campbell Tucker, will undoubtedly add much to the usefulness and increase the spiritual growth of the churches with which they are associated. After the admission service the Rev. A. Campbell Tucker, preached a sermon on the motto or text of the Society, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ. There are several other probationers, who were unable to fulfil the requirements for full membership, who, it is hoped will be admitted in the near future.

The Bishop's Visit to St. George's Church, Fredericksburg.

On Sunday morning, March 2, Bishop Brown visited St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector, and confirmed a class of twenty-five persons.

A congregation which tested the capacity of Old St. George's Church was present to receive the inspiration for and to hear the call to a better service in the work of the Master, which such a service must necessarily give.

A splendid offering for the Bishop's Emergency Fund was taken, amounting to sixty-five dollars.

Study Class Organized.

A Study Class for the leaders of the Church School Service League of the Diocese of Washington was organized and started on Monday evening, March 10, in Epiphany Parish Hall, under the direction of Miss Emma Abbott, the director of the Church School Service League and formerly the director of the Junior Auxiliary in Washington. This organization has been remarkably effective in Washington since the change into a broader field of work was made and a large number of parishes are represented. The object of the Study Class is to instruct the leaders in the details of the work and to provide a stimulus for an increased activity in the several branches of the League.

Service for Prisoners.

The choir of Christ Church, Georgetown attended the service at the District jail on Sunday afternoon, March 9, and assisted in the music of the occasion by singing two anthems and some of the hymns. The service was conducted by the Rev. George Worthington Dow, Chaplain of the Episcopal City Missions of the Diocese of Washington and was impressive and helpful to the visitors as well as to the prisoners.

Missionary Mass Meeting.

"A meeting of the women of all the churches in Washington, without regard to the particular denomination, was held at Epiphany Church on Friday morning and afternoon, March 7. This meeting was in the nature of a revival of missionary zeal and the spiritual life of the Church and was addressed in a stirring and forceful way at the morning session by Bishop Freeman. The afternoon session was given over to a program in the interest of the missions of the church. The meetings were largely attended by women of all the churches.

The monthly coaching class for Sunday-school teachers, under the direction of the diocesan board of religious education, was held on March 9, at All Souls' Church at 6:30 o'clock. These classes have proven of great value and are being well attended. A light supper is served at 6:30, after which classes are organized for the several courses in the Christian Nurture Series. Some of the clergy and experienced trained teachers, conduct these classes which are designed to supplement the study of the teacher and to be inspirational and instructive.

Crowds Attend Trinity's Lenten Services.

Trinity Church began its Lenten noon day meetings with crowds filling pews, aisles and even sidewalks. The controversies over theology, and the disclosures at Washington, are held to have stirred public interest. Bishop Manning was the Ash Wednesday preacher, and he issued a call to faith. He regarded as a first essential the bringing together of God and men. Then he said:

"There are three things that will help you to do this. First, your faithfulness and sincerity in prayer. Prayer is the open door between us and Jesus Christ, the act by which we put ourselves into direct contact and touch with Him. Second, your faithfulness and regularity in worship. We cannot keep in living touch with Jesus Christ without worship. In worship the soul turns not earthward or manward, but Godward. It is this that we need and must have if the soul is to be its true self. Third, your faithful and revered use of the sacraments."

Clergy Issue Joint Statement.

Eleven Church clergy of New York and New Jersey have joined in a statement which some rectors are sending to their communicants. The statement affirms belief in the Creeds; asks the largest freedom for the right of scholars to inquire, to gain knowledge not gained heretofore; and urges that all seek diligently and patiently to explain to others, and especially to the laity, the reasonableness of the faith, its authority, its universalism. The statement makes this point:

"It cannot be too strongly insisted that faith is not a mere act of the intellect. It must touch the heart and move the will if it is to be saving faith. The Creed held coldly as a series of abstract propositions rigidly adhered to by the mind can never be of value in the life of the spirit. Its value depends upon the extent to which it is made the basis of our daily living and the ladder upon which we climb toward closer union with God. The Creed must ever be translating itself into action and devotion.

Signers are the Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the Dean of the General Seminary, Canon Jones, of the Cathedral, the Rev. Dr. Selden P. Delaney, associate rector of St. Mary the Virgin, Secretary Gilbert of the Social Service Commission, and the rectors of the following churches: Grace, St. James, Trinity, Holy Trinity and St. Thomas, New York; Christ Church, Short Hills, N. J.

Death of the Rev. A. D. Pell.

The Rev. Alfred Duane Pell is dead at the age of sixty. In many ways he was a most unusual man. Coming of the famous Pell family of New York, and wealthy far beyond most men, he reached middle life engaged in great part in the collection of rare art works. He volunteered as Lay Reader in the Seabury Society and helped to establish what is now Holy Nativity Parish, Bedford Park. Many meetings leading up to the Society, and later to the American Board of Applied Christianity, were held in his home, wherein discussions of Church work were mixed in with examination of rare art works. As lay reader, Mr. Pell determined to enter Holy Orders, and although never studying in any Seminary, passed a brilliant examination before New York diocesan examiners. He became rector of the Church of the Resurrection, and gave considerable sums to free it from debt, and repair its property. He was married to a daughter of an eminent Presbyterian divine, the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, famous in his day as Moderator and leader in many forms of Christian work.

Cincinnati Notes.

It has been announced that Mrs. W. P. Simpson of College Hill has made a gift of $25,000 to Grace Church in that beautiful Cincinnati suburb to be used in the construction of the new church, which will be erected there. The congregation is at present worshipping in the Parish Hall, which was erected when the old church was demolished. The Rev. George M. Clickner has been rector of the parish for many years.

Bishop Thurston, of Oklahoma, accompanied by his wife, made a visit to Cincinnati, speaking in several of the churches and also making an address before the Church Club. He was well received and his description of missionary work in the land of oil was very effective.

Bishop Reese held a pre-Lenten quiet day for the clergy of Cincinnati at the Cathedral. Twenty-one of the clergy were present.

Bishop Vincent has returned from a visit of several weeks at Ormond Beach, Fla.

The Lenten Noon-Day services at Keith's Theatre this year will be addressed by the following speakers:

March 5 to 7, the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, Executive Secretary of the Diocese.

March 11 to 14, the Rev. Samuel McComb, School of Theology, Cambridge.

March 18 to 21, the Rev. S. S. Marquis, St. Joseph's Church, Detroit.

March 25 to 28, the Rev. J. Howard Melish, Holy Trinity, Brooklyn.

April 1 to 4, the Rev. F. S. Fleming, Church of Atonement, Chicago.

April 8 to 11, the Rev. Wm. Scarlett, Dean of Christ Cathedral, St. Louis.

April 15 to 18, the Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese.

Charlotte Convocation.

Bishop E. A. Penick and Bishop Joseph Blunt Cheshire were both present at the recent meeting of the Convocation of Charlotte, held February 26-28, in High Point. Archdeacon W. H. Hardin and Archdeacon Morrison Bethea were also present, the former presiding at all sessions. This was one of the most helpful meetings of the convocation ever held and was characterized by special features in preparation for Lent. Special speakers were: The Rev. W. H. Wheeler, for Thompson Orphanage; the Rev. W. W. Way, for St. Mary's School; the Rev. A. S. Lawrence, for Chapel of the Cross, Chapel Hill; the Rev. R. E. Gribben, on the Nation-Wide Campaign; the Rev. Chas. Scovil, on Religious Education and Young People's Work; the Rev. J. L. Jackson, the Rev. I. Harding Hughes and others on Lenten activities; the Rev. Thos. F. Opie, on Publicity, and Bishop Penick, on Preparation for Lent; special sermons were delivered by the Rev. W. W. Way and the Rev. Bertram Brown, the Rev. H. N. Browne, rector of St. Mary's, where the convention was held, left nothing to be desired in the way of preparing for the comforts of his guests. The whole program was full of substance and spiritual refreshment and the business of convocation was shown to be in excellent shape, by reason of the fine business sense of Archdeacon Hardin, who has it in charge.

Thompson Orphanage.

Plans are on foot for an intensive campaign in the interest of a building fund for Thompson Orphanage, Charlotte. The Rev. W. H. Wheeler, superintendent, has issued a leaflet setting forth the needs of this useful institution, indicating laundry, dormitory, cottages, and administration building as among the most pressing necessities at present.

Laying of Cornerstone.

On Wednesday, February 20, the cornerstone of the new church at Chapel Hill, the seat of the University of North Carolina, was laid and much interest centered in the occasion. The sermon was delivered by the Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick. The Rev. A. F. Lawrence is the rector of the Church at Chapel Hill, a strategic and important center in the Church's life.

St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando.

The Year Book of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida, tells a story of evident progress that has been made at Orlando under the leadership of Dean C. Stanley Long. The communicant membership has increased twenty per cent. Attendance at the Church services has increased at least fifty per cent. In fact it is now impossible to accommodate the regular Sunday-morning congregations, which crowd the Cathedral to hear the inspiring sermons delivered by Dean Long. The assessments for both the Diocesan and General Fund for 1923 have been paid in full, and the Nation-Wide Campaign for 1924 was over subscribed to the extent of $1,093.

In St. Paul's Church, Waco, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector, there has recently been dedicated to the Glory of God and in loving memory of Andrew J. Dossett, a beautiful processional cross, the staff of which is of ebony. The cross is made of solid silver, and is a marvelously beautiful piece of furniture, and a fitting memorial of the sterling character of the soldier of the cross, whom it commemorates.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

The results of the Every Member Canvass in Trinity Church, Columbus and Christ Church, Macon, are greater than they have ever been before. These two parishes, with All Saints' Church, Atlanta, which pledged its Budget Allotment, are the honor churches among the larger parishes of the diocese for 1924. When the Executive Board of the Diocese met early in February to formulate its budget for 1924 they were forced to cut expenses in every way to stay within the limits set by the actual pledges from the N.-W. C. canvass.

Bishop Mikell holds noon-day services in Baltimore, Philadelphia and New Orleans during Lent this year. He has also been asked to preach the Commencement Sermon to the graduating class of the State Normal School at Athens on May 25.

The Rev. R. K. Smith, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Atlanta, has been granted a three months' rest by his vestry and is touring Europe at the present time. The Rev. G. W. Gasque, formerly rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Atlanta, is locum tenens at Epiphany until Mr. Smith's return. The Rev. H. R. Chase has taken over the work at the Holy Comforter, combining it with his thriving mission at College Park, and will continue to carry on the work at the Holy Comforter until some permanent arrangements can be made.

United Lenten Services are being held each Thursday evening in the Atlanta churches and the parishes of Macon have united in a Wednesday night service until Easter.

A Matron's Golf and Gymnasium Class has been organized with good results at the Church of the Epiphany, Atlanta.

The Rev. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, will deliver three lectures to the Alabama State College for Women during March.

A gift of $1,000 has been made to the rector and vestrymen of Christ Church, Macon, the interest, or principal if needed, is to be used to educate any boy from the parish who desires to study for the ministry.

Improvements in Church Buildings.

St. John's Church, Ashland, the Rev. P. C. Adams, rector, was lately put under a new roof at a cost of more than two thousand dollars. The parish is now planning to redecorate the interior, as the leaking roof has caused the walls to be sadly defaced. They will also repair the rectory, putting the whole property in good condition.

The Church of Faith, Mahanoy City, the Rev. Herbert E. Kneis, rector, looks like a new edifice. A comely dress of asbestos blocks or squares encloses it and the interior was painted.

St. Mary's Church, the Rev. F. C. Capozzi, rector, is placing new pews in the nave. Since it was built the congregation sat on a variety of chairs. Different churches and individuals were asked to donate a pew for this Italian mission. The response was immediate and generous, and the whole nave will have new and very good pews shortly.

Dinner and Reception Tendered Bishops

More than five hundred members of the eight parishes and missions of Reading, Douglassville, Birdsboro, Morgantown and Lebanon were present at a delightful dinner at The Berkshire tendered to Bishop Ethelbert Talbot and Bishop Coadjutor Frank W. Sterrett.

As originally planned the function was intended for Dr. Sterrett in honor of his first official visit to this end of the diocese since his consecration. After the arrangements were started the venerable Dr. Talbot became the Presiding Bishop of the Church, and the committee decided to make it a joint affair.

Mr. Ira W. Stratton was master of ceremonies, and, in addition to the addresses of the two Bishops, brief talks were made by Mrs. William du Hamel for St. Gabriel's, D. B. Heilman for St. Luke's, Reading; Paul Volker for St. Luke's, Lebanon; Thomas Smythe for St. Barnabas'; Harry E. Hart for St. Michael's; Charles H. Hunter, for Christ and Walter S. Frees for St. Mary's.

The Service of Dedication of the new All Saints' memorial organ was held in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, the Rev. Robert P. Kreidler, rector, on Friday evening, February 21. Following the service, which was conducted by the rector, a beautiful recital was held by Charles M. Courboin, Chevalier of the Order of the Crown of Belgium, one time organist of Antwerp Cathedral, Guest Soloist, Wanamaker Auditorium, New York City and Philadelphia, and organist, Hickory Street Presbyterian Church, Scranton.

The new organ has been erected in memory of the many dear and sainted dead, long connected with this parish, by those who in loving thought and devotion would beautify the worship of Almighty God, do honor to the Name of the blessed Saviour, and through a ministry of music render a large service to the community. It is modern in every respect.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

Dr. Jacob Brittingham Retires.

After thirty-five years of faithful service at St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, the Rev. Doctor Brittingham is retiring with the love and good wishes not only of the church people of St. Luke's Parish, but also with the respect and regard of the entire Diocese of West Virginia.

He was the first candidate for the ministry to go from that Diocese after its organization, and all who know him love him.

The Wheeling register carried the following editorial about him and his ministry, which speaks for itself:

"Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, surprised his congregation yesterday morning by announcing that it was his intention to retire from active church service.

"While completely astounded by this 'bolt from the blue,' the communicants of St. Luke's were greatly relieved when their spiritual guide and leader declared that in his retirement he would not completely sever his connections with the church, but would remain with those whom he had learned to love the rest of his days, desiring only to put the church work into the hands of a younger and more active man.

"Dr. Brittingham is one of the oldest of Wheeling's clergymen in point of service. For thirty-five years he has been the head of St. Luke's and during that long period he has seen the church grow from a mere handful of parishioners to a flourishing prosperous congregation, the credit for said development belonging almost entirely to the genial, kindly and most considerate gentleman who has watched over St. Luke's these many years.

Dr. Brittingham is the true personification of the shepherd. He has ever attended his 'flock' with the utmost care and devotion. Nothing was ever too much for him to attempt in the name of St. Luke's, for he took a delight in his work and his calling. Ever cheerful and good natured, Dr. Brittingham lent an atmosphere of love and sunshine wherever he went.

"Now that he is to take life a bit easier after so long and faithful a service in the name of God and humanity may his days be long in the land of his friends."

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop

The winter meeting of the Archdeaconry of Williamsport was held at Christ Church, Williamsport, the Rev. William Rshrdlucmfwpypaupuaahmrd Hiram R. Bennett, rector, on February 12. The morning session opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett was the celebrant. At the business meeting which followed, encouraging reports were received from the parishes and missions receiving assistance from diocesan funds. Special attention was given to the work at Epiphany Chapel, Halls Station, which has been reopened for services. The clergy were the guests of the Tuesday Lunch Club, at luncheon, and Bishop Darlington made a short address. Archdeacon Harold F. Schmaus presided at the business meetings, and there were twelve other clergy present.

A stimulus has been given to the building program at State College by the recent action of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese, whereby they decided to devote the fund expected from the next annual self-denial week to the St. Andrew's Priority. It is to be hoped that our Church students at State College will be furnished with a church building and plant worthy of the great traditions of the Episcopal Church. At present, they are worshipping in a basement, while all other religious bodies represented there have attractive edifices and parish houses.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney.

Death came suddenly to the Rev. George Sherwood Whitney, rector of St. Paul's, Augusta, on Saturday evening, March 1, in his study while talking to the Rev. J. A. Schaad, General Missioner of the National Field Department. Mr. Schaad was to open a Preaching Mission in Mr. Whitney's parish the next morning, and they were talking over plans for the Mission when the end came peacefully. Mr. Whitney had been a priest of the Diocese of Georgia for twenty-six years, the first nine years he was at St. Thomas', Thomasville, and the past seventeen years he has been the beloved rector of St. Paul's Church. At the time of his death he was president of the Standing Committee; chairman of the Committee on Constitution and Canons; one of the Examining Chaplains; Editor of the Diocesan Paper; and a member of the Department of Publicity and the Nation-Wide Campaign. Mr. Whitney was several times a Deputy to the General Convention; was a member of the Committee on Canons of the House of Deputies, and was a member of the Commission on the Ministry of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council. He was born in Delafield, Wis., and received his training for the ministry at the Western Theological Seminary. He was ordained deacon in 1892; and was advanced to the priesthood in 1893 and received the degree of B. A. from Racine College. His first charge was at Holy Trinity, Chicago, in 1892, and following this he was in charge of St. Paul's, Savanna, Ill., from 1893 to 1897, when he went to Thomasville, Va.

The funeral service was conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese in Mr. Whitney's parish church, Monday afternoon, March 3, and the interment took place the next day in Thomasville, the Bishop accompanying the body to its last resting place. Mr. Whitney's death has brought a great loss to the Diocese as well as to his parish. He was a man of genial temperament, of loveable nature and revered by the citizens of Augusta and especially by members of other communions in that city.

Almighty God, Who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves; keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from the evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Why Strive We So?

Jesse Joutite.

All our hopes and all our fears,
All our foolish idle tears,
All the struggles of the years
Will cease to matter, then.

All the shadow all the sun,
The greater race we would have run,
All the things left yet undone
Will cease to matter, then.

All the goods we sold or bought,
All our gain with labor fraught,
Earthly goals we striving sought
Will cease to matter, then.

All the pinnacles of fame,
All the glamour of a name,
All renown that we could claim
Will cease to matter, then.

For when we reach that Heavenly place
And, by the mercy of His Grace,
Behold our Master face to face,
Naught else shall matter then.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

How Is Christ David's Son?

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

There is a gentle problem in Jewish Theology avoided by the Doctors of Our Lord's time. Finding a man who was hostile, who claimed to be the Messiah, and who claimed to be Divine. They fought Him because of His hostility and used His claim of Divinity as a weapon against Him. Now Our Lord introduced a doubt into their minds; a gagging, horrifying, suffocating doubt. He said:

"What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is He?"

"The Son of David."

"How, then, does David himself, in spirit, by the Holy Ghost, in the book of Psalms, call Him Lord, saying, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit Thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool. David, therefore, himself calls Him Lord. How, then, is He his son?"

The question was public, to the whole assembly, with raised voice. Modern agnosticism evades the point by denying that the Psalm quoted was written by David. Yet the Psalm was in the Bible and expressed the authorized and orthodox doctrine of the Jewish religion whether David wrote it or not; while the evidence that David did not write it is weak. If David, or any other Jew speaking authoritatively for his religion and endorsed by that religion afterwards, worships the Messiah, then the Messiah is Divine. In that case Christ's claim of Divinity, instead of chief argument against His Messiahship, is chief argument for it with all who accept the Psalms. High Priest and Scribes and Pharisees were wrong and had based their whole three years' campaign against Jesus of Nazareth upon a proved misconception and a self-evident mistake.

There is more to a man than his mind. Had the High Priests, Scribes and Pharisees been nothing but intellects, without body parts or passions, they would probably have been convinced; for they were dumbfounded. There was nothing to be said. Our Lord had introduced into their already discordant ranks a suspicion which would spread. Viewed from the standpoint of pure intellect He had proved that, for years, they had acted on a mistake.

But to know truth when you meet it is the rarest gift of humanity and akin to the Divine. It is to be sane, righteous, holy; it is, oneself, to be true. It is beyond the power of Scribes and Pharisees. To confess oneself wrong, to agree that one has been publicly openly and for a long time mistaken, is given to few men. Moreover, the priests were legitimate representatives of the true Church of God. Their authority was genuine. It was God's Church, and they rightfully represented it. This man, Joshua Son of David, was their uncompromising opponent. He said that He came not to destroy but to fulfil, that He attacked not God's Church, but their corruptions: but, as far as they could see, there were no corruptions. He must be wrong. The real reason they opposed Him was not that He claimed the Messiah was Divine and He was the Messiah, but because He attacked them. The common people would soon see that the grounds assigned for opposition to Him were mistaken. He might introduce another cankering paralyzing doubt or two into their minds. They dared not ask Him any more questions.

There was a spiritual side, also. Our Lord says there is a devil. Not the thing with horns and hoofs derived originally from the myth of the great god Pan and developed by mediaeval superstition, but a great intellect, one of the Sons of God gone wrong, intelligent past our comprehension, evil, untrue, malicious past our understanding, powerful beyond our knowledge, moving evil men like pawns on a chessboard, so that any man is good or evil as he clings to the power of God and is immovable, or thinks of self and so lets himself be moved. This intellect was in touch with these men. The Prince of this World had joined issue with the Prince of Peace. The Lord of Death was matching power with the Lord of Life.

The Offence of the Cross.

It is strange how some people think that the test of the up-to-date intelligence lies in the disjecta membra of their rejections—as though any position whose chief point is its negations could ever be satisfying and permanently essential.

About nineteen hundred years ago there were some people who found the preaching of a crucified Christ a stumbling block and others who found it just foolishness. The first were Jews, the second were Greeks. The same two types exist today. The death of Christ as having any specific bearing on our relation to God is something to be explained away if possible. They find nothing in the idea of a crucified Christ—indeed, less than nothing, a hindrance.

The Jewish type are looking for a Christ, for a Messiah, an Anointed Leader who will set things right in a material fashion, politically, socially, industrially, commercial and in every way. But they do not see how the Cross comes into things at all. It is a stumbling block, a black shadow in the picture, a discord in the music, an intrusion in their Utopia, like a voice in a language they do not understand.

The Greek type, too, are looking for their ideal leader. All things to them must be beautiful. The ideal state will be made up of citizens who will follow good as soon as they know it and whose mistakes will be only those of ignorance. To them the Cross is an ugly flaw that mars the statue, a grim gallow that disfigures the landscape.

Both fail in their view of life for sin and the Cross are facts of life. Sins are, unfortunately, of the will as well as of ignorance. There are men who deliberately do wrong, who traffic in their fellows' sins. Nothing in life is so ugly as sin and never was it so ugly as when it did to death the Son of Man. The only way things will be set right will be by men who are right. Changed men are the necessary condition for changed things. And it requires some more powerful lever than a knowledge of failure and sin to change them.

Ever since the Gospel has been preached there has been an emphasis on the death of Christ. It was the burden of the Apostles' message. As they looked back over the earthly life of Christ, it was the deep significance of the closing week that stood out in the perspective. It occupied the foreground. The life and teachings which showed what manner of man He was filled the middle ground and there was the background of the thirty years of silence with the illumination of the Temple visit in His boyhood. His death was not a death, but the death of such a One who lived and taught and rose again. We can understand this emphasis, because, of all that Jesus did it was His death which most revealed the heart of the Father. Other men might live and teach, but, His death stood out in brutal ugliness against the purity and goodness of His life and teaching. It arrests the mind. It challenges the whole man.

There are some who say that the doctrine of the Cross, the Atonement, as it is called, is only the reflection of St. Paul and St. John on the events of Passion Week and that they originated the thought. (The entire agreement of all the New Testament writers in this thing has to be explained for they did not agree on all things.) But, it is to be noticed, that this special regard to Christ's death we find also in the mind of Christ Himself. It is true that in St. Paul and St. John we find a degree of emphasis on the death of Christ such as we do not find in our Lord's Teaching and such as could not logically be expected. But Our Lord has left us in no doubt as to how He regarded His death.

To take no other instance than the Holy Communion to which is the witness of the Church borne back through the centuries to that dark betrayal night; every account of the Institution give this thought in Jesus' mind. "This is my blood of the covenant which is shed for many unto the remission of sins"; "This is my blood of the covenant which is shed for many"; "This cup is the new covenant in my blood which is poured out for you". Any one who will fairly examine the evidence will observe the constant, "My blood of the covenant shed for many." It is impossible to gainsay the conclusion that these words refer to His death, and it is clear that He looked upon His death as having a value for others in relation to God. The idea of a covenant is distinctly stated and it is a covenant in His blood. To go no farther we have here the Atonement in the mind of Christ. And the man who sees in Christ's death only the inevitable result of a course of action opposed by the civil and ecclesiastical authorities has not thought of that death as Jesus thought of it.

How did Christ's death avail for us. We are not told by Christ. From His lips we hear only one thing: "The Will of the Father." Christ was convinced that His death was not simply inevitable. It was indispensable. Theories of the Atonement have been framed and will be again, for we must ever try to relate the stupendous fact of Christ's death for us to all our thinking. But in every explanation there is the unknown element: "the Will of the Father." We have got no farther than that.

"As the flash of a volcano discloses for a few hours the elemental fires at the earth's centre, so the light on Calvary was the bursting forth through historical conditions of the very nature of the Everlasting. There was a cross in the heart of God before there was one planted on the green hill outside of Jerusalem."

"Oh heart I made, a Heart beats here!
Face, My hands fashioned, see it in Myself!

Thou hast no power, nor mayest conceive of Mine,

But love I gave thee, with Myself to love.

And thou must love Me, who have died for thee."

—Canadian Churchman.

On Miracles.

Is the power of God more easily comprehended if we say that man was millions of years in the making, and was not formed of dust between the rising and setting of the sun? The wonder is not that God could form man, but that He could create the germ of life. What absurdity is this, that we will believe in miracles if they are performed in one way, but will not believe if they are performed in another? To confess a want of faith in miracles is to confess a want of vision: Each detail in the universe is a miracle, despised because it is so frequently seen. Each hour of life is a miracle. The ability to think is a miracle. Those who scoff at the miraculous are themselves miracles, and their own existence is no more easily comprehended than the peculiar works of God that men call supernatural.—R. Quillen.

For the Young Folks

A Morning Prayer.

Guard me for yet another day;
For life is new with morning's ray;
And foes are strange, untrod the way;
Guard me through this an unknown day.

Gird me for yet another day,
Though guarded, I must fight and pray;
Teach me to draw my sword or stay;
O Gird while guarding me today!

Guide me for yet another day!
Guarded and girded, yet I stray.
Find paths for me and I obey;
Guard, gird and guide me, one more day.

Guard, gird and guide me every day,
So when all things of time decay,
In morn of heaven by grace I may Enter Thy perfectness of day.

The Great, Good Seed-Sower.

Eugenie du Maurier.

God is like a great, big, good farmer. He has scattered over this earth of ours a beauty garden of flowers and trees which He has so graciously loaned to us, His five human seeds: the Caucasian, the Indian, the Malayan, the Mongolian, and the Ethiopian. Like all seeds, they are planted and come forth from the dark, the unknown, and develop into dear, helpless sprouts, with bright eyes, smooth skins and chubby, restless hands and feet. We call them babies—our babies.

This mighty God-farmer never eats, never sleeps, nor weeps, but travels along facing all kinds of hardships. In storm and in sunshine He is always at His post. He selects from His golden pan the most perfect seeds He can find and with a mighty sweep of His hand He scatters them to the four winds: the east, the west, the north and the south.

All the little children have come from the God-farmer's pan. And He planted them to grow into big men and women with bigger hopes and ideas than they now have.

All the human seeds which God has planted upon this beautiful earth grow up to be people. Our houses, or rather our homes, are our bodies, because in each lives a master called "I." This little master, "I", has power to grow up and make his home beautiful or he can grow up and make his home a human wreck. Each child has a body. And that body is a home for his little master, "I." Now each child's home has all kinds of rooms. Here in your brain is where the master, "I," always sits on his throne; for he is the king. And he does all the planning for his little homes, your bodies. Your eyes are his windows, out of which he looks and sees everything that is going on. Your ears are his telephones, through which he can hear all sounds. Your nose is the means whereby he gets air. Your mouth is the instrument with which he speaks out his thoughts and his commands, also through which he gets his food. Your arms and legs are his servants, and must do his bidding. If he thinks, "Hurry," your feet just fly along. If he thinks, "Stop," your feet are still. Whatever he wants those little servants to do he thinks about. And they immediately obey. When a little master becomes tired, it is night. And he closes up your little eyes, his windows, and he goes to sleep. But in the morning he awakens and opens his house to begin his work for the day. When he is very small, he must learn many things. He must learn just what kind of amusement to put into his parlor, which is your heart, and just what kind of food he must put into his kitchen, which is your stomach. The one thing he has to study most is how he is going to spend his life when he grows up and has the right to do as he pleases in this beautiful world-garden.

What great achievement is he going to accomplish? First of all, while he is very young, he must learn to read, write and spell. The little master, "I," in each of the children is learning to do that. But the great trouble with this little master, when very young, he wants to waste all his time at play. And if he is not taught by the older people, he will be very unhappy. Each child must watch the home of his little master. And the way to do it is to learn to accept only faith, courage, harmony, cheerfulness and kindness. These are the principal things for joy. Then the little children must dress their master, "I," in garments of ambition, will-power, vitality, determination and assurance.

It does not matter to the good God-farmer whether His seeds are planted in a garden of wealth or on a desert, so long as they get three ingredients: sunshine, pure food and plenty of fresh air.

Ambition is the first thing the children must consider. This is the desire to do a big, worthy life's work. First of all, the little master, "I," must decide what it would like to do. Then he will sit up on his throne in their brains and he will think and think. And pretty soon he will answer. And his little home will tremble all over with the vibrations of his great voice. His faithful servants, the little children's hands and feet, will begin to be ready to do their part. But before you little children act—before you do anything that you really want to do, you must first consult your little master, "I". Just ask yourselves: "Is this going to help or hurt me, or anybody else?" He will again sit on his throne and think and think. If he does not know, he must get real busy and find out from older and more experienced masters—the grown-ups in the world.

Just Say "All Right."

"Oh, dear," the small girl was beginning fretfully, when the mother interrupted. "I think that's a mistake, isn't it?" she asked cheerily.

"But I don't want to do it a bit."

"But as long as you must do it, what is the use of saying, 'Oh, dear?' Can't you think of something better to say?"

For a moment the girl hesitated. Then her face changed. A smile came over it and her voice grew cheerful, as she said, "All right, mother!"

Many of us who are older need to learn that lesson. Grumbling over the inevitable is foolish and short-sighted. Since things are as they are, and there is no way of changing them, the wise way is to accept the situation cheerfully.

Even though this little girl did not feel like doing the task her mother had given her, she was sensible enough to realize that her mother knew best. The "all right" was only common sense. And when we remember the divine promise that all things shall work for our good, the only reasonable thing is to take whatever comes with absolute cheerfulness. Whether it is pleasant or unpleasant, hard or easy, the sensible thing is to say from our hearts, "All right!"—Girl's Companion.

On Entering the Church.

When to the House of God ye come,
A prayer in secret say,
On bended knee His grace implore,
For this 'tis ment to pray.

Leave at the door your weekly cares—
God loves the pure in heart;
To those who wholly look to Him
He will true grace impart.

Aloud, but humbly, answer make
As Common Prayer directs.
He who sits silent or asleep
The way of life neglects.

In standing posture give your alms,
And standing sing God's praise;
Be not afraid to lift your voice,
The glad some hymns to raise.

Bow at the holy name, which God
In our poor nature bore,
And silently His blessing ask
Ere that ye seek the door.

Talk not to neighbor or to friend
Step softly; bare the head,
For holy is the very ground
On which they footsteps tread.

Thus ever use the House of God.
In prayer and joyful praise.
He best will pass the coming week,
Who these few rules obey.

Playing "Pretend."

"I want my mother!" Bobby banged his spoon against his plate to show that he meant just what he said.

Father and Aunt Alice looked at each other, and then they both looked at Eleanor Louise, and she knew that they were thinking how hard it would be to get Bobby to sleep without letting him disturb his mother.

Eleanor Louise sighed. It had been a hard day. The days when mother went to bed with a headache were always hard days. Father had explained that mother would soon feel better if things could be kept quiet for a time. But there was no use in trying to explain it to two-year-old Bobby. Aunt Alice had come, and they had played with him and taken him out for an airing. But now it was bedtime, and he wanted his mother.

Eleanor Louise would have liked to curl up in a big chair and read in her story book before going to bed. Surely she had worked hard enough to keep Bobby quiet, but there was one more game that he liked to play—the "pretend" game. An idea popped into Eleanor Louise's head as she saw him starting for mother's room as soon as he had been helped down from the table. She ran after him.

"Listen! Bobby, what do you hear?" she asked in an excited whisper.

The little fellow stopped a second.

"I do believe that there is some one in our room," said Eleanor Louise. "It may be a fairy. Let's go and see."

Bobby was willing enough to go in search of a fairy.

"Oh, look, there she is!" cried his sister, pretending to see a fairy. "What is your name, little fairy?"

Eleanor Louise paused a moment as if the fairy were speaking. "O Bobby," she cried then, "the fairy says she is the Keeper of the Buttonholes, and she has come to set free all the poor, tired buttonholes that have had to hold pulling buttons all day. She wants us to take the buttons out of these poor tired buttonholes on your shoes. One, two, three. There! Now the other shoe. One, two, three. Now you may rest, little buttonholes. Oh, the fairy wants these other buttonholes set free, too, these on your waist. This one, this one, and that one. Now they can all rest, and the little fairy thanks you."

Bobby smiled delightedly.

"Dearie me, there comes another fairy. And what sort of fairy are you?"

There was a short silence while Bobby sat with clothes unbuttoned and stared at the place where the pretended fairy was supposed to be.

"Well," said Eleanor Louise, "this fairy says that she is the Keeper of Tired Clothes. She wants you to get out of your tired clothes and let them rest. These tired shoes have walked all round the house. Let's let them rest here under the chair. We shall fold up your clothes and let them rest on top of the chair. The fairy says that you may get into your sleepers, for they are not tired; even the buttonholes have been resting in the closet all day and have had no buttons pulling on them. There now."

Bobby stood in his sleepers, and waited eagerly to see what would happen next.

Eleanor Louise called out: "Oh, there comes the Keeper of Tired Tongues and Toes. She wants you to jump into bed and stick out your tongue so that she can see if it is tired. Yes, she says that your tongue is very tired, and she wants you to put it back into its bed and let it rest. She wants to see your eyes. Yes, they are tired, too. Put the eye covers down over them."

Then Eleanor Louise gently lifted each one of Bobby's arms and legs.

"Yes, this arm is tired; let it lie still and rest. And this arm is tired and both your legs. Now the fairy wants to see about your toes."

As she counted off the toes, one by one, her voice sank lower and lower. She began more slowly on Bobby's fingers, touching them lightly. By the time she had finished ten of them, Bobby was breathing heavily. She waited a moment, but he showed no signs of waking. He had missed his nap, and he was asleep almost as soon as he closed his eyes.

Just then father stuck his head in at the door with a funny look of astonishment on his face. He tiptoed over and gently pulled a coverlet over the sleeping Bobby.

"How did you do it?" he whispered. Then he gathered Eleanor Louise up in his arms and carried her into mother's room to tell mother all about it.

"I am so thankful," said mother. "I was afraid that I should have to get up and put him to sleep. I knew what that would do to my head, but now, thanks to my big daughter, I can go right to sleep and tomorrow I shall be well."

Eleanor Louise leaned over for her kiss, then father carried her back to her room. He sat down in a chair with her and began to untie her shoes. It had been a long time since she had been helped to bed, but it was very pleasant. She thought it fun to lay her head back against father's shoulder and pretend that she was little again and had to be put to bed like Bobby.—Youth's Companion.

God's Love.

The big round sun shines through the day
And lights the earth while I'm at play.
He gives the plants the warm to grow,
So shows God's love to us, I know.

The big, round moon looks down at night
And shines with such a soft, clear light.
That thus I know God watch is keeping
While safely through the night I'm sleeping.

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE will tell you that the first results of constipation—headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time, these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease. In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Hence, doctors urge internal cleanliness—regular and thorough removal of food waste from the body.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury

"Keep Clean Inside"
Say Physicians.

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were passed at the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Virginia held in Danville:

Resolutions on the resignation of Mrs. Frank Darling as President of the Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Virginia.

"It was with much regret and deepest feeling that Bishop Tucker announced to the Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Virginia his reluctant acceptance of the resignation of our beloved President, Mrs. Darling.

"We the Woman's Auxiliary, in annual convention assembled, would like to add to the beautiful tribute Bishop Tucker paid our noble leader our own words of love and appreciation.

"We feel that the Auxiliary loses a spiritual adviser, the mission workers a faithful and efficient friend, and each member of the Auxiliary a co-worker, whose personality has so endeared her to us, she will always keep her place in our hearts.

"Resolved, that a copy be spread upon the minutes, and further

"Resolved, that these resolutions be published in the Diocesan Record and Southern Churchman.

Obituaries

Lee: Died, at St. Regis Sanatorium, Salem, Va., February 29, 1924, LYDA LEE, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lee. Funeral from the Church of the Ascension, Norfolk, Va. Burial in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

WILLIAM PATERSON CORNELL, M. D.

Entered into life eternal, in the forty-ninth year of his age, at Columbia, S. C., WILLIAM PATERSON CORNELL, M. D., on Sunday, February 24, 1924. Funeral services were held in Trinity Church, Columbia, by the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, D. D.; the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., rector of the parish; the Rev. W. H. K. Pennington, of the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, and the Rev. A. J. Derbyshire, of St. Timothy's Church, Columbia. Interment in Mt. Pleasant Cemetery, Newark, N. J.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; for they rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

MRS. ADELINE DOUGLAS GREEN.

Entered into life everlasting, at 6:30 A. M., Wednesday, February 27, 1924, at her home, 109 South Third Street, Richmond, Va., ADELINE DOUGLAS GREEN. Mrs. Green was the daughter of the late William Douglas Gibson and Anne Harrison Drew, and widow of Robert Bromfield Green, of Halifax, Halifax County, Va. She is survived by four daughters—Mrs. Lewis G. Chelf, Mrs. R. Powell Dunn, Mrs. T. Wilber Chelf and Mrs. Paul W. Howle.

The death of this beloved woman brings heavy sorrow to a large circle outside of her immediate family and relatives. Her loss will be severely felt by all who enjoyed the privilege of her friendship and were acquainted with the beauty of her character and her life of love.

For those last three words sum up in brief the whole tenor of her existence upon earth. She loved her family, her relatives and her friends with supreme devotion, unbroken faithfulness and self-forgetting unselfishness. Cultivated, richly endowed with the grace and charm of a bright and joyous temperament, possessing that sweet and benignant refinement for which Virginia's women have always been distinguished, it was inevitable that she should have commended the admiration and affection of those who knew her intimately.

"Brilliant and attractive, however, as were these social qualities, it was in the higher realm of spiritual virtues she shone most resplendently. Since early childhood she had been a consecrated member of the Episcopal Church, and in that fold she worshipped and served the God of her fathers. Though often visited by affliction in the course of her long life, yet her devout and trusting heart ever held fast to the faith delivered to her. Help, as all of us are, to the wearying trials of life, she was never embittered by suffering nor appalled by the searing flame of calamity, trouble or distress.

A great poet, drawing a contrast between youth and age, has said that to some, in the decrepitude of advanced years, a "mortal coldness of the soul like death comes down." Mrs. Green was not one of these, for throughout her life and notwithstanding the increasing burdens and infirmities of age, her soul was never cold. Always dominated by the generous impulses of a superior nature, it disclosed at every stage of her life's journey the immortal warmth of perennial youth. The "tender bloom of her heart" never faded, but continued to last burgeoning anew in fragrance and loveliness. Her sympathy flowed freely and voluntarily to those in distress; her liberal hand was never lagged to those in need. Anybody that she could cheer and help over the rough places of misfortune and adversity, that person was the one she must help if it were in her power, and her ministrations were ever characterized by a modesty and an utter absence of ostentation as natural and unaffected as it was beautiful and ennobling. Many who read these lines will remember her in this regard with love and gratitude, but the full extent of her benefactions will not be known until the books of the judgment are opened.

With grief unfeigned we bid her an earthly adieu, but it is a grief which loses its sting in the assurance that she is now one of the ransomed saints who "throng up the steep of light," that though gone from us, the memory of her exalted character and life still remains, pointing us to the gracious beauty and benedictions by her Christian example.

"Death hides, but it does not divide,
Thou art but on Christ's other side."

Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Coadjutor.

Union Lenten Services.

The parishes of the Episcopal Church in Binghamton, Johnson City and Endicott are uniting this year as for the last several years in a noon-day service to be held in Christ Church each Thursday of Lent from 12:10 to 12:35 o'clock.

The three parishes in Binghamton, Christ Church, Trinity Memorial Church, and the Church of the Good Shepherd, also unite in special Sunday night services to be held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, beginning Sunday, March 16, and in a week-night service of devotion in Trinity Church on Tuesdays.

A schedule of celebrations of the Holy Communion has been so arranged in these three churches that between them the Holy Communion will be celebrated daily.

A strong list of speakers is announced for the Thursday noon services in Christ Church, as follows:

March 6, the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske,

D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Central New York.

March 13, the Rev. Albert E. Clattenburg, rector of St. Peter's Church, Hazleton, Pa.

March 20, the Rev. John S. Littell, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, West Hartford, Conn.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

That prayer is from the heart which leads us to pray with our hands.

No matter how heavily handicapped you may be, there is always something to be done for His glory.

The best proof of the soundness of your theology is the soundness of your lives.—J. A. Hutton.

"The Church must testify against those that put a burden of work on men on Sundays."

We can never receive the new wine from Christ as long as we give Him our dregs.

Wheresoever thou art, O Child of God, God's angels have their eyes fixed lovingly on thee.—F. B. Meyer.

God chooses the weak things of the world to overthrow the mighty. The whole providence of God seems to be to constitute as to baffle the calculator.—Joseph Parker.

No bank ever closes its business day, until its balance is found to be absolutely correct. And no Christian should close a single day until his accounts with God for that day have been perfectly adjusted alone with Him.—R. A. Torrey.

"Jesus, Master, Whom I serve,
Though so feebly and so ill,
Strengthen hand and heart and nerve
All Thy bidding to fulfil;
Open Thou mine eyes to see,
All the work Thou hast for me.

"Notice the negative commands regarding the Holy Spirit: 'Resist not, quench not, vex not, grieve not', seeming to imply that if we do not restrain and force Him away, it is His blessed disposition to abide, and spring up as a well of living water."

The hands of my watch move only in one direction; but when the watch is too fast I move the hands backward. Have I suspended or violated any law? Did not the maker of the watch make provision for just such a reversal of that law, by which both minute and hour hands move only forward. Who is competent to say that when God reverses the hands on the great dial of nature, He has made no provision for such reversal?—Selected.

THE GREAT THINGS WHICH GOD MAKES POSSIBLE

Every month there comes out from St. Paul Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville, Virginia, the little magazine called "The Southern Missioner." It is the record of the fine work which steadily is carried on at the school, and of the influence which constantly is going out from it to leaven with better ideals of every-day religion many communities where the graduates of the school have gone. The fact that there is anything for the magazine to write about, and the fact that there is any school to send it out, are due chiefly to the courageous work of one man, Archdeacon James S. Russell, who forty-two years ago arrived in Lawrenceville to begin his work.

In the last number of The Southern Missioner there is this account of Archdeacon Russell's work, which is so full of human interest that it ought to be shared with a wider constituency:

"In Lawrenceville there was no church or chapel owned by the Colored, and only a few somewhat discouraged communicants, who were worshipping in the white church, two Sunday evenings in each month. The Rev. J. Green Shackelford, of sainted memory, was the rector of the Parish Church. His first work was to get this small congregation to make the effort to build a church. In this he succeeded, helped by the generosity of the Church people in general as well as by his own small congregation. In the vestry room of the little church he started a school on January 1, 1883. This parish school was then a real necessity, as public schools were few and far between, with terms of four and one-half and five months and equipment almost nothing. Hardly one in fifty of the people could read or write and scarcely any owned homes. Archdeacon Russell set himself to visit the homes in the county, but he was handicapped by lack of a horse. He attended the Diocesan Council in Norfolk of the then undivided diocese in May, 1882, and made an earnest plea for his work. He set forth so earnestly his need for a horse that one of the delegates, the late Dr. Murdough, arose and said, 'Let us give Brother Russell a horse.' An offering of nearly $100 was the result and 'Brother Russell' got his horse, 'Ida,' as she was called. She became a familiar sight as she journeyed about in this and adjoining counties, carrying the Gospel. The 'Missionary horse,' as 'Ida' was called, was known to the whole countryside of several counties. 'Ida,' after twenty-four years of faithful service, was burned in a fire which destroyed the barn. In the meantime the work had grown and spread in several counties as well as in the diocese.

"During Archdeacon Russell's ministry of forty-two years he has presented for confirmation more than 1,000 persons; celebrated hundreds of marriages, and officiated at hundreds of funerals, besides thousands of visits to the sick and afflicted; baptized over 2,000 adults and children and delivered several thousands of addresses and sermons. In point of ordination he is the senior priest of the diocese save two. His little parish school has grown from a small church day school, taught by himself and his devoted wife, now 'passed over,' into the largest school for Colored under the auspices of the Church, and the third largest of its kind in the United States. The 'hill' on which he started his work, instead of the mass of tangled under-growth, dense shrubbery and neglected old 'burying ground,' is now crowned by the splendid, brick Memorial Chapel, steam-heated and electric-lighted and the modernly appointed and equipped buildings of the School."

In these days of great organizations and large corporate movements, people wonder sometimes whether the individual counts for very much. Especially that question is asked in connection with the ministry. The ministry no longer gives the scope for service which it once did, people say. Vital results are not accomplished by it.

But here is a man who had as slight a start as one could imagine. He was face to face with the crudest kind of conditions and the most elementary needs. He had no assured financial backing, and only that measure of effective good-will which his own common-sense and faithfulness could create. But the story of that man's accomplishment is builded into the walls of St. Paul's School. It is wrought into the lives of hundreds of colored men and women who have themselves been made better, and who are making their communities better through the influences which he set in motion. The romance of men's accomplishment when they work for God is not something which belongs merely to vanished centuries. Here in our own time is the fine witness of God's extraordinary blessing of consecrated work.

CONGRESS AND THE WORLD COURT

The latest bulletin from the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches gives a disquieting report concerning the prospect of any legislation in the present Congress leading to the entrance of the United States into membership in the World Court. As everybody knows, the attention of Congress recently has been absorbed by the oil scandal and the investigations resulting from it. Naturally this matter would conscript a very large amount of the time and energy of Congress even if it were most sincerely and directly dealt with; but there is abundant evidence that from both sides it is being manipulated with an eye to partisan political effect, so that the clamour and debate are prolonged whenever it appears that by this method political adversaries can be brought to confusion. Meanwhile a great many members of Congress who are not particularly concerned about the oil matter in its positive aspects, find it a very convenient trail along which to keep the attention of Congress, and of the country generally, baying down another scent from those which particularly they do not want to be followed. If there can be enough debate about oil there will not be time for debate about anything else. As the proverb says, there is more than one way to kill a cat, and so also there is more than one way to kill a legislative measure. American entrance into the World Court, for example, could be prevented by negative votes after a fair argument, but it is a good deal easier, and it may be politically safer, for those who want to do so, to kill it through preventing its ever coming to a vote at all.

The World Alliance points out in its bulletin that there has been an exceedingly widespread and strong expression from the American people in favor of our entrance into the World Court. In the long run this public opinion is bound to prevail. It may possibly be frustrated in this Congress, though even that is not inevitable, and the pressure of multitudes who demand the World Court may yet force unwilling or evasive Congressmen into action. But even if Congress does avoid action in this session, there can be an accounting later with the men who failed to act; and public opinion, if it is insistent and determined enough, will register itself, if not through the votes of those who are in Washington now, then through the votes of those who will take their places.

THE NEED IN GERMANY

The news which comes from Germany and is transmitted with the imprimatur of those organizations in America which are closest in touch with conditions there, goes to show that the crisis of need for the relief of German people, and especially for the feeding of German children, grows daily more acute. It is estimated that two and one-half million children are in actual danger of starvation, that over half of all the children in Germany are undernourished, and that the supply of milk available in Germany is, in different parts of the country, from eight to twenty times less than it was before the War. Children over two years of age can get no milk at all, and even the little babies can get exceedingly little. All the diseases which malnutrition causes—rickets, blindness, scurvy, spinal curvature, anaemia, and the rest of the evil list—are increasing ominously, and yet in this time of cruel need hospital beds are unoccupied for lack of funds to keep the hospitals supported.

In the face of suffering like this, what imaginable reasons could there be for indifference or antagonism in America to the effort to raise for Germany the relief which somehow must be supplied if multitudes are not to die?

It is sometimes said that America ought not to have this responsibility. Why do not the Germans take care of their own suffering? The answer to this, as the well-known economist, Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks, has given it is that, "According to the best available information the German Government and people are doing fifty times as much general relief as all outside sources combined. Statistics show that two-thirds of the expense of all child-feeding is being borne by Germans. The chief burden of this work automatically falls upon the big industrialists, bankers and agriculturalists as the heaviest taxpayers, but in addition they are giving freely as individuals."

But the ability of Germany is necessarily limited. Five million workmen and their families are either unemployed or receiving some government dole. In that highly industrialized country, it is impossible for more than sixty-five per cent of the minimum food requirements to be raised, and there is not sufficient credit for Germany to buy food abroad.

Another reason, sometimes hinted at rather than openly spoken, is that it is no part of America to feed the children of a nation which has done such hateful things in the world as the Germany of our generation has done.

That any such suggestion should even be whispered is an evidence of the coarsening and callousing effect which the War has had on the human spirit. There are people today in America who used to be shocked at the phrases of the imprecatory psalms wherein a blessing was called down upon the heads of those who should take the children of Babylon and dash them against the stones; but the savagery of that old time was simply more unabashed and not more cruel than the savagery which would prolong into the time of peace and visit upon a generation unborn in the years of Germany's militarism the passions arising out of the War. "America does not make war upon children," said General Allen, and, if there are any Americans who do, the sooner they learn that they are a discredit to patriotism as well as to religion, the better for them and for us all.

As long ago as January, in England, which suffered from the War far more acutely than America and had far deeper reason for preserving the passions which war creates, a notable list of men and women, including Mr. Asquith, Bishop Gore, Maude Royden, Gilbert Murry, and the present Premier, Ramsay MacDonald, called on the English people, "despite the need in this country," to give toward German relief. They pointed out the exhaustion in Germany of trade union funds, sick benefits, and all such emergency resources, the closing of hospitals, schools and asylums and the consequent suffering not only of the working classes, but of thousands of professional people. "We do not believe," the appeal stated, "that the British people, whatever their views of the causes of this catastrophe, whatever the need nearer home, will consent to stand by unmoved and watch women and children die. If these starving people were our enemies we are bidden to feed them. Shall we do less now that they are our stricken neighbors?"

It is figured that only forty-seven cents per month can be made to suffice for the supplemental feeding needed for one child in Germany. The Federal Council of Churches at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, will send any Church the literature which will explain to the people exactly the need in Germany and how it can be met. It is hard to believe that there is any one of our congregations in America which can satisfy its conscience if it does not lay this appeal before its people.

A RENUNCIATION OF WAR

In spiritual matters it is good to have those who go far beyond the crowd. They may not be infallible guides, and the path they point out may need to be charted carefully before the multitude can tread in it; but they break up the complacency into which it is so easy to settle down. They make their generation uncomfortable in doing nothing. They force men to consider that there is something beyond the point at which they have been indolently content to stop.

Such a value there is in the messages which from time to time are issued by the Philadelphia Society of Friends. All round us there is the familiar talk of preparedness, the old militaristic conception of finding security by outstripping some other nation in the enginery of hate and war. There is the easy tendency to take our world as we find it, to accommodate ourselves to old motives and talk as though these would be prevailing always. But the Friends sound another note. "As Christians," they say,

"We are striving for 'a warless world'. We are firmly convinced that this can be achieved only by refusal to participate in war, simply and sufficiently because war is by its very nature at variance with the message, the spirit, and the life and death of Jesus Christ. We unite in supporting treaties of arbitration and conciliation, limitation and reduction of armaments, international courts of justice, a league or association of nations for the preservation of peace. This is well; it is a great achievement for statesmen to accomplish these things; but it is not sufficient for the Christian Church.

"A principle is greater than any or all of its applications. The fundamental peace principle of Christianity demands the utter rejection of war, unequivocally and without compromise. With this principle in its charter the Christian Church can always utter a clear and unmistakable verdict or any specific measure of statesmanship that is proposed; it will not be misled or coerced, by argument or by force, into participating in any kind or degree of preparation for war or into lending the sanction of Christianity to the waging of any war whatsoever.

"The achievement of all the great moral reforms in history has awaited the development of a deep religious conviction in the hearts of the people. Vital, uncompromising Christianity when applied to great moral issues, has never failed to bring the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth another step nearer to realization.

"The most pressing reform of our time is to abolish war, and to establish exclusively peaceful means of settling disputes and promoting cooperation among the nations. These peaceful means cannot prevail until the nations beat their swords into plowshares and learn war no more. To accomplish these results the Christian Church in practice and profession must condemn the whole system of war unequivocally and finally, relying not upon armed preparedness, but upon the awakened conscience of mankind."

What shall we say to words like these?

FOLIA CHRISTI

By Richard C. Cabot, M. D.

(This article was so badly mutilated by typographical errors in its publication two weeks ago that in justice to its distinguished author and to our readers we are republishing it this week.—Ed. S. C.)

CHRISTIANITY is like an oak whose vital sap shoots out towards the light in the glowing green of its myriad leaves, each differently beautiful. We peer into the shadows of the towering leaf-masses, depth beyond depth, a mystery that has no vagueness, but only the richness of the tree's multitudinous life. In despair of picturing its stature, I fix attention on a few of its leaves, each, as Goethe said, characteristic of the whole tree, each unlike any other that has been created.

I. The Eternal Values.

It is characteristic of Christian experience that like the "Two Old Men" of Tolstoi's story, we set out dutifully upon a pilgrimage to Jerusalem and then quite unexpectedly hear the Master's call from some way side hut, where "one of the least of these" His brethren is in such dire need, that when we have begun to answer the call, we give up the original journey (though for this men reproach us), because our goal is already at hand. Failure of the plan as we made it; success thrust upon us in an imperishable experience which we never could have foreseen. I worked hard once to cure a good woman's child of rickets. I used the approved methods laboriously. The family sacrificed much to follow out my plan. It failed utterly. The child suffered from the treatment, but did not improve. But because the Spirit of Christ was in that family, they took the will for the deed, never blamed me for my blunders and gave me their priceless, almost wordless, affection, never sought at the outset, eternal in its value to me. Out of failure this jewel remains.

So to many of us the Spanish War of 1898, with its thousands of youthful lives sacrificed to typhoid fever in our unsanitary Southern training camps, with its food scandals and its stubborn refusal to allow women nurses at the front, seems but a dubious and tear-stained success. But because there was high endeavor and Christian idealism in it, nevertheless, we have the permanent treasures of Mr. Dooley's kindly fun, surviving all the blunders and ineptitudes, an eternal value saved from the mess. Mr. Dooley's immortal picture of Roosevelt, "Alone in Cuba," could not have been foreseen or dutifully sought for. But its perfection may atone for all our sins of 1898. "The last shall be first."

II. The Motto of Modern Science in the New Testament.

It is sometimes said that science, art and economics are left out of Christ's teachings. I find the keynote of pure science in the words, "Seek and ye shall find. Knock and it shall be opened unto you." Pure science, the inspired and self-forgetful searcher for the truth is a part of religion. Applied science uses the fruits of this search to attain various phases of man's desires. It is as base or as noble as those desires. When in war we wish to crush the population of a helpless non-combatant city, applied science with the aeroplane and the poison gas bomb carries out our wishes. But pure science is always a part of the divine impulse to ask questions and get answers, seeking the Lord where He may be found—not elsewhere. The kingdom of science cometh not with observation, is not dropped beside us while we wait, but is an answer to loud knocks, penetrating questions, which the tyro has neither the vigor nor the insight to ask. When a man of science has planned a crucial experiment, his work is for the time over. The answer—a yes or a no—must come because he has knocked at the right door seeking the Lord, not casually or at random, but where He may be found. But above all, because he is seeking an answer to a question which his long discipline has fitted him to ask. It is not unrelated to the passionate petitions of prayer, which find their answer because they clearly, perhaps desperately, ask, framing their need into a question, instead of leaving it as a desire, a yearning, a hope or a wondering. As the act of prayer differs from these ruminating passivities, so the crucial experiment of the scientist, shot like an arrow towards a mark, differs from our lifeless awareness of the facts of nature and of mind, which is at the door of truth, but fails to knock.

III. Repentance and Confession While in Power.

In June, 1922, a few moments before his death, Saunderson, Headmaster of Oundle School in England, was speaking to the "National Union of Scientific Workers" out of his love of pure science and his discipleship of Jesus Christ. Though wholly unaware that a fatal apoplectic stroke was but a few moments ahead of him, he was very tired and could only shoot out bits of his matured wisdom in fragmentary shape:—

"What a curious thing is the form of government! Its characteristics include no repentance, no regret, otherwise it would acknowledge itself less than the master." (Italics mine.) I have had nothing to do with government, but some acquaintance with a hospital, a college and a charitable agency and with the methods by which from year to year the governing boards of these institutions seek to win public support through printed reports and appeals. At such moments our Christianity is largely forgotten and we become imperial Romans, acknowledging no weakness lest we seem to be less than the masters of the situation. Individuals may repent, especially in private. But governing boards—in my experience—never. Yet Christianity, as I see it, approves not him who thanks God that he is not as others are. Christ's seal is on the poor wretch who in public, not alone in his closet, cries, "God be merciful to me a sinner." We consider in committee, gingerly and amid murmurs of disapproval, the possibility of letting the public know that we—this hospital, this charity—are not only blunderers, but at times sinners. I have an idea that would be the most fetching appeal we could make if it was concrete and honest enough in its confessions. But whether or not such public repentance, such open admission of failure would win confidence and financial support, it certainly would make our institutions less pagan, more Christian. Think of the self-righteousness of party platforms! But it is not much less un-Christian than the smugness of our "annual reports," those impeccable exhibits of the doings of a group of peccant persons, keeping a bold front up to the last moment. Surely, as Emerson said, "we descend to meet" when the meeting formulates an annual report of the doings of those, each of whom knows himself for a blunderer and a sinner, but whose united front is pictured stainless. Christianity will first live in the publicity of these public organizations when they cease boasting, defending and concealing all that is not presentable.

IV. Casting Our Burden on the Lord.

One of the noblest public confessions of a weakness and possible failure known to me was in Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address. There the confession meant, I am sure, as such, never planned as a literary gem, or a forensic artifice, but spoken as the unburdening of a great and sorrowful heart, painfully aware of the littleness of man before God and of his own and his nation's failure, this

AN APPEAL FOR RUSSIAN EXILES

Dear Mr. Editor:

Not the least important of the organizations at Holy Trinity, Paris, is the Junior Mission Guild, a service group of nearly one hundred of the younger women of the parish, under the presidency of Mrs. Beekmen.

Until recently it has confined its support to the U. S. Students' and Artists' Club, the best known social, educational and athletic club center among our two thousand Americans in the Latin Quarter, under the Directorship of Canon Stimpson, Chaplain of St. Luke's Chapel.

This Guild has partially supported Holy Trinity's French War Orphans' Home at Etrechy. Now it has added a Russian Relief Department and is, for the first time, appealing for funds in America as well as in France. This appeal I most heartily endorse.

Paris has by far the largest colony of that sad army of men, women and children, which, pursued by the Bolsheviks, barely escaped from Russia with their lives. I could tell you countless stories of pathetic hardships, borne by these uncomplaining and noble people. Within a month a child, whom I remember seeing at our Christmas Tree, was taken ill and there was no money for a doctor. We were able to help. The next day, a relative came to thank us. He was a Russian General, of brilliant record, a scientist so distinguished that when he attended a Conference at the Sorbonne, a short while ago, the Assembly rose and asked him to preside. Marshal Foch had sought to visit him in his bare, little room. He said: "I am glad that I was out, it was no place for a Marshal of France to visit." Our janitor at the Students' and Artists' Club was a Russian of position before Lenin and Trotsky seized the power. Less than a month ago some of our American friends lent money to one of the most distinguished aviators of Russia to purchase a Paris taxi-cab which he is now driving. Last week we gave an overcoat (he had none) to a celebrated Russian pianist and composer, who was about to start on a concert tour.

But the most pathetic cases are the children, whom their parents cannot educate and often cannot support. A striking case came just yesterday to our notice when a Russian of education and his wife were found living in a hall stairway with their three children.

These children, in as great numbers as the Junior Guild's Treasury will permit, will be the especial care of this organization.

It can not but be known to you that there are other Church agencies in Europe which have taken many Russian children from the stricken families in order to educate them in their schools, but while relieving them of physical suffering and giving them a certain schooling, it has usually been the cause of much mental anguish as it is often insisted on that these children forsake the Orthodox Church for that of their benefactors.

Holy Trinity's Junior Guild, under the advice of its Social Service Director, a Russian woman of character and devotion, wishes to not only relieve genuine distress by securing employment and giving financial aid to adults but to place in proper schools these children of the best blood in Russia, with the expectation that they will grow up in Christ's Church and in the Orthodox Communion, with which our own Communion has always maintained the strongest bond of sympathy and Christian fellowship.

The Junior Guild, through me, is asking the editors of our Church papers at home to receive contributions to this cause and open a column of acknowledgments.

We are confident that this appeal, the first of its kind, made by our American Church in Paris, will meet with an intelligent and generous response.

FREDERICK W. BEEKMAN,
Dean of the American Pro-Cathedral Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris.

The Southern Churchman will be glad to receive, acknowledge and forward promptly all gifts for the Russian exiles whom Dean Beekman pleads for.

THE CHURCH IN TOKYO TODAY

By William Hoster

WHAT of the Church in Tokyo today?

When I left the stricken city at noon of January 13, in one part of the missionary district Bishop McKim was confirming a class of thirty Japanese converts; while Dr. Teusler, in a makeshift hospital at Tsukiji, was performing a delicate surgical operation. Elsewhere throughout Tokyo, services were being held in tents, in rude shacks and in private homes, by the seven congregations whose houses of worship were destroyed in the catastrophe of September 1.

In such manner is the Church in Tokyo functioning today, going forth gloriously with all of its manifold activities in a spirit of faith and courage. The earthquake is a thing of the past. The faces of the heroic mission workers, both Japanese and American, are turned towards the future and its infinite possibilities, firm in the conviction that the folks at home stand loyally behind them.

St. Paul's at Ikebukuro, with its buildings badly shattered, is sharing quarters with the Middle School, of which every vestige has been wiped out. St. Margaret's, its former home a blackened ruin, is temporarily housed at Mr. Ishii's School for Feeble-minded Children. Old Trinity's congregations have found refuge in the Bishop's chapel in the Andrews' house, Sunday Schools assemble in shaded bamboo groves, and kindergartens flourish in improvised shanties pending arrival of the assistance for which pleading hands are outstretched toward America.

But there is no sadness and desolation among our people in the city. In twenty-four hours they saw the utter wiping out of fifty years of material accomplishment, and the loss of all their earthly possessions. Yet, in two months' stay among them the writer heard no word of complaint, no gloomy harking back to the past. Instead, redoubled energy has been brought to bear in facing the distressing obstacles which the catastrophe has thrown across their paths. Viewing the wastes of Tsukiji they envisage a greater group of mission buildings with which to take advantage of the larger opportunity that the earthquake has created.

For this is the dominant note in the Tokyo of today: Japan has been brought to the threshold of a spiritual rebirth. The faith to which her people have clung for generations has weakened. Their dream of destiny was shaken by the crash of September 1, and little more than mere tradition remains of their ancient beliefs. Today, as a people, the Japanese are groping blindly for a spiritual anchor to which they may cling when adversity overwhelms them.

National leaders whose predecessors fifty years ago threw into prison those who proclaimed a belief in the Christ are today showering honors upon those who come in His name. Itto Kojima, the oldest Christian in Japan, who, a brief half century ago was borne into Tokyo in chains for the crime of being a Christian, sits in the placid shade of his garden at Shibuya and sees two native bishops of the Episcopal Church consecrated at Tokyo and Osaka; and hears the non-Christian governor of a province declare his belief that these followers of Christ "will surely contribute much in helping to create a new Japan," while echoing the sentiment of his colleague, the non-Christian Mayor of Osaka avers his belief that "the industrial centre of Japan has been greatly helped by the religious activities of the Episcopalians." A foreign office official proclaims the doctrine that his country needs "some spiritual background if it is to work out its destiny"; while public speakers direct attention to the fact that the Americans inaugurated their disarmament conference at Washington with solemn prayer.

In this situation of flux and change, with its unparalleled opportunity for the leadership of the Church, it is not out of place if we would grasp the situation in Tokyo today to turn back to striking incidents on September 1, which gleam like beacon lights amid the gloom of the disaster. How, in the hour of their greatest trial did the Japanese Christians react to the test?

At the Military Stores, where 32,000 refugees met death, a Japanese Christian arose amid the frenzied throng, and, with death beckoning, told to all within hearing of his voice, the story of the Saviour of mankind. As he spoke, the fire swept onward, and, with the impassioned cry, "Lord Jesus, I come!" he fell dead at the feet of his mother, a communicant of Mr. Sugiura's Church of the True Light.

When the great shock came, and the fires followed, these Christian Japanese called their families together, and knelt in prayer before seeking safety in flight. Christian Japanese men and women risked their lives in tottering houses to save their precious copies of the Scriptures. Wives of native Christian priests ventured all to preserve their husbands' vestments, and by God's grace converts to the Faith emerged from the frightful experiences of the catastrophe.

When the worst was over and while smoke still rose from the ruins of their churches, these Japanese Christians cleared away the wreckage and set up rude structures within the gutted enclosures where they might continue the worship of God. Bibles, Prayer Books and hymnals alike were destroyed by the all-consuming flames. Nothing daunted, they traced on sheets of rice paper their favorite hymns and quotations from Bible and Prayer Book with which they were most familiar, and made them into pamphlets which are in use today among these devout people who are worshipping in tents and shacks.

Dr. Wood and Bishop Gailor arrived in Tokyo early in December bringing with them twenty well-filled trunks, of material contributed by our people in the States. The news of their arrival brought the native clergy hurrying to Tsukiji from all parts of Tokyo; and when they arrived their first enquiries were not for warm clothing to protect them from the bitter cold which was setting in, but for vestments and Prayer Books and Hymnals with which to carry on with proper dignity the work to which they had devoted their lives.

Within a week after the first of September there was not a Christian congregation in all Tokyo which had not resumed services in some makeshift enclosure. The earthquake struck at noon on Saturday. Within twelve hours thereafter every place of worship in Tokyo save one had been leveled to the ground; yet, amid all the panic and chaos of the occasion in Shibuya and in Ikebukuro and in other scattered places on the edge of the ruined city noon of the next day found groups of the faithful on their knees in thanksgiving that their lives had been spared.

We found Bishop McKim celebrating Holy Communion in the ruins of Christ Church, Kanda, with a drenching rain sweeping through the wrecked edifice and the congregation standing ankle-deep in mud. At St. John's Church, Asakusa, the Rev. Mr. Daito pitched a tent within the four jagged walls and there fifty of his faithful people gathered; among them Mrs. Furukawa, a non-believer when the earthquake struck, but a convert to the faith when she awoke, burned and bleeding on the bank of the canal and saw before her the vision of her Christian son who had perished in the flames.

The first Christian service ever conducted in Japan by a native Bishop of the Church was presided over by Bishop Motoda in the private home of Mr. Gardiner, with a marble mantel surmounting an open grate fire for an altar and only thirty members of Grace Church present because the apartment would not hold more.

Beyond all doubt the Church is functioning in Tokyo today but it is functioning in a manner which demands immediate assistance if the fruitage of this devoted loyalty is to be harvested for the Master. Seven churches went down in the disaster. Their congregations averaged a membership of from one hundred and fifty to four hundred. They were prosperous, and for the most part self-supporting, up to September 1. Now, not only have their church edifices been destroyed, but in large measure the membership has been impoverished, families have been dispersed and they are without means of aiding in the Church's reconstruction. Of the three hundred and ninety-six families of Christ Church, Kanda, for illustration, one hundred and forty were burned out. Of the two hundred and seventy-eight members of the Church of the True Light, one hundred and ninety-two were burned out, twenty-six are known to have perished and sixty more are missing. Of the two hundred and twenty-eight members of St. John's Church, Asakusa, one hundred and thirty-five were burned out and seventeen lost their lives.

These temporary places of worship in which the Japanese Christians have taken refuge at best will accommodate not more than fifty people. Inevitable disintegration will follow, and the efforts of fifty years will be dissipated, if prompt assistance from America is not extended to them.

As with the Church, so with its educational and social service handmaidens which play so vital a part in the advance of the cause in the Orient.

To those who are familiar with the ways of the Orient there was an inner significance in the fact that St. Luke's Hospital and Trinity Cathedral stood together on the same block with Bishop McKim's residence between them. Thus they were linked together by bonds which made each a complement of the other in the cause to which both were consecrated. In the unfolding processes of time it will be clear that the earthquake which engulfed Tokyo on September 1 was the supreme test of all that bore the seal of Christianity in the Far East. Philanthropy there is an essential part of Christianity.

Measured by this final test St. Luke's came through September 1 with all the glory of her sister agencies in the Cause. The Church in America was thrilled by the stories which came from Tokyo of the safeguarding of the hospital patients throughout the earthquake without the loss of a single life. With their hospital first shattered by the earthquake and then leveled to the ground by fire, the heroic staff saw their charges to a final place of safety before giving a thought to their own safety or convenience. Then, when offered a haven in the Methodist School in Aoyama, they promptly turned the institution into an emergency hospital which rendered gallant service until the ruins of Tsukiji had barely cooled when they were back once more in the mission compound, where they have functioned with constantly increasing efficiency to the present day.

St. Luke's of today is not the St. Luke's of a month ago, even, as the St. Luke's of a month ago, was not the St. Luke's of the preceding month. From day to day the scene has varied with a constant progression upward. On October 15, when the staff returned to Tsukiji, there were blackened ruins only to mark the site of the former hospital. Then arrived, through the generosity of the Government at Washington, an army hospital unit, and overnight there blossomed under the magic touch of Dr. Teusler a tent hospital complete in every detail, in which the staff resumed its work of mercy in the hour when all Tokyo cried for hospital accommodations for its sick and wounded. While the tent hospital functioned with its wards for free as well as for pay patients, its dispensary and its clinic, its day nursery, operating room, and even the nurses' school, gangs of coolies cleared away the rubbish, while throngs of carpenters followed in their wake and set up huge barracks, which, within a month, spread throughout all the broad acres of the compound at Tsukiji.

By December 1 the barracks' hospital was completed and there it stands today, a series of fifteen one-story structures of creosote-coated timber, the best hospital in Tokyo. With Dr. Teusler as its directing force there are cheerful, roomy wards, complete operating rooms, an X-Ray outfit not excelled anywhere in the Orient, which was hurried across the Pacific, through the generosity of the Philadelphia Emergency Relief, dispensaries and clinics, free wards, an efficiently functioning nurses' school and every adjunct which modern science has devised for fulfilling the requirements of such an institution. But for all that it is and all that it stands for, St. Luke's Hospital today is but a temporary makeshift awaiting the fulfillment of its promise or the generosity of the Church at home.

If you would know what St. Luke's means to the people of Japan, consider that the Imperial Government, through the Minister of its Home Affairs, has forwarded an urgent appeal to Dr. Teusler for the rebuilding of a greater St. Luke's without delay. In token of this regard in which St. Luke's is held, the Government has already contributed for the uses of the institution five of the fifteen barracks in which the Hospital is housed, has donated the Community Hall, about which all the activities of the Tsukiji District center, and has laid upon St. Luke's the burden which has been willingly assumed, of conducting throughout Tokyo thirty free milk stations, which the municipality is financing, and which are the first free milk stations that the Orient has ever seen.

St. Luke's is known as the American Hospital. As a monument to the skill and courage in adversity for which the Christian civilization of America stands this barracks hospital is worth while. But meanwhile its prestige suffers and its income is curtailed. Before the earthquake St. Luke's was practically self-supporting. It is prostrate in that respect today. What shall be done about it?

Finally, St. Margaret's and St. Paul's Schools are functioning, though the ground upon which they formerly stood is stripped save for unsightly heaps of blackened brick. In these ruins, early in December, the boys of the Middle School assembled in a hollow square, and paid final tribute to their school that was. Later St. Margaret's girls assembled in memorial service, where their bereaved institution had stood, and with tear-dimmed eyes besought Dr. Wood, as did the boys of the Middle School to hasten the rebuilding of their institutions. These simple acts of a people thirsting for knowledge testify to more than words can tell of the existing needs.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

SPEAKERS FROM OUTSIDE.

EVERY League recognizes the difficulty of keeping up the Devotional Meeting to a standard of excellence. Some groups take their work very seriously and have an interesting and helpful program, others, through youth, inexperience, lack of ability or indifference falter badly. The young people themselves are often discouraged as to the feasibility of continuing for any length of time a series of Devotional Meetings sufficiently interesting to invite the attention of those from outside.

Many Leagues have found it helpful to have a talk, in the place of the Open Forum, by one who has been conspicuously successful and speaks from personal experience along the line of the subject of the evening.

When programs deal with topics under the general head of Social Service, a splendid opportunity is given to acquaint the League members with facts which they ought to know and are almost necessary to any successful effort in the community. Dividing subjects generally under the heads of the five great departments: Missions, Religious Education, Social Service, Finance and Publicity, it is possible to obtain specialists whose experience falls along the line of the subject of the evening's meeting.

Nowadays qualified men and women enjoy speaking to a group of eager and alert young people. They need not be technical, and can always close their address with practical and constructive suggestions as to possible lines of service within the Five Fields of Christian activity.

Let us assume that on certain Sundays within the year the program subjects deal with topics of Social Service. No more helpful speaker could be obtained than the Judge of the Juvenile Court; the Probation Officer; the Public Health Nurse, or the Health Officer; the City Attorney; the town Mayor, and various other officials who deal directly with the problems of the needy and underprivileged.

The Budget of the Society may not be large enough to enable each League to do something suggested by each speaker in the course of a year, but personal service can always be rendered and it would not seem improper to obtain financial assistance from without the League if the demands are too heavy to be met by the League's Budget.

Programs on Vocational Guidance can be stimulated by the presence and helpful suggestions of a doctor, lawyer, engineer, etc., whose merit, professionally and personally, is recognized by the community.

The great danger involved in having speakers from outside is the danger of over-emphasis. Program Committees are apt to resort to this method too frequently, and the evening's activities will be otherwise curtailed to permit the speaker a greater amount of time than he actually needs. All of us who talk a great deal, talk too much and talk too long, but Theatre Services in Lent, which are rigidly held within a restricted period of thirty minutes, have educated the clergy to regard as inviolate time limitations imposed upon them.

It seems that speakers from outside should not be invited more than once each month, or at most twice a month, else the young people will feel discouraged with their own papers and addresses, because the other method provides greater interest.

One of the main purposes of the League needs always to be emphasized, namely: that it is to train the boys and girls of the Church to a point where they can, without undue embarrassment, speak clearly and easily in public on religious and quasi-religious subjects; conduct Devotional and other class meetings, and develop that group consciousness which will make them a more effective unit of service in the Church of the days to come.

It has been found helpful, where Leagues have those trained in stenography, to keep at least a summary of the address made in a commonplace Book of the Society. Many Leagues and Fellowships keep such scrap-books, with photographs, programs, newspaper clippings, etc., and they are a subject of abiding interest and constitute a vivid history of the League's entire life.

"Golden Rule" Trip to Palestine.

Mr. Chester Alexander has been selected as the representative of the Young People's Societies to visit the Near East.

When all the nations of the world were being urged to observe Golden Rule Sunday by eating a plain dinner, contributing the difference between the cost of that and the usual Sunday dinner, to buy food for the orphans of the Near East, American young people were given a special opportunity in promoting the observance of the day. All Young People's Societies (Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, Baptist Young People's Union, Luther League, and Young People's Christian Union) were asked to secure as large a number of Golden Rule Dinner pledges as possible, and in order to stimulate effort and initiative, friends of the Near East Relief offered a prize of a free trip to Palestine to some member of the societies of that city or town which secured the largest results, both in interest and in the observance of the day.

Last week the Golden Rule Committee of Young People's Societies awarded the prize to the Societies of Chester, South Carolina, in recognition, not only of the number of Golden Rule Dinner pledges secured, but because of the effective way in which the campaign had been handled. The local committee had secured from the Governor of the State and from the Mayor of the City proclamations urging the observance of the day. They had handled their publicity through the newspapers, they had prepared posters for window displays, and they had made house to house canvasses, not only throughout their own city, but throughout the entire county.

When the award was made to the Societies of Chester, the Young People's organizations then selected the member of their own group to take advantage of the trip to Palestine, and the choice fell upon Mr. Alexander, of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church, who is now a student in Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia.

Mr. Alexander will take this trip as a guest of the Near East Relief. It will not be primarily a pleasure trip, although it is a trip to the land where Jesus lived and taught and did His mighty works, and to the countries traversed by Paul on his missionary journeys. But the visitor will see not only the hills and valleys, the cities and villages that are sacred because of their association, but also the scenes of want in these lands. He will visit the refugee camps and the orphanages. And after he has seen them perhaps the welfare of those Christian children who are today in want will mean more to him than his visit to the birthplace of the Christ Child.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

LAY THE FOUNDATIONS NOW.

Numerous efforts have been made from time to time to safeguard the childhood of America, and keep immature youths out of industry.

President Wilson, realizing the importance of this question, called the attention of Congress to it in a special message, thereby rescuing a bill at that time pending, and securing its passage. This law was declared unconstitutional.

The difficulty with the situation is to find a way to place this subject under Federal control. Like so many other important matters it is one of those borderland subjects where the states can legislate for themselves, and such legislation never becomes uniform.

Most states have laws of some sort regulating the employment of children, but the commonwealth in which such legislation is most drastic, is at a certain disadvantage in competition with the states where the laws are lax. Just as in the old days the more states that adopted prohibition, the greater was the profit in the wet territory, so now child labor becomes more profitable as state after state eliminates it, and its last strongholds will be exceedingly difficult to storm without the aid of Federal legislation.

Another effort is now being made, through amendment to the Constitution and the resolution looking to this end is now pending in Congress.

If persons interested in this important legislation will take the trouble to write to their representative in Congress urging the support of this resolution, it will help to create sentiment for a most important step in progressive legislation.

In the meantime there is a great work that can be done in preparatory education. Almost all of the states have some form of restriction on children working in industry. Frequently it is an optional matter for children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen. They are allowed to work, provided they obtain a special permit to do so from some official, either the Judge of the Juvenile Court, or some one connected with the school system. A record of such permits is kept, and a wonderful field is thus opened up for volunteer social workers, if they would get in touch with the authority issuing these permits, and visit the boys and girls who are planning to leave school and go to work, using their influence to get them to remain in school. Great quantities of statistical information can be obtained from the Child's Bureau of Washington with very ingenious arguments setting out both the material advantage and the moral and hygienic gain of keeping children in school until they are sixteen years old.

In carrying out this plan many cases would be found where the financial pressure is the prime reason for children abandoning school. This again would offer opportunities for churches to render financial aid in a field that is beyond the reach of the Associated Charities.

Aside from the individual helpfulness thus rendered a propaganda of education could thus be carried on which would pave the way for the proper enforcement of such legislation when the Constitutional amendment is finally adopted.

It is just this lack of proper preparation that makes prohibition today so difficult of enforcement. Under the urge of the great moral swing of the war, the amendment was adopted, as some people think, too hastily. This danger can be avoided in the case of the Child Labor amendment and its subsequent legislation, provided steps are taken now to educate the public.

We feel that the following Declaration of Independence is a fitting close to this plea for aid in protecting our children:

"Whereas, We, Children of America, are declared to have been born free and equal, and,

"Whereas, We are yet in bondage in this land of the free; are forced to toil the long day or the long night with no control over the conditions of labor as to health or safety or hours or wages, and with no right to the rewards of our service; therefore be it

"Resolved, First, That childhood is endowed with certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which are freedom from toil for daily bread; the right to play and dream; the right to the normal sleep of the night season; the right to an education; that we may have equality of opportunity for developing all there is in us of mind and heart, and

"Resolved, Second, That we declare ourselves to be helpless and dependent, that we are and of right ought to be dependent, and that we hereby present the appeal of our helplessness that we may be protected in the enjoyment of rights of childhood, and,

"Resolved, Third, That we demand the restoration of our rights by the abolition of child labor in America."

BEGINNING AT THE BEGINNING.

The National Kindergarten Association is doing an excellent work throughout the country in arousing interest in this very important branch of education. Its purpose is to encourage interest in work for the little ones, to furnish material for Children's Pages, and generally to pave the way for introduction into all of the Public Schools of kindergarten branches.

Such work cannot be carried on for nothing, and it depends entirely upon the voluntary contributions of those interested. For this reason we publish herewith a letter recently received from their headquarters:

To the Editor:

Enclosed is our Annual Report for 1923 which shows how important and effective our work is. Perhaps you will comment upon it in your columns and advise your readers to work for more kindergartens. We gladly cooperate with such efforts.

Our articles on "Home Education" are now being printed in twenty-eight foreign countries.

You will note that our editorial department cost us $1,075, not to mention postage and printing, and last year we received $528 from papers that voluntarily contributed to the expense of this service. If yours is one of these publications, accept our renewed thanks for this kindness. If not, we would be grateful should you send a check for any amount to help defray the cost of the "Home Education" articles.

We thank you for your cooperation in reaching parents who need the information and advice these articles contain.

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL KINDERGARTEN ASSOCIATION.

BITS OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

Information likely to be of help to members of provincial or diocesan social service departments is to be printed occasionally in the form of a little four-page leaflet called "Bits," distributed to those specially interested or to be had on request from the National Department of Christian Social Service, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Church Intelligence

The New Cathedral at Orlando, Florida

Dean C. S. Long states that there are two all-sufficient reasons for rapidly proceeding with the building of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, Florida, at the present time:

1. Many people are now being denied the spiritual help which the Cathedral should give, because of the entire inadequacy of the present building to provide for those who wish to attend its services of worship.

2. Orlando, where substantial growth is most marked, demands a sanctuary worthy of the worship of Almighty God.

The new Cathedral will give a dignified and beautiful place of worship now, which can be increased in size and beauty as the growth demands and the means make it possible. While the completed Cathedral will be small when compared with the average French or English Cathedrals, yet its proportions will be such as to suggest a Cathedral rather than a parish church, and every effort has been made to realize those qualities which raise the mediaeval Cathedrals and Abbeys to a plane which is above the works of man.

The immediate needs require a seating capacity of at least six hundred, and as the Orlando people can only afford to build a portion of the type of Cathedral which will ultimately be needed, the first construction will consist of the nave and aisles, while the transepts, choir, chapels and tower will be left for the future. Although the nave and aisles will be more simple in their architecture and less costly than the balance of the structure, yet their construction will give a church which will appear neither incomplete nor lacking in beauty. The nave of the Cathedral will be seven bays in length, that is to say, it will have seven columns and arches on either side opening out into the aisles. The proportions are such, that this part of the structure alone will give a dignified and well-proportioned church. Of these seven bays, five will be utilized by the congregation, while the remaining two bays will contain the choir and sanctuary. The temporary wall built between the crossing piers and arches, and forming the present sanctuary wall back of the altar, is treated in such a way that there will be no impression of the structure being incomplete either inside or outside.

In future years, when the time is ripe for expansion, the crossing, transepts, permanent choir and sanctuary will be built, giving a total seating capacity in nave, aisles and transepts of approximately twelve hundred. Thus it will be seen, that the Church people in Orlando, are erecting an impressive and beautiful church now, and that they can also realize a larger structure in the years to come, which will have all the impressiveness of a real Cathedral.

As the Episcopal Church is Anglican in its derivation, but as the new building is in a climate which is more like that of Spain or Italy, the architects, Frohman, Robb and Little, of Boston, Mass., have endeavored to adapt certain of the qualities of English Gothic architecture to the environment and climate of Florida, with the result of an architectural style, which is rather akin to Spanish Gothic. The new Cathedral will have that eminently noble and Christian type of beauty to be found in good Gothic, and it will also be perfectly adapted to its environment and climate.

For three years Dean Long and the Cathedral Chapter of St. Luke's have labored incessantly to body forth in monumental grandeur the highest spiritual aspirations of our people, and to lift the dignity of worship to high levels of power and inspiration and at the same time to provide adequate accommodation for the Church people in "The City Beautiful."

Sewanee News: Excellent Speakers Address Theological Students.

It has been the pleasure of the Theological Department to hear recently four nationally known speakers. Three of them, the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, the Rev. J. A. Schaad, and the Rev. Loaring Clark, D. D., are members of the National Council; the fourth, Dr. Edward McCrady, is the son of a former professor of science in this university. Mr. Schaad and Dr. Loaring Clark are General Missioners of the Episcopal Church, $12,500 Given at St. Luke's, Tokyo.

A cable from Dr. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, received March 15, informs the Department of Missions that Prince Tokugawa, as President of the "Disaster Relief Association," has given $12,500 to St. Luke's Hospital. The gift is entirely without conditions and is deeply appreciated by Dr. Teusler, because it comes from the subscriptions of Japanese through unofficial civilian channels.

and spoke in an extremely interesting manner about their work. Mr. Schaad also addressed the entire student body upon the subject of "Vocations."

Mr. Gill is Field Secretary of the National Council and has been visiting the Seminaries of the Church in order to prepare men for their parish work in connection with the Nation-Wide Campaign. He has recently returned from China, where he has been connected with the missions of the Church. His talks, both to the Theological Department and to the University students, portrayed most vividly the great work which has been done and which yet remains to be accomplished in this field.

Under the general subject of "Science and Religion," Dr. McCrady gave four lectures, speaking specifically about "Miracles and Modernism," "Evolution and Special Creation," "Paganism and Christianity" and "Science and the Virgin Birth." These subjects, coming at such a time, presented many attractive features. Dr. McCrady is a man of recognized authority in this work, and his lectures were well attended.

Mr. T. S. Long, Assistant Professor of English in the University, is giving a series of five Bible readings at the Tuesday Vesper services during Lent.

An old custom of a Twilight service each Wednesday evening during Lent is being carried out again this year, and with much success. This service is one of the most popular of the whole year, and the students attend practically in a body. While the service lasts only six minutes, it is very impressive and helpful.

The Virginia Summer School of Religious Education.

The Virginia Summer School of Religious Education will be held in Sweetbriar College, Sweetbriar, Va., June 23 to July 4, 1924. This will be the ninth year, that this school has been held, and the good that it has done in the advancement of the cause of religious education can not be estimated. The change of place from the University of Virginia to Sweetbriar, and the change of date have been made necessary by changed conditions of the school, and the necessity of having a greater concentration of forces. But what place could be more beautiful, or better suited to the needs of a Summer School than the wonderful buildings and location of Sweetbriar College. The committee in charge is confidently looking forward to the 1924 School being the largest in the history of this undertaking. Courses will be offered as follows: Courses in Religious Education—"The English Bible," "The Prayer Book," "Church Doctrine," Child Psychology, Religious Pedagogy, Training of the Devotional Life, Church School Ideals, Coaching in all of the Courses of the Christian Nurture Series, and the American Church School Lessons. Courses in Missions—Coaching in the Study Book of the Woman's Auxiliary, How to Train the Mission of the Church, the Church School Service League, Conferences for the Junior Auxiliary and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Young People's Work, two courses, one for the Young People, and another for the councilors and leaders of young people, besides the daily Young People's Meeting. A course in Social Service in the Parish. A conference each day for the clergy. Mass meetings with special speakers, will be held each evening in the chapel. Devotional meeting held twice daily, and each afternoon given over to recreation. The committee believes that the School this next summer will offer great help to those who are interested in the work of the Church. The faculty has not yet been entirely procured, but will be the best that the Church can offer. Those interested in further particulars are requested to write to the Rev. J. F. Ribble, D. D., Richmond, Va., the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Petersburg, Va., or the Rev. Karl Block, Roanoke, Va.

National Student Council To Hold Conference.

The Rev. Paul Micou and Miss Agnes M. Hall, of the Department of Religious Education, are making a series of visits to the colleges in the Province of Sewanee. Between them they will visit thirty-five of the colleges, universities and normal schools in the Province. It is Miss Hall's first visit to these colleges, and though Mr. Micou has been to a number of them in the past, it is the first time that any real effort has been made to systematically visit all of the colleges in the Province of Sewanee.

Following the visits to these various institutions, the members of the National Student Council are going to hold a Provincial Conference at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee, March 28 to 30. This Conference is going to be particularly interesting because the students of the Province of the Southwest are going to travel long distances in order to join with the students of the Province of Sewanee in a conference. Since the gathering is to be at the great historic center of the life of our Church in the South, it should promise great things for all the life of our Church students who will be gathered there.

Coming Conferences for Church Workers.

The following information concerning the major Conferences and Summer Schools for Church Workers has been collected by the Inter-Conference Committee, with the hope that people throughout the Church will give it serious thought.

These Conferences and Summer Schools are carried on for: First, the purpose of stimulating devotional life—through services, lectures, and where desired, private instruction; second, increasing knowledge of the Church—what she is, her Divine origin and history—through courses on the Bible, Prayer Book and Church History; third, training for all the practical work of the Church; done under the Departments of the National Council, the Service League and other national organizations, and in various other ways. The Council sends its own expert instructors, including as far as possible, the heads of the departments, to all the conferences. All this instruction is given principally with the object of supplying the Church with one of her most pressing needs—Leaders in all kinds of work; but those not training for leadership will be welcome, too, at all the Conferences, so far as there is room for them.

College students and the older members of the Young People's Fellowships and Societies, are particularly desired by the Conferences, for it is largely to them that the Church must look for her future leaders and instructors. Leaders should be made from young people with trained, intelligent minds, and a great desire "to serve God with their minds," as well as their souls and bodies. Older people who are, or have been, leaders in Church work, even though now retired, are also of great value to the Conferences if they are willing to share the knowledge learned through experience and faithful service.

The Conference for Church Work, now held at Wellesley College, is a General Conference, being entirely under the direction of its own committee. It is held for the benefit of the whole Church, not for any particular section. One of its special and valuable features is the large number of missionaries from all over the world who attend.

Geneva-Princeton, Sewanee, Racine, and Concord, are all Provincial Conferences, whose governing committees are chosen by the Provincial Synods. People from beyond their own Provinces are always welcome, as they are at all Conferences.

Sioux Falls, Gambier and Hillsdale are Diocesan and Inter-Diocesan. Oregon hopes to become Diocesan.

Wellesley is close to Boston, through which many people pass on their way to Sea and Mountains. Racine is only eighty miles from Chicago and not far from Wisconsin and Michigan Lake resorts, and can be reached easily and quickly from any of these places. Geneva is accessible to the northern and western parts of the second Province, full of summer resorts, and Princeton is equally accessible to the eastern and southern parts. Sewanee is within easy reach of the Southern mountains, and Sioux Falls takes care of the Sixth Province. Oregon might be combined with a trip to Alaska, or the Rocky Mountains. The Diocesan Conferences are also convenient to many delightful summer places. It would be well for the Church people who expect to be within reach of any of the conferences next summer to combine attendance at them with whatever outing they may be planning, for in no other way can they gain a greater knowledge of the whole life of the Church; nor is there any better way of learning how to serve her Master through work for her.

Inspiration, good fellowship, instruction by the greatest teachers of the Church, music and pageantry, and much delightful recreation, are to be had at all the Conferences and Summer Schools.

Dates, and names and addresses of persons to whom to apply for further information are as follows:

Wellesley, June 23-July 3, Miss M. DeC. Ward, 415 Beacon St., Boston.

Geneva-Princeton, June 30-July 11, Mrs. Gerald Lewis, Beacon, N. Y.

Mr. John W. Lethaby, General Field Secretary, will take the following; with Archdeacon White:

Delphi, Ind., March 21-26.

Goshen, Ind., March 26.

Huntington, Ind., March 27.

Peru, Ind., March 28.

Warsaw, Ind., March 30-April 3.

South Bend, Ind., April 4-5.

Chicago, Ill., April 10.

The dates are given so that those interested may know the itinerary.

Archdeacon White will be present at all but the Chicago Mission.

The prayers of Church people are asked for these Missions.

America's Orphan Wards.

Dr. James L. Barton, Secretary of the American Board and Chairman of the Near East Relief, recently made the following statement in the daily press:

Many inquiries indicate a widespread misunderstanding about the present needs of the Near East Relief.

In round numbers there are some 50,000 children, with no known relatives, dependent for shelter, clothing, food, and life upon that organization. To close the doors against them now, unaided and unprotected, would be paramount to condemning them to penury or death or to something even worse. These children are in a land of extreme poverty, crowded with the poor and destitute and starving. To close the orphanages now would turn into the streets these wards of America who live today because of the loving sympathy of the people of America.

As rapidly as possible these children are being graduated into self-support, but, until then, American philanthropy must not fail, and I am sure it will not. If it materially falls off, the process of expulsion must begin.

Warning.

A man calling himself Charles Mitchell, of 9901 Market St., San Francisco, Cal., and claiming my friendship and also membership in the Actors' Church Alliance has been victimizing our clergy of the Middle West by obtaining money under false pretences. His stage name is Murphy and he is a black-face comedian about five feet six, heavy set and with a ruddy complexion. He also claims membership in St. Paul's Church, San Francisco. I have never heard of him before and I hope the next rector he tries to wheedle out of money will hand him over to the proper authorities.

Death of the Rev. S. H. Woodford.

The Rev. Sidney H. Woodford, for more than half a century a minister of this Diocese, died Sunday, March 16, at the Good Samaritan Hospital, following a brief illness. He was eighty-one years of age.

Ordained in the ministry in La Crosse, Wis., December 17, 1865, by Bishop Kemper, Mr. Woodford was well known in the Church on account of his missionary activities. At the time of his retirement he occupied the charge at Orange, Cal.

Funeral services were conducted Wednesday afternoon from St. John's Church, in charge of Bishop Johnson. Burial was in Hollywood Cemetery.

He leaves three daughters, Mary B. Woodford, Detroit; Fannie B. Woodford, Los Angeles, and Mrs. Margaret Reike, Oceanside, and two sons, Henry E. and Samuel A. Woodford, of Detroit and Los Angeles, respectively.

Mr. Woodford was living in San Diego, when he was seized by his last illness.

Bible Classes Organized.

St. Matthew's Church, Enid, has just added a Men's Bible Class to the roll of those in the State. The class was formed at the recent Men's Dinner, when the guest of the evening was the Executive Secretary. Some thirty-four men have signed up and it is expected there will be an average attendance of fifty. The rector of the church is the Rev. Charles K. Weller, brother of Bishop Weller, and a most enthusiastic worker among his men.

The Rev. Joseph Carden, the new rector of St. Philip's, Ardmore, reports to the Executive Office the formation of a splendid Men's Bible Class in his parish. Fifteen men are enrolled and the attendance and interest of the men is growing.

Another Bible Class recently formed and at work is the one at St. Paul's, Holdenville. The Hon. Frank L. Warren, and Mr. Dudley Buell, are the teachers. Mr. Trigg Lesueur, manager of the Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company, is the President and Mr. Stephen S. Allen, the Secretary.

Another Parish House is now under way in Oklahoma. The people of St. Luke's Church, Ada, one of the splendid towns in this state, are rejoiced in that construction has started on their new "workshop" and it is hoped to have it completed before Lent is over. The Rev. Charles L. Widney is the clergyman in charge.

The Church in Oklahoma records the death of one of its finest laymen, in the passing into life eternal of Mr. George W. Brandon, of St. John's Church, Oklahoma City, the Rev. Franklin Davis, rector. He was always at the Church's services and interested in every program of the Church's work, both locally and abroad. Counted as one of the leaders in the Men's Dinner Club and in the Men's Bible Class, his place will be hard to fill. In his devotion and leadership the boys of the parish have a splendid example.

VIRGINIA.

Rt Rev W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Death of Dr. W. D. Powers.

The Rev. William Dudley Powers, D. D., for many years a prominent clergyman in the South, died on March 24, at his home in Richmond. He had served rectorships in Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Alabama, Georgia and Virginia, and was the author of a number of books of theological interest. As Secretary of the American Church Missionary Society, he was prominently connected with the founding of the Church's work in Brazil and Cuba.

Dr. Powers was born in Richmond, and, as a lad of fourteen, served in the Confederate Army. He was educated at the University of the South, and was ordained by his uncle, Bishop Dudley of Kentucky. For the last eight years he has been inactive, due to ill health.

Funeral services were held in Monumental Church March 25, conducted by the Rev. George Mayo, the rector, the Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., and the Rev. Philip A. Arthur. Dr. Powers is survived by his wife, a daughter, Mrs. Dudley Powers Page, and a sister, Mrs. William A. Powers, all of Richmond.

Unusual Congregations.

The attendance at the Mid-day Lenten services held in St. Paul's Church, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Richmond Clericus, have been unusually large this year. Bishop Brown, who generally opens these services on the Thursday and Friday after Ash-Wednesday, was unexpectedly called out of the city, and got Bishop Collins Denny, of the Methodist Church to take his place. The second week Dr. W. Russell Bowie was the preacher, and the church was crowded to its full capacity every day. Dr. Hugh Black came for the following week, and again the numbers required many to stand for lack of seats. Bishop Woodcock, of Kentucky, has always been popular with Richmond Church people, and many have crowded St. Paul's to hear his message.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Founder's Day at the Church of the Holy Communion.

It is now an established custom in the Church of the Holy Communion, located at Sixth Avenue and Twentieth Street, New York, to set apart the fourth Sunday in Lent (this year March 30) for the observance of Founder's Day in commemoration of the life and work of the Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, D. D., who established the first Church school in this country, St. Paul's School, College Point, New York; the first free Church, that of this Church of the Holy Communion; the first Church hospital, Saint Luke's; and that nineteenth century Utopia, Saint Johnland.

The observance of this day consists of a great festival service, and a sermon delivered by a select preacher, who sets forth some special characteristic of the founder, and a corresponding achievement of his life.

This year the man chosen is the Rev. James Alan Montgomery, D. D., Professor and lecturer in the University of Pennsylvania, and in the Philadelphia Divinity School. He began his ministry in this church, and he is deeply imbued with the Muhlenberg spirit.

Because Dr. Muhlenberg has his recognized place among American educators, all the local institutions of higher learning will be represented at this service.

Being the father of the Movement for Church Unity, all the different religious communions will send delegations.

He made this the first institutional church, and he organized systematized charity; therefore, many of the philanthropic societies will, by their presence, render homage to his memory on this occasion.

This church of his founding is now on a substantial financial footing, and gives promise to bear witness to the greatness of this man of God, just as long as New York remains on Manhattan Island.

St. John's Church, Larchmont.

In the Parish House of St. John's Church, Larchmont, the Rev. F. J. H. Coffin, rector, the rifle range has been rebuilt and furnished with the most complete and up-to-date equipment. Several rifle corps units are being formed for children and for grown people under the direction of Captain Geo. S. Towle. Rifle units from this parish have won national trophies in the past.

On the third Sunday of the month, the local chapters of the Daughters of the King, and of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew hold a corporate communion. Frequently this is followed by a Brotherhood Breakfast in the Parish House, cooked and served by Brotherhood men.

Since the introduction of the duplex envelopes in the Sunday School the weekly offerings of the School have increased over three hundred per cent.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.
Bishop.

To Establish a College of Preachers.

A revival of preaching and a college of preachers will be instituted by the Washington Cathedral shortly, if plans already under way by the National Cathedral Foundation are carried out. Believing that the protection of organized society and the rescue of Christ's religion may only be accomplished by the mobilization of all Christian forces, a Revival of Preaching in the Twentieth Century, with a twentieth century message by great preachers of the Faith, will be begun by the National Cathedral. In an address before the Cathedral Foundation recently it was pointed out that this is peculiarly the work of the Cathedral and that the parish church cannot within its domain carry to the thousands of unchurched people in factory, mine, and other fields of labor, the message which they have neglected to seek from the parish church. The Church must go to them, whether in auditoriums, baseball grounds, university stadia, or amphitheatres. As a first step men of reputation as great preachers will go forth to preach in great industrial and educational centers. These will be under the direction of a great leader at the Cathedral, where a college of preachers will be installed and where these preachers may return frequently for renewed strength necessary, after so much output of physical and spiritual strength, as is given by a great preacher, who moves great audiences.

This Revival of Preaching will have as its sole aim the lifting up anew before men's eyes of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in such a way that men will be moved to definitely come out for Christ and express their devotion and loyalty and church membership as their minds and conscience shall direct. No direct endeavor to bring them into a particular church will be made and great preachers, messengers and prophets, from other communions will be given an opportunity to take part in this great work. "Convinced that the permanent security and prosperity of this country rests upon a revival of Christian faith and morals; convinced that the spoken word rather than the written word is the power which alone as history proves can reach effectively the men and women outside the church, and in the hope that the Washington Cathedral may serve as a power-house for the spiritual life of the Church and the nation, the National Cathedral Foundation seeks to perform this service for Christianity in America through its College of Preachers."

A striking development in the use of the radio and an experiment which promises to prove of value to the Church, is the plan adopted by the Cathedral of the Diocese of Easton, Pa., whereby a radio outfit with high power amplifier enables the congregation there to unite with the services of the Washington Cathedral on Sunday afternoons. It is predicted that other churches will do the same thing and that the Washington Cathedral at the capital of the nation will ultimately become a center of the Church's life. The preacher at the Cathedral Sunday afternoon services is usually Bishop Freeman of Washington, and in his absence from the city, distinguished preachers from elsewhere are brought in to preach the sermons.

The Rt. Rev. John Poyntz Tyler, Bishop of North Dakota, began his itinerary of the Washington churches on Sunday, March 23, by visiting Grace Church, Silver Spring and Christ Church, Washington, at the morning and evening services. Every day during the week he addressed congregations at the different churches, and will continue his visits through March 31. At each of these services Bishop Tyler is speaking on the missionary situation in the Church and especially that part of it which has to do with the missionary work within the borders of the United States.

Bishop Tyler was the guest of the Laymen's Service Association at a special meeting on Monday evening, March 24, at Epiphany Parish Hall.

The Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., Missionary Bishop of North Tokyo, visited Washington during the past week and preached at Ascension Church on Sunday evening, March 23.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

St. Mark's, Brunswick.

Lectures on the History of the Church have been given by the rector of St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, the Rev. J. W. Fulford, during Lent. A preaching and teaching mission will be held in this parish by the Bishop of Alabama, the last week in March. An institute for Church School teachers was held in this parish March 21 and 22, with one session Friday night and three on Saturday, conducted by Mrs. J. W. Griffith, a member of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Noon-Day Services Well Attended.

The noon-day Lenten services being given in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, this year, under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, have been characterized by great enthusiasm and by an unprecedented large attendance. On Ash Wednesday, when Bishop Mann made the address, the three galleries were filled as well as the body of the church, and many stood throughout the service. On the three ensuing days of that week, the addresses were made by the clergy of Trinity Church, the Rev. Dr. Kammerer, rector, and the Rev. Messrs. Lauderburn and Krantz. During the week beginning March 10, the speaker was the Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearley, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Newark. During the week of March 17, the addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester, of Boston.

Quiet Day: On Friday, March 14, the Rev. Dr. Budlong, of the Church of the Ascension, held a Quiet Day for the Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, in the Church of the Ascension. All who were privileged to attend were much impressed with the deep spirituality that was a prominent feature of the exercises.

The Rt. Rev. John Poyntz Tyler, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota, spent a week in Pittsburgh, as a representative of the National Council who had asked him to spend the month of March giving information of the work of the Church in general, and more particularly of what was being done in his jurisdiction in the Far West. The week was full of appointments, on some days the Bishop making as many as three addresses in the churches of Pittsburgh and its outlying towns, such as McKeesport, Monessen, Oakmont, etc. He divided his time amongst the Dioceses of Chicago, Pittsburgh, Easton and Washington.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearley, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Mission Established.

A new mission is established in a portable chapel at Haworth, on the West Shore R. R., to be associated with Bergenfield and Dumont, under the Rev. William J. White. The missions are near the site of Camp Merritt, from which more soldiers went to the war than from any other one camp.

St. Andrew's Church, South Orange, has lost in the death of Mr. Robert Y. Hebden, Senior Warden, an outstanding layman. He was the New York representative of the Bank of Montreal, a man commanding a high position in business and a very devoted servant of the Church.

The appointment of Hon. Charles W. Parker, of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, as Chancellor of the Diocese, to succeed Mr. William Read Howe, is announced. Mr. Parker, like his father, Mr. Courtlandt Parker, a great layman of the Diocese, and like his brother, Hon. R. Wayne Parker, for eighteen years a member of Congress, recently deceased, is a distinguished lawyer with large knowledge of the Diocese and very genuine interest in its welfare.

The arrangements for the observance of the Semi-Centennial of the organization of the Diocese in November next are being made with very real interest. An endeavor will be made to induce every parish or mission church in debt, to reduce or remove the same, and parishes not in debt to mark the year with some generous undertaking.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Lenten Services Largely Attended.

From all over the Diocese come good reports of the Lenten services held in the different parishes and missions. The interest and attendance is splendid. St. Stephen's parish, Wilkes-Barre, for the first time is holding noon-day services with good results. St. Luke's, Scranton, is one of the pioneers in holding such services. The attendance this year is larger than any previous record.

Mr. Nicolas Gentile, of West Bangor, was cruelly murdered on his land, on Wednesday, March 18. Mr. Gentile was the founder of West Bangor. It is an Italian settlement, well developed. He gave the land for our church, St. Joseph's, as well as for a cemetery. He was the nestor of all the country around for his people.

A tremendous concourse of people attended the funeral services. They came from Wind Gap, Rosetto, Bangor, Easton, Bethlehem, etc. Americans and Italians in almost equal number. The Rev. F. C. Capozzi and the Archdeacon of the Diocese conducted the services.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Special Supply During Lent.

Bishop Jett has secured the services of the Rev. W. T. Snead temporarily, in order that he may give services, during the Lenten season, at several of the churches in the Diocese, which are at present without rectors. Some of the places at which Mr. Snead is holding services are Glasgow, Buena Vista, Bristol, Abingdon and St. Peter's Church, Roanoke. Mr. Snead is a native of Eastern Virginia, a Virginia Seminary man, and has for some years been connected with the Diocese of New Jersey. It is expected that he will bring much help to the churches, which he is temporarily serving.

Missionary to Deaf People.

For some years past the Rev. Henry J. Pulver has been serving as missionary to the deaf within the Province of Washington, acting under a Provincial Committee, which obtained a considerable part of its revenues from special private subscriptions for this purpose. Beginning January 1, 1924, the financial policy in regard to this work has been entirely changed and the several dioceses as such have become responsible for the salary of the missionary; each making an appropriation proportionate to its ability and needs. Thus a contribution is made by the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, and the Rev. Mr. Pulver will minister as he is able to the deaf people within the bounds of this diocese.

While no direct appeal is being made, if any individuals or organizations in this Diocese who have in the past made voluntary contributions to this work, desire to continue to do so, their gifts will be much appreciated and gratefully received as assistance to the Diocese in carrying its share of this work.

Stuart Hall Acquires Property.

The Board of Trustees of Stuart Hall, Staunton, recently purchased from Dr. T. M. Parkins a lot adjoining their present property, which will constitute a valuable addition thereto. While no building project is in immediate prospect, it is hoped that an additional unit may be erected in the not far distant future.

Stuart Hall is making excellent progress under Mrs. H. N. Hills, its Principal.

Bright Prospects at Appalachia.

Since going to Big Stone Gap, in the summer of 1923, the Rev. Claudius F. Smith has taken a special interest in an effort to organize an Episcopal congregation in the thriving and important town of Appalachia. His efforts are bearing fruit in the most gratifying way, especially in the development of interest among the local people, who are giving him splendid cooperation. Recently a lot was purchased for the erection of a church. As a temporary proposition, the building now on the property will be remodeled for use as a church, and later, as the work progresses, a permanent church building will be erected.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop.

Mission at Trinity Church, Aurora.

Trinity Church, Aurora, Ill. (the Rev. Benj. E. Chapman, rector), just closed a very successful mission on Sunday, the twenty-fourth of February. The Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D., was the missionary. He held two services daily, his meditations at the morning services being especially helpful. The evening sermons were forceful, logical and persuading.

Several people signified their intentions of being confirmed and some who had been out of the church for years came back to communion. Most of all it has encouraged and strengthened the working forces of the parish.

The feature of the publicity campaign was that two laymen did all the work on it. They sent out a series of letters before Dr. Clark came, and, after his arrival, considerable personal work was done in an organized way previous to and during the eight days' campaign.

OREGON.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Sumner, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocesan Convention.

The thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese met at St. Stephen's Pro-Cathedral on January 30-31, all the clergy of the diocese being present, with a goodly number of lay representatives. The Bishop's address showed marked physical progress in the Diocese during the past year.

Mr. Edward Strong, a lay expert, presented and explained a plan to raise $100,000 to endow the episcopate, which had been under study and preparation for more than a year. The Convention adopted the plan, no one dissenting.

Mr. A. W. Stone read the report of the Board of Religious Education, which called for a decided revision of attitude toward, and increase of faith in the task given to the Board by the Convention. After a presentation of the matter the Committee voted to increase the budget to provide the amount asked for by the Board—$1,000.

Significant was the adoption of the budget, which carried with it a thorough revision of the missionary methods of the diocese. From now on each Mission will be required to pay certain specified sums for salary, assessment, and missionary work instead of one general and undefined amount. This has met with unusual favor among the Missions, and it is believed the Diocese will do better under this plan.

The elections to the Standing Committee were Dean Ramsey, the Rev. Thomas Jenkins and the Rev. E. T. Simpson; Messrs. Josephi, Huggins and Glisan.

Delegates to Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Jenkins, Couper, Black, Chambers and Messrs. Flixott, Josephi, Bliss and Hastings.

The Social Service Commission put through the Convention a resolution which pledged the diocese to a united effort in behalf of a stricter marriage law in this state. In particular that of requiring fifteen days to elapse between application for and issuance of a license, during which time publicity shall be given.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese has so far realized its ambition, by giving three days to its Annual Session, where it used only to give one. It opened on February 29. From the branches throughout the diocese the attendance was excellent, and the reports revealed the broad activities of the Auxiliary. The Bishop was celebrant at the opening service and the Rev. Mr. Simmonds was the preacher. Mrs. Wilston Johnston was again elected as Diocesan President, and Mrs. James Muckle as United Thank Offering Treasurer, in place of Mrs. W. J. Burns.

EAST CAROLINA.

Dedicate New Parish House in Wilmington.

The very handsome and commodious parish house, recently completed for St. James' Church, Wilmington, was dedicated on the evening of March 5, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina. The rector of St. James, the Rev. Wm. H. Milton, D. D., had as guests on this occasion a number of rectors of near-by churches. Following the service, there was an informal reception in the parish house, which was thrown open for inspection. Three tableaux, "The Church at Work," were presented in the assembly room, and a number of musical selections rendered. Of great significance is the fact that this parish house, which is the third unit of the beautiful St. James' plant, was built without any campaign whatever. When it became known that it was desired the gifts came in spontaneously.

The Lenten Offering.

The Diocese of East Carolina, which last year raised the sum of $3,157.24 for the Lenten offering of the Church School children, has this year set out to raise $6,000, quite a healthy increase. Each school in the Diocese has been given a quota based on the diocesan quota. At a recent meeting of the Department of Religious Education, presided over by the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., it was decided to challenge the children to raise this amount, and it has met with a ready response. In addition to this, East Carolina will again have the Lenten Self-Denial Offering for the adults, and the amount contributed will be devoted to the work of the National Council.

St. Andrew's Mission, Morehead City, has been formally organized by Bishop Darst. A portable chapel, erected during the war near the shipyards in Wilmington and since come into disuse, has been moved to Morehead City, and the Mission congregation is now worshipping there. The Rev. George W. Lay, rector of St. Paul's, Beaufort, is minister in charge.

A number of Preaching Missions are being conducted in East Carolina during Lent. The Rev. F. D. Dean has closed a very successful ten-day mission in St. Gabriel's, Faison, and the Rev. James E. W. Cook is just beginning one at St. James, Bellhaven. The Rev. J. A. Schaad, National Missioner, is to be with St. John's Church, Wilmington, during Holy Week.

Campaign for Virginia Seminary: The alumni of the Virginia Seminary in East Carolina have conducted a very quiet campaign in the Diocese to raise its share of the endowment fund now being sought. Bishop Darst is chairman of the campaign, and the Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr., is secretary. The people of St. Paul's, Edenton, were notably generous. In that parish, where the rector is an alumnus of another Seminary, the sum of $2,125 was raised in less than a day.

St. John's Church, Wilmington, is to have a number of prominent visiting Lenten preachers. These include the Rev. John Hartley, of St. Mary's, Kingston; the Rev. B. E. Brown, of Calvary, Tarboro; the Rev. Wm. H. Milton, of St. James, Wilmington; and the Rev. W. E. Cox, of the Holy Comforter, Richmond, Va. Mr. Cox is a former rector of St. John's.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation of the District.

The newly-consecrated Bishop of Spokane, the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, arrived in time to conduct the thirty-second annual convocation of the District of Spokane, which was held in All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, February 27 to 29.

Neighboring Bishops who came to welcome Bishop Cross to the Northwest were the Rt. Rev. W. T. Sumner, D. D., of Portland, Bishop of Oregon; the Rt. Rev. B. H. H. Fox, D. D., of Billings, Suffragan Bishop of Montana; and the Rt. Rev. Charles de V. Schofield, D. D., of Victoria, B. C., Bishop of British Columbia. The District of Eastern Oregon was represented by Mrs. W. F. Remington, wife of the Bishop, and Archdeacon Goldie. Greetings to the Bishop and Convocation were received from the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, formerly of Spokane.

A dinner was given in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Cross on the evening of Wednesday, February 27, with about two hundred present. The toastmaster was the Rev. Bertram A. Warren of Walla Walla, who introduced as speakers the three visiting Bishops, Mrs. Remington and Bishop Cross.

On the following evening, February 28, a reception was given for the new Bishop and his wife in the parish house of All Saints' Cathedral.

The most important business of the convocation, outside of routine work, was the stand taken in regard to the Nation-Wide Campaign; it was the sense of the convocation that a pledge by any parish or mission in the campaign should be regarded as a financial obligation. Also that use of campaign money for any other purpose was a misuse of funds. The closing day of convocation was Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Cross is the honorary president, and Mrs. Frank Atkinson was reelected president.

Bishop and Mrs. Cross are coming to a difficult field, but they have already made a place for themselves in the hearts of the people of the District of Spokane. They expect to come West permanently after the first of June.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that we, who for our evil deeds do worthily deserve to be punished by the comfort of Thy grace, may mercifully be relieved, through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Lambs of the Flock.

Behold the lambkins of the fold
Led forth in Spring's young weather,
While fields are clad in white and gold,
And winds blow hither—thither;—
How joyfully they skip and run,
Like playmates of the breeze and sun!

O little lambkins, seeing ye
In all your springtime gladness,
I think of other lambs, and see
A vision of their sadness:
Poor lambs to whom the smile of Spring
No blessed messages can bring.

In dismal city, court, and street,
They soil their baby-whiteness;
The waves of sin that round them beat
Have stolen all their brightness:—
And yet the Shepherd's lovings care,
Can seek and find them even there!

We know not when, we know not how,
But pray this Shepherd tender
That He will cleanse each baby-brow,
And be each babe's Defender,—
That He will save from mire and rock
The helpless lambkins of His flock.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Woes Denounced in the Temple.

By the Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord, in response to a great insult, had denounced the Scribes and Pharisees in Perea. That great denunciation and certain lesser ones, as when they said He had a devil and when they faulted the Apostles for eating with unwashed hands, rose in His mind, for His speech has reminiscences of all. Criticism seems snarled into inextricable confusion. All becomes simple if Jesus could mention the same thing twice. Really, when an able orator sums up the same case against the same people, he naturally mentions the same facts. They ARE facts. Why suppress them?

Our Lord's denunciation of the Pharisees is an impassioned lyric with a regularly recurring refrain, at the beginning of each stanza. To an inexperienced critic it seems highly artificial; yet that objection is seldom or never advanced by agnostic writers. Most men have heard some one lifted beyond him or her self in a rhapsody of passionate denunciation, and know that such speech falls naturally into lyric form. Even the ballad-refrain is profoundly natural. A man says something and it starts him off, and in a minute he comes back and says the same thing again and it starts him off again, and so on indefinitely. Our Lord began:

"But woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."

This is true spiritually, as acres of comment point out. We turn, therefore, from its spiritual to its external meaning. John Baptist provided a visible method of preparing for the Kingdom of Heaven by public confession of sin and by baptism with water. The Scribes and Pharisees as a class utterly repudiated confession of sin, and, therefore, kept away and persuaded others to keep away from Baptism. Our Lord continued Baptism with a change of purpose. It was with the Spirit as well as with water; and it did not prepare for, but actually admitted into, the kingdom. Whatever spiritual meanings we give to the saying, therefore—and they are many—the historical meaning remains that there was a method provided for entering the kingdom and this the Scribes and Pharisees, as a class, refused and dissuaded others from taking. They believed Jesus insane, demonized. They believed the foundation on which baptism was based the sinfulness of man—untrue. They believed that, being children of Abraham, they would inherit the kingdom anyhow, and that baptism was, for them, unnecessary. We do not mean to deny the great esoteric meanings of the saying, but we emphasize the forgotten historical fact which gets lost in spiritualizing. Whatever other and greater things may be true, this also is true, that the Scribes and Pharisees deliberately refused the preparation for entry into the Kingdom offered them. Our Lord is not talking about heathen who never heard of baptism, or children who could not arrange their own baptism. They were educated men, to whom baptism had been offered and who had refused it, holding it unnecessary. They would not go in themselves and they persuaded others not to go in.

The criticism of Christendom is unable to find anywhere in the Bible the statement of the damnation of the unbaptized. Men have held it, great Churches have held it; but not from Scripture, but from their own reasoning. The unbaptized shall not enter into the Kingdom; but reasonable men differ as to what the Kingdom is, and exclusion from the Kingdom is not necessarily damnation. But that educated men to whom baptism is offered and who refuse it, knowing its origin and the claims made for it and disbelieving them, that such are condemned, the criticism of Christendom for nineteen centuries has found no way to deny. The condemnation may spring, not from lack of an external rite, but from spiritual unbelief. So be it. But a man cannot, in good faith, believe without being baptized at once, as a consequence of that belief.

As to the other count—preventing others from going in—we dare not speak. With God such things He. Our Lord went on:

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses and for a pretense make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."

They would be damned anyhow, for devouring widows' houses; but that damnation will be greater because, for a pretense, they make long prayers. Take a bank cashier who becomes Sunday-school superintendent to divert attention from his embezzlements and a capitalist who becomes deacon to conceal buying real estate in the redlight district. The cashier will be damned anyhow for the embezzlement; the capitalist will be damned anyhow for the investment; but because of the added polish each has put on his crime by the pretense of religion, an added number of stripes will be his. The best men in the world are prominent church members, for love of Christ. The worst men in the world may be also prominent church members. However bad a man is, he becomes worse if he takes up religion as a mask to hide wrongdoing.

The saying furnishes a side-light on prayer. The Pharisees made long prayers which were, for them, increase of sin. Some of those prayers—as, for instance, the one for the restoration of the glory to Israel—were sincere. We deduce, therefore, that it is possible to make long and sincere prayers which are an added sin. This is avoided by making all private prayer in private. If, when you pray, you enter into your closet and shut the door, this danger ceases. It does not apply to public worship. Our Lord never faulted the Pharisees for attending Temple-service or even the Synagogues, but for private prayer advertised and made public.

When a widow is turned out of her house somebody is damned. As a practical business deduction, it is well to avoid real-estate mortgages on the property of widows. The deal may be quite correct, the widow may lose through her own business folly; but if the widow once had a home and now has none, somebody is damned for it. See that it be not you. Our Lord went on:

"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves."

Converts always make extremists. Still, the lack of moderation concerning them which Our Lord shows in the phrase "Child of hell" is startling. It is parallel with John Baptist's "Generation of vipers." The attitude of John Baptist and Our Lord toward Scribes and Pharisees is either Oriental exaggeration or sober statement of fact. What underlying thing made this generation of Scribes and Pharisees so much more sinful than other men? Information would be valuable, for a warning.

Scribes and Pharisees, while religious teachers, were not Levites or Priests. The authoritative clergy were of the tribe of Levi. They had become inefficient as religious teachers. Not from doing wrong but from leaving right undone, not from wrong fire but from lack of any fire at all, they proved unable to lead and had been shoved aside. The Scribes and Pharisees were degenerate successors of the Prophets, not of the Priests, of the Judges, not of the tribe of Levi. When Our Lord took part in the Synagogue services he sanctioned a worship organized by laymen for laymen, having its nearest modern parallel in the Protestant bodies which arose from the Reformation. When He said that Scribes and Phari-

For the Young Folks

For the Southern Churchman. Little Blue Violet.

Alice B. Joynes.

Little blue violet opened her eyes,
After her long winter's sleep.
She opened her eyes on morning in spring.
And from her green leaves did peep.

Violet had slept a long, long time,
Hidden down under the snow;
Now she thought it was time to awake
And try once more to grow.

What did she see when she opened her eyes,
This beautiful morning in spring?
She saw the birds were also awake,
And trying their best to sing.

Then little blue violet said to herself,
"I'll show them that I, too, am here."
And she grew and grew as fast as she could,
And soon many others were there.

Then the birdies looked down from the branch above,
And louder and louder did sing.
They said, "Surely winter has left us at last,
If the violets are here, it is spring!"

Only His Mother.

Charlie Holland, at your service. A well-dressed, well-mannered pleasant-faced boy. You feel sure you would like him. Everybody who sees him feels just so.

"His mother must be proud of him," is a sentence often on people's lips. Look at him now, as he lifts his hat politely, in answer to a call from an open window.

"Charlie," says the voice, "I wonder if I could get you to mail this letter for me? Are you going near the post office?"

"Near enough to be able to serve you, Mrs. Hampstead," says the polite voice. "I will do it with pleasure."

"I shall be very much obliged, Charlie. I wouldn't want to make you late to school on that account."

"Oh! no danger at all, Mrs. Hampstead. It will not take two minutes to dash around the corner to the office." And, as he receives the letter, his hat is again lifted politely.

"What a perfect little gentleman Charlie Holland is," says Mrs. Hampstead to her sister, as the window closes. "Always so obliging. He acts as if it were a pleasure to him to do a kindness."

Bend lower, and let me whisper a secret in your ear. It is not five minutes since that boy's mother said to him, "Charlie, can't you run upstairs and get that letter on my bureau, and mail it for me?" And Charlie, with three wrinkles on his forehead, and a pucker on each side of his mouth, replied, "O, Mamma! I don't see how I can. I'm late now; and the office is half a block out of my way."

And the mother said, "Well, then, you needn't mind, for I don't want you to be late to school." So he didn't mind, but left the letter on the bureau, and went briskly on his way, until stopped by Mrs. Hampstead.

What is the matter with Charlie Holland? Is he an untruthful boy? He does not mean to be. He claims to be strictly honest.

But it was growing late, and he felt in a hurry, and he hated to go upstairs. Of course, it would not do to refuse Mrs. Hampstead, and by making an extra rush, he could get to school in time; but the other lady was only his mother. Her letter could wait.

"Only his mother!" Doesn't Charlie Holland love his mother, then?

You ask him, with a hint of doubt about it in your voice, and see how his eyes will flash, and how he will toss back his handsome head, and say:

"I guess I do love my mother. She's the grandest mother a boy ever had."

Oh! I didn't promise to explain Charlie's conduct to you: I am simply introducing him; you are to study for yourselves. Do you know any boy like him?—Selected.

Little Peter.

Among grandma's pets was Little Peter, and he was called "Little Peter" because he was so pink and white, and such a wee little pig, for Peter was grandma's little pet pig.

His real home was under the barn, where his mother and father and his brothers and sisters lived, grew fat, and seemed very happy. But Peter could not be happy in such a home (I suppose it was too dirty for this little dainty pig), so he found a way of getting out, and wandered about among the flowers and bushes, and often went down in the meadow, but somehow he never got dirty; he was always a spotless white pig.

Very often Sam, grandma's colored man, would catch him and take him home to his mother under the barn, but every time Peter would get out, and would soon be up around the house.

At last grandma said: "Oh, let him stay out. He will take care of himself," and he certainly did.

At night he would hide under some of the bushes, and all day he would wander about. Sometimes he would even come into the kitchen and get something to eat, and the cook never was cross with him, because she said he was so quiet, and when he did give a grunt it was a quiet one. Often we would see grandma walking in the garden with Peter the pig, Captain the dog, and Jerry the big yellow cat, close at her side, and she said she always enjoyed her walks when they were with her. Each would answer her in his different way, and they were always very polite and sociable.

One day little Peter wandered a long way from home, into the garden of one of the neighbors, and after a while he came to the house and climbed up the steps to the piazza.

Now it happened that Mrs. Mann, our kind neighbor, was having a ladies' sewing circle, and Peter, hearing the voices and the laughter, was quite curious to know all about it, for he was a very friendly little pig, and as the window came down quite to the floor of the piazza, he could stand up on his hind legs and easily see into the room. How long he had been there no one knows, but one of the ladies happened to see him, and exclaimed: "O Mrs. Mann, what is that at the window? Do look quick!" And of course every one did look, and such a peal of laughter came from them all that poor little Peter was dreadfully frightened, and home he ran just as fast as his little legs would take him. Grandma saw him running and jumping down the terraces where sees (not Priests) sit in Moses' seat, he endorsed as the supreme religious authority a religious organization, which rose because the Priests had not taught the people. The whole establishment of Synagogue worship came because Priests of the tribe of Levi had proven themselves inefficient in teaching the word of God. Their organization, beautifully adapted to a little nation living at home in prosperity, had broken down when applied to a great nation scattered all over the civilized world. Therefore men not belonging to the tribe of Levi, laymen without priestly authority, filled the gap and taught the people God's law out of God's Book. Christ joined the worship they organized and said they sat in Moses' seat. It was Divine endorsement of an efficient Protestantism as against an inefficient Catholicity.

This being so, He yet called Scribe Pharisee and Convert "Children of Hell." Why? He indorsed the principle and condemned at least one generation of those who upheld and stood for the principle. Why? The Scribes and Pharisees, representing the Protestant principle, opposed Him. So did the Chief Priests, representing the Catholic principle. Our Lord had acknowledged both, taken part in both Synagogue and Temple worship. He did not, therefore, denounce Scribes and Pharisees above other men for opposing Him, since others opposed Him undenounced: not for the principle they represented—that of lay-teaching of God's word—for He had endorsed it. He went on, ending: "And he that sweareth by heaven sweareth by the throne of God and by Him that sitteth thereon."

The examples given are instances of casuistry. Casuistry is study of God's law for the purpose of evading it. It is parallel to the use of the civil law to defeat justice by technicalities. We begin to perceive the dim outline of the possibility that it is better not to teach the people the word of God at all than to teach it falsely. This is the position of the Ultramontaine Romanist. Yet the Ultramontaine position is riddled with exactly the same vice—casuistry—which Our Lord denounces here. It teaches the people individually, through the confessional, diligently, carefully, efficiently and, it seems to us, wrongly concerning God's word.

The Strength and My Day.

Give me Thy strength for my day,
That whereso'er I go,
There shall no danger daunt me
And I shall fear no foe;

So shall no task o'ercome me,
So shall no trial fret,
So shall I walk unwearied
The path where my feet are set;

So shall I find no burden
Greater than I can bear,
So shall I have a courage
Equal to all my care;

So shall no grief o'erwhelm me,
So shall no wave o'erflow
Give me Thy strength for my day, Lord, Cover my weakness so.

—Annie Johnson Flint.

The man with one talent hid his lord's money in one hole, and watched that hole till his soul shriveled to the size of the hole. The two servants who put their lord's money out to use expanded to new usefulness and entered into the richer joys of their lord. God can get along without our gifts better than we can afford to withhold them.—Selected.

the vegetables were planted, and wondered what was the matter. Mrs. Mann told the ladies that it was only Grandma Morton's pet pig, and that made them laugh some more, for they knew that Mrs. Morton had all kinds of yets, but a pet pig seemed the funniest of all.

All summer Peter lived very happily, but he did not grow any bigger; he stayed just a wee pig, so when the nights began to be cool, a box with hay enough for him to cuddle down in was brought into the woodshed, and every night he slept in the nice warm bed; but soon the days and the nights became really cold, and the cook, who was very kind-hearted, had him stay in the kitchen, and brought the box in at night and always saw him safe in it before she went to bed.

The days grew colder still, and Peter stayed in the warm kitchen most of the time, but you see he could not have just the same warmth he would have had if he could only have been contented to live in this own home, where his brothers and sisters were cuddling up close to their mother and keeping just as warm as possible, for you know pigs do keep very warm indeed, and that helps to make them grow fat.

But the days and nights grew very cold indeed and again Sam carried Little Peter back to his mother. This time he decided to stay at home and enjoy cuddling close to her with his brothers and sisters.

He was always the baby of the family, and never grew to be a big fat pig, like all the others.—Lottie Norton, in Christian Register.

Lucile's Adventure.

Anna May wrapped a piece of an old knitted shawl snugly round her doll and pinned it in place with a safety pin. "There, Lucile," she said, "you'll keep nice and warm all night." She patted the pillow on the sofa and put the doll down.

Then Anna May went up to her own bed. She was tired; she and Lucile had gone to a party that afternoon, and they had played games and had a lovely time.

The next morning her mother waked her early. "Hurry, Anna May," she said, "we are going to take the early train to the city and spend the day with grandma. Uncle Jack visited us for an hour last night and said that grandma wanted us to come and see her today."

Anna May thought that if there was anything more delightful than a party it was visiting her grandmother in the city. She was wide awake in a moment and hurriedly dressed in her best clothes. She was too much excited to eat any breakfast, and as five o'clock on a December morning seems very early when you're only seven years old, her mother tucked some sandwiches into the traveling bag for her. A few hours later Anna May enjoyed eating them as she sat in the train, looking out at the sunrise. "I wish I had Lucile," she said.

"Lucile will have a good rest at home on the sofa, tucked up in her shawl," said mother.

Grandma was glad to see them and did everything to make their visit happy. It was a day to be remembered and a long day, too, for when they reached home it was late and Anna May was so sleepy that her mother helped her to bed.

In the morning her first thought was of Lucile. She hurried downstairs and over to the sofa, but Lucile was not there. She looked under the pillows and on the floor; then she called her mother. Together they searched, first the living room, then the whole house; but Lucile was gone.

When her father came home he and Anna May searched all over the house from attic to basement.

"I left her right here on this pillow, mother," said Anna May tearfully. "Do you s'pose somebody took her?"

"I don't think so; father locked the house when he went to the office," her mother replied.

"Never mind; you shall have a new doll," said her father, but Anna May was not to be comforted. She wandered round the house and picked up cushions and sat in her little rocker and thought sorrowfully of Lucile.

Two days later the expressman left a large box addressed to Anna May. She was so much excited that she forgot the lost doll. She helped pull off the wrappings, and there stood a large, handsome doll carriage with a fluffy pink blanket, and under it Lucile.

"Well, the lost child has come home!" said mother.

"Where have you been?" asked Anna May, hugging her precious doll. Lucile just smiled.

A letter from Uncle Jack explained. He wrote that when he had leaned back in his seat on the train after being at their house he had felt something hard at his back. It was Lucile. The knitted shawl that was pinned round her had caught in the belt of his overcoat. He seemed to think it was a joke and hoped that Anna May hadn't worried; but he suggested that she put Lucile to sleep in the doll carriage instead of on the sofa where careless uncles sometimes put their overcoats.—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman. The Brooklet's Journey.

David Duncan, age 11.

The brook went curving swift and fast
It cooled the sweet roots of grass.
Wild things to it gave grateful thanks
As they drank their fill on its cool green banks.

It helped the fruits and nuts to grow,
As it murmured a song that was sweet and low,
It helped all things it saw or knew,
As only a little brook could do.

Through fields of green the brook did glide
And it crossed a plain that was smooth and wide,
As it rippled along content and free
To its journey's end, the great, wide sea.

Two Two Processions.

The sun shone in the east window and lay across the kitchen table, on which was an array of dishes. Mollie looked at the dishes, and a few tears came, but she wiped them away quickly when she heard a knock at the door.

She opened the door saying, "Oh, Dora, I was just wishing you would come!"

"I came to get you to go to see the procession," said Dora, who was Mollie's dearest friend.

"I can't," said Mollie sadly. "I want to ever so much, but I've got all these dishes to do. Just look! See how many there are!"

"I should think there must be four times as many as we had," said Dora with surprise. "But your family is bigger than ours."

"That isn't the only reason," said Mollie. "We had five extra people to breakfast, because the lady across the way was sick, and mother invited them with them to help them a little, and—and—she said I was big enough to wash dishes once in a while alone!"

Mollie could not help sniffing a little, but she bravely stopped a sob, which she was afraid was really going to have its own way, and added, "Of course, I've seen the Boy Scouts' processions before, but not since Billy joined and I do want to see my brother march!"

"Well, they haven't started yet, and maybe, if you let me help, we could get the dishes done before the procession gets by."

"It would be something just to see the tail end of it," sighed Mollie, "but Billy's in the front ranks!"

The girls flew to work. Mollie stirred up a big pan of suds and put another of hot water beside the drainer, then handed some towels to Dora.

"This is the glass-towel," she said, "and here is another for the china."

"Oh, how pretty!" said Dora, looking at the towel she held in her hand. "Who marked this?"

"I did, for mother's birthday," said Mollie proudly. "I learned how at sewing school, and she was so surprised!"

The hot water and smooth towels made quick work, and the girls laughed and talked until piles of dishes showed the task finished.

"Now, where shall I put them?" asked Dora, some cups in each hand.

"Mother told me to leave them on the dining-room table, because I am not tall enough to put them on the shelves."

They began to carry them carefully into the next room.

"Oh, see this pretty spoon!"

"That's mine," said Mollie.

"And this one?"

"That was Billy's when he was a baby."

"Then they shall lead the dishes," said Dora. "Oh, Mollie, let's make a procession of them! There's a pile of knives, they are nice, straight soldiers and here are lots of forks—they're soldiers, too, only in different uniforms."

"And here's father and mother," gleefully continued Mollie, placing two tablespoons to the right and left. "But where's the band?"

"There's the drum," chuckled Dora, putting the little round silver sugar bowl down, "and here are the drumsticks," adding the sugar tongs.

"Well, let's not have any band except a drum corps," and Mollie with much laughter put all the napkin rings right behind the sugar bowl. "There!" she cried. "I don't know how many drums there are in a drum corps, but this is all right for our procession, anyway!"

"And these two little platters just alike shall be ambulances at the rear, in case any soldier is too old or tired to march very long."

"Yes, but what shall we do for flags?"

"There they are!" and Dora caught up the towel that Mollie had marked, waving it over her head. Mollie took another, and they began marching around the table, singing, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

They laughed so much that they did not at first see a lady come to the dining-room door. When they did, she was laughing, too.

"This is our procession, mother!" cried Mollie.

"The Boy Scouts' procession is coming down the street," said the lady, "and you and Dora have just time to see it before it turns the corner. Hurry up!"—Zion's Herald.

BANKER DEAF FOR YEARS NOW HEARS PERFECTLY.

Mr. John L. Ellerman, President of the Farmers' National Bank, Fairfax, South Dakota, says that after suffering from deafness for many years he can now hear the slightest whisper and is so proud and happy of his own good fortune that he wants everyone who is deaf or hard of hearing to know about it. After trying everything he could hear of without success, Mr. Ellerman finally saw the announcement of a New York firm stating that they had effected a new hearing device called the Acousticon which would enable anyone whose auditory nerve was not entirely destroyed to hear as perfectly as those with normal hearing. As this firm offered to send their product on Ten Days' Free Trial—no deposit—no C. O. D., he decided to try it. To his utter amazement and delight, he found that this remarkable invention enabled him to hear all sounds as clearly as when a boy. He has since recommended it to a number of his friends and they also report most satisfactory results. If you want to hear again as well as when a child, write the Dictograph Products Corporation, Suite 1301-A, No. 220 W. 42nd Street, New York City, and ask them to send you an Acousticon on Ten Days' Free Trial. There are no strings attached to their offer. The trial is absolutely free. Just send them your name and address.—Adv.

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHY run the risk of sickness? Keep clean internally. When you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste. These poisons, absorbed by the blood, attack all parts of the body. The first results, headache, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness," etc., serve as warnings of a graver danger. If this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked, you become the victim of some serious organic disease.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Internal Cleanliness More Important Than Bathing

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Washing Cleans Only The Skin

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Not a Medicine

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

RESOLUTIONS.

THOMAS NELSON WILLIAMSON.

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Mary's Church, Graham, Va., Tazewell Parish, held March 4, 1924, the first meeting after the death of Thomas Nelson Williamson (March 2, 1924), a committee was appointed to prepare the following resolutions:

Whereas, it has pleased our loving heavenly Father to take unto Himself the soul of our departed brother and friend. Therefore, be it resolved:

First. This church and parish owe much to his untiring efforts and interest in all phases of its work, during the past twenty years as Vestryman, Senior Warden and Superintendent of the Church School.

Throughout his life he was a valiant soldier of the cross, serving his church as Lay Leader, Bible Class teacher and Vestryman—a teacher and a workman that need not be ashamed. A more faithful and conscientious man never lived. Truly his works do follow him. He leaves an example to his church and people, commending the sweetness of a Christ-like life.

Second. That we ever cherish the memory of this splendid Christian gentleman and patriot, whom everybody esteemed and loved.

Third. That we extend their family our deepest sympathy in their affliction, and pray God our Father to comfort and sustain them.

Fourth. That these resolutions be sent to the family, be spread on the minutes of the vestry and be published in the Bluefield Telegraph and the Southern Churchman.

HERBERT H. YOUNG,
W. B. DUNN, Committee.

MAJOR JOHN MASON LEE.

Entered into Life Eternal from his home "Westwood," Stafford County, Va., March 11, 1924, MAJOR JOHN MASON LEE, C. S. A., son of Commodore Sydney Smith Lee, of the old Navy, and Nannie Mason Lee, his wife, and nephew of Gen. Robert E. Lee. He was the last surviving brother of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee and the late Daniel Murray Lee. Other brothers, Henry, Robert and Sydney Smith Lee having died several years ago.

Major Lee was born January 4, 1839, at "Clairmont," the home of his grandfather, John Mason, son of George Mason, author of the Bill of Rights. He married Nora Bankhead, daughter of Dorothea Minor and William Bankhead. Their children were John Mason and William Bankhead Lee, of Stafford County; Dorothea Bankhead, now Mrs. Hugh Antrim, of Richmond; Bessie Winston, now Mrs. C. P. Cardwell, of Hanover County, and Nannie Mason Lee, with whom he lived. Mrs. Lee and their son, John Mason Lee, died some years ago.

The education of Major Lee was received at various private schools and later at St. Timothy's Hall Military School, near Baltimore, at St. John's Military Academy, Annapolis, Md., and at Bolmar, West Chester, Pa.

In 1858 John Lee went with an expedition sent by President Buchanan to extend friendly offices to the Indians, and also to explore the headquarters of the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers.

In 1861 he responded to the call of his country and became a soldier of the Confederacy. He served gallantly, winning the rank of Major, belonging to the type of men of the old South whose men in battle "Marched to the death of a martyr with the grace of a courtier."

Major Lee was every inch a soldier and a gentleman. It is good to remember him as a host standing in the door of his home welcoming his friends—and there were many. With debonnaire unconsciousness, his humor, high, elusive and harmless, flashed about our hours of gloom as summer lightning plays with the dark. He walked along the common road of life with other men unsolled, because his heart was pure. Little children and the old and suffering smiled and forgot themselves and their burdens under the charm of his sunny presence. Surely such gifts are heaven-born and rank among the spiritualities. God has many ways of expressing Himself and we who loved Major Lee felt God shining through his rare personality as light, through a stained glass window.

As little children do we enter life, even as little children do we go out. Clapsed in the arms of his children the dauntless soul of another Lee went out to God—his Father.

Through the quiet wood ways, wrapped in his Confederate flag, he was borne to old Aquia Church, where, life's battles o'er this soldier of the South sleeps well.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

A Good Record.

The choir of St. Paul's Church, Phillipsburg, the Ven. Franklin T. Eastment, rector, was entertained at a banquet recently by one of the organizations of the parish. The rector acted as toastmaster. Miss Emily Clere, who has had charge of the choir for the past twenty-three years, gave a short history of the vested choir during the time of her service, and for seven years prior to that. St. Paul's choir has a record that it is difficult to match. Of the present members, one has served as chorister for thirty years, one for twenty-nine years, one for twenty-six years, one for twenty-three years, one for twenty-two years, two for twenty years, one for seventeen years, one for fifteen years, two for fourteen years, one for twelve years, four for eleven years, one for nine years, and two for two years. The choir is composed of thirty voices. Miss Clere said that the secret of the choir's success lay in the fact that they caught them young and kept them!

Woman's Federated Missionary Society Formed.

On Thursday, March 8, the women of the various missionary societies of the several religious bodies in Sunbury, Pa., held a united Lenten Prayer Service in Zion Lutheran Church, Sunbury. Sister Anna Freidrich, of the Zion Lutheran Church, presided. She and Deaconess Anna L. Ranson, of the Episcopal Parish in Sunbury, were the speakers of the evening. A permanent organization, named the Women's Federated Missionary Society of Sunbury, was effected, with Sister Anna Freidrich as President. Deaconess Ranson, who plans to return next year to the mission field in Japan, delivered a forceful address on "The Power of Prayer in Japan." At the close of the meeting, Deaconess Ranson was presented with a purse of $20 for use in her preparations for her return to the Orient.

confession resulted in a masterpiece of style. Surely Lincoln had no idea that it would be an effective speech or that students of literary art would be studying it decade after decade beyond the occasion for which he wrote it. It is this which makes me believe that a public confession of its shortcomings and its wrong doings and a sincere reliance on the inherent rightness of this deed to begin its own reform, might be the most eloquent and effective financial appeal of a hospital or a college.

Lincoln confesses that he and his fellow mourners are utterly incapable of the great act which they had come to Gettysburg to perform.

"But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Clearly seeing his incompetence, he cast his burden on the Lord, made confession of incapacity, made strength out of his weakness, a glorious exaltation of the Power which alone could dedicate and consecrate their lives, the day and place on which they had met and the lives of those who had fallen. Then literary mastery and national leadership was added unto him because he sought not these, but the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.

Sunbury, Pa.: For the third time the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., rector of St. Matthew's, has been invited to make an address in the Jewish Synagogue of Sunbury.

Altoona: On the first Sunday in Lent, Dr. Brodie, of the Near East Relief Fund, addressed the congregation of St. Luke's, Altoona, the Rev. George R. Bishop, rector, in behalf of the unfortunate sufferers in the stricken areas in the Near East. He alluded particularly to the heroic sacrifice of the late George St. Williams, the Hero of Marsovan, who gave up his life while protecting defenseless Armenian children. Mr. Williams was a son of the Rev. William J. Williams, rector of the Church of our Saviour, Fovburg, Pa., and was formerly a member of St. Luke's choir. The parish has pledged $500 as a memorial to this noble young man.

A. A. H.

The Hero of Marsovan.

Chambersburg: A rectory has been purchased for Trinity Church, Chambersburg, the Rev. George D. Graeff, rector. The new rectory, a commodious brick house, with lawns, gardens and a garage, was bought for $7,300. From funds already in hand, it is expected that three-fourths of the purchase price will be paid off before the end of the year.

The Men's Club of this parish has been reorganized with a membership of thirty-five men. The organization has changed its name into that of "The Laymen's Club."

Berwick: The Rev. John Oliphant, vicar of All Saints', Brookland, and the Church of the Good Shepherd, Galtion, for the past two years, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Berwick. During his ministry at Brookland and Galtion, Mr. Oliphant was instrumental in securing a fine rectory, which has been completely paid for.

Mont Alto: The Rev. Howard G. England has accepted an appointment as Chaplain of the State Sanatorium for the Treatment of Tuberculosis at Mont Alto, and is now in residence at the rectory there. Repairs are now being made to the rectory, and further improvements are projected as soon as weather conditions permit. The sanatorium at Mont Alto is one of the largest in the country.

Whate'er is best for me, my God will bring to me,
If I do only wait, and trust, and pray;
Whate'er seems dark to me, shall end in light for me;
'Tis but the glooming which foreruns the day.

—J. H. McKey.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook has resigned his parish in Chicago and accepted his election to St. Luke's Parish, Lebanon, Pa. He will begin his work in Lebanon shortly after Easter.

The Rev. Guy H. Madara has been elected rector of St. Peter's Church, Mountain Lakes, Diocese of Newark.

The present address of the Rt. Rev. Wm. P. Reinington, D. D., Bishop of Eastern Oregon, is Box 296, Pendleton, Oregon.

On the second Sunday in Lent Bishop Shaylor, of Nebraska, preached at the morning service in St. James' Church, Texarkana, Tex. The Bishop was on his way to Shreveport for the noon-day Lenten services, and was, as he expressed it, "Caught on the wing," and the congregation was most grateful for the helpful message.

The Rev. S. Taggart Steele, Jr., curate at St. Peter's Church, Morristown, N. J., has accepted the call to be assistant at Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, Md.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Walter Woodworth Wells, for seventeen years Dean of the Valentine Deanery in the Missionary District of Western Nebraska, died suddenly of heart failure in Gering, Nebraska, Tuesday evening, March 4, 1924. He had recently had pastorates at Mitchell and Scottsbluff, and was the next oldest priest in point of service in the District.

Funeral services were held in Holy Trinity Church, Schuyler, March 8, conducted by Bishop Beecher, of Hastings, and Bishop Shaylor, of Omaha, assisted by several of the clergy. The Masons acted as an escort and conducted their service at the grave.

The Rev. Vincent Corbett Lacey, rector of Trinity Memorial Church, Mapleton, Iowa, died at his home on Saturday, March 1, after a month's illness. The burial service was held at Mapleton on Monday, March 3, Bishop Longley officiating, assisted by the Rev. E. H. Gaynor, of Sioux City, Ia., and the Rev. W. L. Essex, of Rock Island, Ill. He is survived by his wife and one daughter, Mary Maud.

Lord Jesus, Master, Friend Divine,
With Thee we share Thy radiant joy
Of ecstasy in desert solitude,
And prayer and holy intercourse,
At morning, noon, and eventide,
The struggle mid Thy loneliness
Inspires our utmost love,
And sanctifies our burdens,
Uplifted on Thy saving Cross,
Thy wilderness of prayer is ours,
That we may also share with Thee,
Beyond Thy desert dire distress,
Thy ransomed joy at Easter-tide.

All Right Here.

Waits the long train in the station lights,
Steadily shine the stars o'erhead;
A sword of flame, the headlight smites
The rails of steel into silver thread;
The platform is cleared by "All aboard!"
Station men loiter a space to hear
The brakeman echo the parting word—
From step to step—sharp—positive—clear—

"Right!"

"All Right!"

"All Right Here!"

Black clouds blot out the star-shine fair,
The train roars into the driving rain;
Lightning darken the headlight's glare,
Whirlwinds grapple the bridge again;
Gorges foam with the torrent's wrath,
Mountains tremble with rage and fear;
One minute a signal bars the path—
Then into the storm with the cry of cheer—

"Right!"

"All Right!"

"All Right Here!"

There is a way of doing kindness which looks as if no kindness had been done;—a gentle and delicate way which adds preciousness to the gift. I have known some men to do a kindness as if to feel their poverty. This was Jesus Christ's method and it will be ours as we approach His Likeness.—Joseph

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Give not thy tongue too much liberty, lest it take thee prisoner."

Despondency is sinful, because it means want of faith in the promises of God.

What an interesting volume would be that enshrining the prayers of little children!

Prayer is a Key which, being turned by the hand of faith, unlocks God's treasures.—Anon.

"... Two things stand like stone:—Kindness in another's trouble, Courage in our own."

Many a teacher delivers a lecture during the half hour supposed to be devoted to the lesson and imagines that he has taught the lesson.

Many careers of usefulness there are, which are, perhaps, more of enduring than of acting. To endure in many circumstances, is, in a sense, to act.

Of this we may be sure, that those who sought communion with Jesus upon earth are enjoying still higher communion now.—George Milligan.

"He brought him to Jesus." That is all we can do. If we can get a man to come into direct relation with the Lord, that Lord will do the rest.—Maclaren.

If there be anything, in fact, wherein the views of God and the impressions of men are apt to be at total variance, it is in respect to the solemnity and importance of ordinary duties.—Horace Bushnell.

"There are those who walk among us who wear in their countenance the look of the Visitor. They have gone through storm, and have known tribulations; but Peace has come to them and its serenity is in their faces."

It is said that ferocious animals are disarmed by the eye of man if he but steadily look at them, so it is when right looks upon wrong. Resist the devil and he will flee from you; offer him a bold front and he runs away.—Horace Bushnell.

"Beyond life's toils and cares,
Its hopes and joys, its weariness and sorrow,
Its sleepless nights, its days of smiles and tears,
Will be a long sweet life unmarked by years,
One bright, unending morrow."

If we would pray well we must have something to pray for, something we really crave, we must know our wants, express our wants. We must have an "an errand at the Throne."—W. J. Hoge.

"The dear Christ dwells not afar,
The King of some remoter star,
Listening at times with flattered ear
To homage wrung from selfish fear,
But here amidst the poor and blind
The bound and suffering of our kind,
In works we do, in prayers we pray,
Life of our life, He lives today."

A POSITIVE CONVICTION NEEDING NEW EMPHASIS

In the column of Letters to the Editor there is a message from Archdeacon Neve in which he calls attention to the fact that the Modern Churchmen's Union admitted to its membership Bishop William Montgomery Brown, of Arkansas, who is now on trial for what is claimed to be his repudiation of the whole essential structure of the Christian faith. Archdeacon Neve naturally raises the question as to whether the Modern Churchmen's Union by this fact has not greatly weakened, and almost invalidated, its appeal to the great body of the members of our Church today.

When the fact was first stated in various news reports that Bishop Brown had announced himself to be a member in good standing of the Modern Churchmen's Union, we thought that the report was one of those sheer inaccuracies with which the news reports in a time of animated discussion are often full. It appears, however, upon investigation, that the statement was true. Bishop Brown answered one of the circular letters sent out by the Modern Churchmen's Union stating its principles, and upon the basis of those principles applied for membership. The secretary of the Union took the position that any person who did subscribe to the principles of the Union as definitely stated in its literature was eligible for membership, and that if Bishop Brown thus did apply it was not the part of the secretary to institute any investigation into his beliefs or disbeliefs, but to accept his application in good faith.

It is quite possible to understand this point of view. Abstractly and technically, the secretary of the Modern Churchmen's Union may have seemed to argue correctly. Bishop Brown, notwithstanding what might be generally and miscellaneously alleged as to his views, was at the time of his application a member of the House of Bishops. Nothing had then been proved against him which invalidated his right to continue a member of that House. The secretary of the Union might therefore well say to himself that it was no part of his duty to be an inquisitor. He could not institute personal inquiry into Bishop Brown's orthodoxy or lack of orthodoxy. If on the strength of his own belief he deemed Bishop Brown disqualified from membership in an organization of men loyal to the Church, this might seem to involve the necessity of putting on trial the views of everybody else who applied; with the result of setting up the Union as a sort of theological court to condemn the views of those excluded, and by implication to endorse the views of those admitted to its membership. Manifestly this might have seemed a large responsibility for the secretary to assume; so he apparently concluded that his duty was not to go back of the statement of any person at present a member of our Church that he desired to subscribe to the declared principles of the Modern Churchmen's Union and to become a member of it on that basis.

Nevertheless, with all due regard to the difficulty in which the secretary of the Modern Churchmen's Union was placed, it seems to us a matter of the greatest misfortune for the ultimate service of the Union itself that Bishop Brown should have been admitted to membership. Notwithstanding the fact that he still retains his full status of membership in the Church, his defection from its teaching and from its fellowship has been so notorious that the responsible officer of any organization loyal to the Church would, it seems to us, have been right in representing to the Bishop that there was a manifest anomaly in his application for membership and that his admission would put both himself and the Union in an untrue light.

The principles of the Modern Churchmen's Union are these:

"Believing that Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life, it is our purpose:

- "1. To affirm the continuous activity of the Holy Spirit in all spheres of life and thought.
- "2. To maintain the right to interpret the historic expressions of our Faith in accordance with the results of modern science and of Biblical and historical scholarship.
- "3. To advance, as an aid to the ultimate reunion of Christendom, cooperation between the Protestant Episcopal Church and all other Christian Churches.
- "4. To bring the Gospel to the unchurched classes of our population, in order to win their allegiance to the religious and moral demands of the Kingdom of God.
- "5. To further the application of the principles of Christ in all industrial, social and international relations.
- "6. To encourage greater freedom and elasticity in the worship of the Church, in order to adapt it to the need and thought of the times.
- "7. To emphasize afresh the nature of the Christian life as personal fellowship with God, and to study with sympathy those movements and tendencies of thought which are mystical in character.

If the Union is to be, as it may be, a constructive force for Christianity, at once progressive and evangelical, it must emphasize with supreme clearness and devotion that conviction which is the starting point of all its affirmations; namely, that "Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life." In other words if the Church is to listen to it, the Union must not through any circumstances allow itself to appear as a mere heterogeneous collection of modern Athenians, concerned only "either to tell or to hear some new thing." It must make plain that at the heart of all its activities is a profound and passionate faith in Jesus Christ as the Incarnation of the life and spirit of God, and as the sovereign revelation of God's will for all our human life. The emphasis upon open-mindedness and new interpretations of truth for which the Union stands can be an inestimable able contribution to Christian thinking in our time, but first of all it must be based upon an evident exaltation of Jesus Christ through whom and for the sake of whose Kingdom the new knowledge and new effectiveness are sought.

Unquestionably the representatives of the Modern Churchmen's Union—men for example like Dr. Worcester, its President, Bishop Atwood, Bishop Logan H. Roots, Bishop Parsons among its Vice-Presidents—would stress with all eagerness of conviction this truth. To such men and to many others, the Modern Churchmen's Union is simply the instrument which they want to express in ways to meet the "need and thought of the times," their sense of the world's necessity of Christ. It is very unfortunate that such an incident as the application of Bishop Brown for membership, and what seems to us the mistake of his admission, should cloud the true purpose of the Union. But the fact itself does lay a new obligation upon all its representatives to make more unmistakable that which has always been true—namely, that the purpose of the Union is to present in fresh and kindling ways no vain negation, but the message of the positive meaning of Christ for men. Only as that is done, can any organization truly serve the Church and the world which today are hungering for positive and constructive conviction.

RELIGION AND PUBLIC CONSCIENCE

Men and women all over America have been shocked at the investigations in Washington of the oil concessions. It has been a scandalous and humiliating thing to discover that men high in public office have in some instances bartered their position for corrupt advantage, and that in other instances, either through connivance or stupidity, they have played into the hands of unscrupulous business interests, which have been trying to plunder the public resources for private gain. Tens of thousands of citizens have doubtless felt honestly indignant. They have been outraged that such things could have happened in the country to which they belong.

But the question arises as to whether the respectable citizens back in the communities from which our legislators come is altogether entitled to his virtuous indignation. If America at large believes in honesty and in faithfulness to public stewardship, how is it possible that the contrary things should be expressed in Washington? The pleasant thing to imagine is that there simply happened to be in Washington certain individuals individually and peculiarly iniquitous, for whom their constituents had no responsibility, because they differed with such shocking and unpredictable completeness from the virtuous constituents who had a right to expect that they would be persons of an altogether different kind. But, as a matter of fact, the real situation is not so simple. It may be granted that the average citizen is thoroughly well-meaning and honest in his own desires; but it is not to be granted that the average citizen has taken any particular pains to see that the men chosen to represent him in government are of that kind. As a matter of fact, so far as any practical effort on his part is concerned, there is very little evidence that he cares that his representative should be of any particular kind at all. He does not even care enough to cast his vote.

The facts in this matter are startling. It has recently been stated that there is not in Washington a single high public official who has been elected by a majority of the people, nor by a majority of those possessing the franchise.

In the presidential election of 1920, only 44 per cent of those eligible voted and Warren G. Harding was elected by a total vote of 16,147,359, or 26.5 per cent of the voting strength of the country. If President Harding had received all the votes cast, he would not have had a majority of the maximum voting strength of the nation. Senator Lodge, leader of the Senate, was elected by 22.3 per cent of the voting population of Massachusetts. Senator Johnson of California by 29.2 per cent of the voting population; Ferris of Michigan by 16 per cent; Copeland of New York by 25 per cent; Pepper of Pennsylvania by 18.9 per cent; Fess of Ohio by 25 per cent; Mayfield of Texas by 12 per cent; Swanson of Virginia by 10 per cent; Wheeler of Montana by 30 per cent; Stephens of Mississippi by 7 per cent.

It is in the old states that the smallest percentage of voters cast their ballots, while in the newer states like Montana, Wyoming, Nevada and New Mexico, the percentage goes up the scale. Nevada cast 66 per cent of its possible votes in the senatorial elections, and New Mexico 65 per cent, while Massachusetts cast only 47; Pennsylvania, 33.3; Ohio, 48, and Virginia 14 per cent.

In the face of a condition such as this, why should it be surprising that the elected representatives of the country sometimes turn out to be corrupt or inefficient? It is rather surprising that some of them turn out as well as they do. What sort of a stimulus to excellence is it when a candidate for office knows that vast numbers of the people do not care enough as to the difference between one man and another to vote either for this one or for that?

When, therefore, citizens are waxing indignant as to the disclosures in Washington, let us wax a little more indignant at our own shortcomings. Unless men and women have cast their own votes, they have no right to complain of anything that may be done in government. By virtue of their neglect, each one of them is particeps criminis in the very thing at which they loudly pretend to be horrified. . . .

If it is one of the grave perils of our democracy that so few of the people supposed to be intelligent and conscientious take the trouble to vote on any issues at all, so from the standpoint of our Christian ideals a further reproach is that still fewer will take the trouble to express themselves on matters which do not touch their immediate and personal concern. About two months ago, there was laid before the American people the plan which had been given the Bok Peace Award, as representing, from a wide competition, the most practicable suggestion of American effort toward world peace. An unparalleled machinery of publicity had been created, so that this plan might be brought almost immediately to the attention literally of millions of the people of America. Interest was further whetted by the long curiosity as to what the award would be, and as to who might be the person who would win this prize, which was so large that it made the whole venture have some of the fascination of a romance. Yet up to the present time, not many more than half a million people have taken the trouble to vote on the American Peace Plan one way or the other. At a dinner of a Church Club of men some weeks ago, a speaker asked those of the men present who had sent in their referendum in the Peace Plan to hold up their hands. Only about six out of some hundred and fifty men responded.

Meanwhile, a single periodical, The Literary Digest, through the use of its own pages alone, has conducted a referendum in regard to the Mellon tax proposal. More than two million people have voted in that referendum,—that is, nearly four times as many as have voted in the far more elaborate effort made to rouse the public attention in connection with the Peace Award. The only conclusion is that people can be more easily interested in something that will touch their own pocket-books today than in those vaster yet less definite concerns which may decide the whole destinies of the earth—some later time.

Here is a failure for which the Church cannot escape some responsibility. The Church has not effectively taught her people to take their civic duties upon their conscience. It has not taught men to relate their religious idealism to the real shaping of civilization now.

Religion and democracy are on trial together. Unless we can bring the imperative obligations of religion to bear upon our duties as men and women who create the spirit of the nations, we need not be surprised at disastrous results. The danger itself ought to be a challenge. The Christian Church should be kindling the imagination and inspiring the will of all the people whom it touches for the steady building up into public fact of those ideals which too often evaporate in private emotion.

FOR THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

It is good to know that the Citizens' Conference on Law Enforcement, which was held in Washington early this winter, was no mere gesture of sporadic effort. The men who called that Conference, and especially that genius in organized service who inspired it, Fred B. Smith, were not the sort of men who put their hands to a plough and lightly turn back. The work which they have undertaken, to rouse the sentiment of this nation against the violation of the Eighteenth Amendment, will not be dropped until it has achieved the results which they have set their eyes upon.

As a part of a steady program of mobilizing the best sentiment of the nation for sobriety and law enforcement, the Citizens' Committee of One Thousand is calling together in Washington for the fifth and sixth of April a special group of college and university men and women. In the bulletins which have recently been mailed, the considerations which have led to this assembling of college representatives are expressed thus:

First. In recognition of the fact that as a part of the apparent tendency everywhere to disregard lawful and orderly methods of life this same spirit has manifested itself to a degree among the students of the Institutions of higher education. The Committee does not believe these violations are of such proportions that they are to be regarded as an indictment of the vast majority of those attending the Colleges and Universities, but they represent a tendency which, it is believed, ought to be promptly corrected.

Second. In recognition of the further fact that these students represent an ever-increasing element of power and influence in the citizenry of the Nation, not only as an earnest of the future but even more in the immediate present, and that the full impact of their service in behalf of respect for, and enforcement of law can be best realized in a Conference where they may consider these peculiar phases of the subject which involve the educational centers.

Third. The belief that students can make a profound contribution in re-establishing confidence in the larger questions of honesty and integrity in national public life. While the Conference will give special attention to the issue of lawlessness as indicated in the violations of the Eighteenth Amendment and its enforcing acts, the deeper and far more important topic of a real, thorough-going awakening of the Nation to the necessity of fundamental righteousness and loyalty to orderly methods of government will be fully considered and discussed.

Here is an opportunity for the colleges and for the men and women in them. They hold positions of privilege in American life. That privilege ought to mean responsibility for effective moral leadership.

THE BEGINNING OF WISDOM

A Sermon by the Reverend Phillips E. Osgood

"Blessed is he who is awed; for he who is awed shall command."

THERE is no gospel reference for my text. Yet it is apparently one of Jesus' authentic words. A tattered fragment of papyrus dug from the sands of Egypt has this saying and some others. It seems to be another Beatitude. It describes the virtue and the power of true humility.

We do not like humility. We think Uriah Heep and other pious hypocrites have spoiled the attraction of it by their false humility. True humility, however, deserves appreciation.

Even if we read the writings of sincere but humble men we find this emphasis out of key with our ideals. The characteristic which has kept "The Imitation of Christ" from a greater helpfulness is its emphasis upon an utter humility which seems too self-deprecating for self-respect. We read, for instance, "If I abase myself and reduce myself to nothing and shrink from all self esteem and grind myself to (what I am) dust, Thy grace will be favorable to me; and all self-esteem, how little soever, shall be swallowed up in the valley of my nothingness and perish forever." We find chapters headed "Of the humble conceit of ourselves," "Of humble submission," "That the words of God are to be heard with humility," "Of concealing grace under the guard of humility," "Of the obedience of one in humble subjection," and unless we are trained to look through words to the emotions they carried for their sayers, we shall read them with their more recent associations and be repelled. Yet one would be foolish indeed to boggle at words: we have sense enough to study the activities of the soul those words implied and use the words only as old-fashioned symbols of abiding truths.

Yet I question whether we can do better for a name for this emotion than the word humility. It is derived from the Latin word for the fruitful earth—I like to feel it meant "knees on the ground" to its coiners.

The emotion it connotes is that of the Beatitudes. Needless to say, Jesus did not mean by meekness what we have come to mean; He did not mean poor-spiritedness by "poor in spirit." What He was praising is the selfsame childlikeness He lauds elsewhere. Unspoiledness, tender attunedness to wholesome ideals, teachableness, open-hearted trust,—all this He meant. The reverent awe for God as He is which the sensitized soul of one who takes himself as he should with God in his view—this is humility. The capacity to admire, the willingness to listen for the voice of reality, the kind of trust your child shows as he slips his confiding hand in yours and as he smiles up at you as together you step out into the crowded street—this is humility.

Modernity chooses self reliance as its banner virtue. Many a one should emblazon on his coat of arms an Atlas rampant with the motto, "I am able." We too easily succumb to the zest of shouldering self-confidence. Shyness seems laughable. Reverence seems unreal. Awe seems absurd. We know so much, possess so much and are so sure of ourselves! Unless we are careful to safeguard ourselves and remain otherwise.

Egotism brings its own penalty. No egotist can be humble; no egotist realizes the strength to be had for the asking by one who thinks to look for it outside himself. God offers us the double yoke of satisfaction by responsibility; and pledges Himself to pull the greater load beside us, if we will bow our shoulders beside Him. How much better to avail oneself of such supplementary Power than to condemn himself by self-trust to its lack!

Conscience surely is the evidence of law as a reality existent above us, seeking us as much as we can seek it. Righteousness is not our ability to lift ourselves by our bootstraps; it is the effect upon the attuned souls of those who "apprehend that by which they are apprehended." And faith, finally, is clearly the means by which we become aware of Reality above and beyond our own soul. That is its essential definition.

The other day on a book-jacket where there were listed the titles of several volumes I caught the heading, "Here are windows: look outside!" That is the best book advertisement I have ever seen. Windows! Through which to look out upon realities. Through every sense of the ten we are bidden likewise to look out upon Reality. This looking out is humility. To be unwilling to look out is the bumptious, crass idiocy of self-sufficiency.

The burden of my thought today is only this: Let us use our five mystic senses to look out upon Reality.

The humble, awed use of ideation, logic, imagination, conscience and faith will give us command of the secret of ultimate Reality, which will bless us with the experience of its being and beauty only thus approached.

THE CHURCH

By Charles Penniman

What way to go in the wood of this our life?
Seeking El Dorado, Beauty, I lost my path;
Wandered afar in thickets and tangled depths,
Till I found a path! And what is a path but earth
Worn by the feet of other men; for the soul
Does what it dreams souls did before it, lost
In this same problem of life in the wood. What now?
Duty! loveless and sterile and hard, when Beauty
Is duty enough, if beauty be your path and courage.
Duty the path! False dream of a feeble hour,
Which leads to mimic walk in a path not ours.
Better to fight through briars to find the path
Made for one's soul, and lost in the darkness of fate,
Than follow steps to a mire of bitter waters.

—Edgar Lee Masters, in Vanity Fair for December, 1923.

WHEN we think of the Church, we seldom have any clear idea of what it is that we mean; and yet it is one of the most important things that we should have. On our idea of what the Church is hangs much of what we will let it do for us. If we conceive it as a factitious sort of authority that has its only reality as a scheme of legislation created to rule us who are an alien population, we will probably not let it do much for us—we will be continually rebelling against its laws, finding in them only a code for Duty. If we look upon the Church only as an ideal, on the other hand, it is very easy that it may vanish into the other clouds that men have fashioned for themselves. We have to look at it as a reality linked tightly in the structure of the world here and now; and we have to remember that the world is our world and God's world. We have to find it as a path that gives sureness of footing, because it is made for us to walk in and also as a path that is our own. The most various elements have to be enclosed within it and yet it must be one. In defining it, we will only at our own peril leave any human interest without the lines of its limits. Probably the most dangerous interest to leave outside will be freedom and the sense of personal adventure. But what have we to do with defining it? Should we not seek to find the thing as it is? If we do that it will provide its own definition and show its own character.

The rule of Vincent of Lerins has often been scoffed at as being the peak of a fevered imagination. Who ever heard of a teaching that has been accepted at all times, by all men, and in all places? And yet that rule has a great fascination. If it could be found to be true then much that we feel should be claimed for the Church would be patently valid. If the Church is to be in any adequate sense catholic, it seems that we must look for it along lines similar to these. How shall we look then? We cannot think of any so-called doctrine that has ever been held in exactly the same terms by great groups of men. If we should find one then we should look for stagnation of religious life—which we do find in the Eastern Church and in some phases of mediaeval "Catholicism." Perhaps the difficulty is that we do not look for the ground of the Church where it really is. It may be that we see mountains and chimneys and gray heads all poking up out of a mist—that we need to penetrate some way into the mist and find out in what they have their linkage, in what they have their principle of explanation that they poke up their heads so high, the ground in which they have their reality. Our amber glasses must be selected for the particular mist, but they are not far to seek. One of our efforts will be to find the grounds on which inner inconsistencies are resolved and that will be one element of the method. Another element will be the strenuous effort to interpret and illuminate such reality as actually is. We shall not be so much interested in perceiving a bad copy of a Heavenly institution—we crave greater sureness of reality than that—but if we should find an institution that is itself a part of reality, a part of the structure of the world, we should probably say, "Here is a heavenly institution, here is something as broad as man's experience now or to come."

On what, then, shall we fix our gaze through these glasses? First and most apparently we shall probably see a visible organization, or rather a mob of them, with rituals and rites that have grown fixed or are growing so. We find some groups that put great store by certain forms of initiation and other "essentials"; but they are so various outwardly that we shall despair of finding a unity in them. We shall find many expressions of doctrine, some of which will seem to be mutually exclusive. We will find codes of belief and creeds that have been divisive forces. We will ask, "Can men rest their lives upon these things?" And it will be apparent that all men cannot.

Then let us look below these; it is possible that there may be a ground for the synthesis of all of them. It is apparent that they are all expressions of something deeper, something called Spiritual Values, for want of a better name. The expressions appear to be exclusive properties and outward things in which there can be no intrinsic value. The things expressed seem to be inner and vital; they seem to have a personal reference and so to be adequate bearers of value. If we admit that personal contacts with God are possible, these values have a content that cannot be wholly explained on any wholly subjective reference. They have the same claim to reality as have the relations and quantities that are perceived in the various fields of Science. Our judgments upon them may be as wrong in the one case as in the other, but the values, as the relations, are none the less real. As it is intended here only to indicate an approach to the idea of what the Church may be, it will not be necessary to substantiate these abstractions nor to explore the implications and obvious limitations of their total concrete application. Suffice it to say, that if the Church may be considered to adhere in this realm it will be linked as a matter of fact, and not merely as a matter of definition, with reality.

There are, however, some obvious implications as to the nature of such an Institution. First of all it will be seen that the Church is in reality existent as a system of values. There are many such systems—the State is such in a slightly different sense; each religion or organization of religion is one. The thing that gives content to this system—the Christian Church—is that the values are those which inhere in relations with the God Who is revealed in Jesus. The system is not isolated, but stands in organic relation with other systems, because God is one God; yet here is the point of definition of the Christian Church. Whether or not Tertullian realized any such concept as this he used it as have many others before and since. That is, when he would test the doctrine of heretics he asked them if they were in the line of Apostolic Succession. That is still, and always will be, the test of doctrine, for we see that doctrine is an expression of value and that the Church, that thing bedded in reality, is a system of such values. From this point of view the phrase "Apostolic Succession" is a symbol, a method of expression of the fact that the system is one system, an organic whole. The values arise in relationship with God and are to be tried as a community of experience.

And there are many other things that we have for long wanted to say about the Church. We have wanted to say that it is real—not will be real, but is real—and in this sense it is more real than the hills. We have wanted to say that it is permanent and changeless (in some sense or other) and from this point of view it is these things—as permanent and changeless as the character of God. We have wanted to say that it is interpretative and just as a permanent principle is the only basis upon which knowledge of changing factors can be had, just so is the Church interpretative. The list of ideal values that can thus find their substance and validity in the Church as a system of values could be spun on indefinitely.

We can now think of some of the manifestations of the Church. In just the same way that men have often confused the word with the thought that it expresses, these manifestations of the Church have often been confused with the Church itself. When a particular manifestation has ceased to show forth and express, there has often been much anguish, and many have thought that the sacred institution of the Church itself was being thrown into the discard—as though anything of its nature could be thrown into the discard! There need be no fear of that, but it is inevitable that rites and doctrines fall into disuse and oblivion and there is great danger in using "ecclesiastical authority" to keep them from doing so. In that way men lose their respect for the "mimic walk" and much harm is done. And, on the other hand, there is danger in the too close tearing away of these manifestations; for it is too easy that the value that was once expressed be lost sight of with the expression. The real growth is not that the values be outgrown and new ones take their place. If this were true, it would only be necessary to read the latest books on theology and have sympathy for the lives of men in our own day in order to find all the instruction that the Church has for us. That is true of studies like the proper method of laying sewer pipes, but it is not true of studies like religion. The growth is that all of the values be kept available for immediate appreciation and life. The growth is in the re-experience, the exploration, and the more adequate expression. The experience of Churchmen should be enriching continually. It has been the tendency of certain groups of men to impoverish continually, as for instance the popular phases of Unitarianism and some aspects of the Protestant Reformation. But it will be noted that in all of the cases where this has occurred in any serious way it has been after the "ecclesiastical authority" has been invoked. The real nature of the Church is to build up continually, and it has done so in spite of the many setbacks that have been too often at the hands of its friends.

Nearly everything that has been written about the Church has been from either one of two opposite points of view, and they, both of them, have to be kept tight hold of—St. Augustine did this better than any other, and so has been generally called inconsistent. These two points of view are the Individualistic and the Catholic (reference is, of course, to religious individualism like the Methodists, and not to moral individualism like the anti-socialist). The one emphasizes the individual and his experience and the other the corporate whole. Incorporating as they do, broadly human interests and real values they can neither of them be wrong. Souls do what souls have done before them and are doing around them and yet will, if they be alive, fight through the fiercest briars for a path that is their own. The Prayer Book, as a reservoir of values here, as generally, is useful—that is for example in the first two questions and answers of the Catechism. Yet if we seriously view the Church as a system of spiritual values we can, perhaps, say something more about, not only what ought to be, but what is, consciously or no, the relation of each one of us to it.

It is probable, that from the individualistic point of view, James Martineau approached this question more intelligently than other men. He realized the necessity of the corporate aspect of the Church and was forever talking about it as "Spiritual Affinities," but one could not see that he took it in all its seriousness. He and his school have been loud in denunciation of what they call compromise in statement and the distortion of language. He spoke of each one coming with a clean and new entablature, upon which might be writ his beliefs. It will be seen that this is not quite the fact. There is a system of real values, and each new soul is born into it as into a web. He cannot escape from it by merely declaring himself free—he can never be free from it, he can only be free in it; and in about the same way that we cannot be free from the atmosphere of God's world (either physically or spiritually if the figure be granted), but we can find all the freedom that our nature can achieve or seriously desire in it and of it. It would appear then that the most useful procedure for the individual to undertake would not be to flit himself free, but to find out the nature of this web and so relate himself intelligently to it; and his relationship to it will probably be as a matter of fact and not merely as a spiritual affinity—whatever he may call it. Perhaps then we may say that each time he appreciates and appropriates one of these spiritual values he has joined the Church. When he has made real for himself a fair number of them and realized something of their complex interrelation he may become a member in high standing. And that is his growth, his freedom, his chance for a personal adventure that he may appropriate more and more of them and create brilliant pictures for himself which will for him express them. Perhaps the best picture that he can create will be wrought out of the blue of the southern sky and gold, the color of hope that is in new sunlight. When some people read the Prayer Book, or even the Sermon on the Mount, they see only snarled and crooked characters of black type; while others see a real God and a soul-sustaining one upon whom, and into whom, they can believe. The one man will cry out about distortion of language and honesty in subscription; while the other, who is the Church member in a real sense, will go forward filling his life full of beauty. The path will be everyone's and yet in a strange sense it will be his own. On this level, both the Individualist and the Catholic find their interests conserved and fulfilled in one another.

As a matter of religion and as a matter of life, each one has a tremendous stake in what all men believe, and all men have a stake in that upon which each one reposes his life. The community of experience depends on the deep and inward spiritual grasp that each one has on the system of values that is the web of life—on the passion, intellectual insight, and moral strength with which he lays hold upon reality. But there is a real and eternal community of experience, there is a real and eternal system of values. Reality is social and is socially apprehended and conserved. Narrow formulas and intellectual hurdles are not in any adequate sense real, but they are ephemeral and passing; and whosoever links his preoccupation too closely with them is of this world and has not in himself eternal life, but whosoever sets his heart first on the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness, on purity of heart, on mercy, on humility of spirit in the sight of God these have already eternal life. These are the Church members for the Church exists for the purpose of realizing harmony and reconciliation between man and God.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

WHY BE AFRAID?

Mr. Editor:

In the pathetic letter from an old lady, given in full in a recent editorial, the fear is expressed that the Church will give up the first chapters of St. Matthew and the first chapter of St. Luke.

While this is almost unthinkable, yet our best ground of confidence in Our Lord's divinity is to be found in His own words, spoken to St. Peter, after his famous confession, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in Heaven." And, "I say also unto thee, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

With regard to the movement from which these questions have come, it may be noted that it is made up of men of widely divergent opinions. Some differ but little from the conservative position; others believe that Our Lord had a merely human personality and no pre-existent life.

The most recent recruit, according to the New York Times, is Bishop Brown, formerly of Arkansas. According to the same authority, he has applied for membership in the Modern Churchmen's Union and has been accepted as a member. This man does not even believe that Our Lord ever existed, but considers Him as a mythical personage, to be associated in our minds, with "Uncle Sam" and "Santa Claus."

A movement made up of such men, however honest and intelligent, but of such heterogeneous opinions on some of the most essential doctrines of the Church, can have no stable basis; the views of some of these men are mutually destructive.

We remember again the words of Our Lord, "If a house be divided against itself it can not stand." That other saying of Our Lord, "The Truth shall make you free," seems to have been converted by them, into this, "Ye shall be free to make the Truth anything that you choose." I, like the old lady above referred to, have been young and now am old; I have seen many different phases of thought come and go and I am not afraid.

Lent.

A little pause amidst the year's rejoicing,

A little lull to calm the world's loud strife.

The winter that prepares spring's resurrection;

A time of penitence to bless our life,

A time in which to offer reparation

For all the evils of our sin-stained year;

A time to wrestle with our foes more sternly,

And learn to hold Thee, Jesus, still more dear.

A little time in which to bring before us

Thy fasting in the wilderness and anguish

The hunger, pain, the weariness and anguish

That Thou, the sinless, for our sins endured;

A little time to stand aloof with trembling

To view Thy cross and passion once again;

A time to fall before Thee, Lord, beseeching

A knowledge of the Love that bore such pain;

A time to lead that Love as intercession

For all the sin that racks the world today;

Assured the Sacrifice so freely offered

Can chase the gloom and sin of earth away.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

TWELVE TESTS OF CHARACTER.

THOSE who are struggling for programs and want more developed material than the outline form hitherto available can do nothing better than to purchase for their Leagues and Fellowships Dr. Fosdick's new book, "Twelve Tests of Character." He says in his foreword that they are Essays on practical religion and right living. But the word "Essay" has a pedantic sound to the adolescent ear. They are really Talks, illumined by Dr. Fosdick's abundant sense of humor, and with his characteristic insight into the psychology of the present age. There are several stories in the first few pages that are worth the price of the book. For instance, "Mr. Jones," said an effusive youth, "is the most wonderful man I ever knew. He remembered every card that I held at bridge last week!" To which a girl with a level head answered, "Has it ever occurred to you that Mr. Jones is forty-five years old and that he doesn't know anything else?"

The second chapter, entitled "Long Ropes and Strong Stakes," is especially stimulating. Some of the young people will resent Dr. Fosdick's diagnosis of the present age spirit, but the more mature will vindicate him by the witness of their own hearts. For instance: "A vivid illustration of the truth which we are driving at (Increased extension calls for increased stability.—Ed.) is presented in our modern young people. They are enjoying a greatly extended freedom, to balance which they have not yet achieved a stabilizing self-control. Young people used to be under artificial external restraint. Even though, as Ruskin said, Sunday did cast a 'lurid shade' two days in advance, they had to go through it. They may not have been saints above the present representatives of youth, but they were compelled, the girls especially, by the strict canons of the social code, to act more as though they were. Parental authority was still in vogue, and, while fathers and mothers were probably no wiser than they are now, their ipse dixit had more weight and drive in it when they assumed the purple and played the autocrat.

"In this last generation these external restraints have been giving way at an accelerating rate. Let us hasten to rejoice in it! A visit to the Far East should encourage our wavering faith in the general soundness of our Western methods of treating youth. The whole Asiatic tradition is on the side of solving youth's problems, and especially the problem of the relationship between the sexes, by seclusion and repression. In an old-fashioned Chinese home, the girl from her twelfth year on did not go outside her father's house until she went to her husband's, and a Japanese girl when grown could say that she had never come so near a man, even her own brother, as to touch his hand.

"We in the West are trying the opposite method. Our young people are the freemen of history—the most unsecluded, unsuppressed, unsupervised, youth of all time. Our ideal is to train them in individual initiative, to develop independent judgment and control, to throw them on their own resources—which is excellent when they have the resources! But many of them are making unmitigated nuisances of themselves because the length of their freedom has got away beyond the strength of their self-control. An unchaperoned group of girls, supposedly from "our best families," recently went with a publicly organized party on a European tour. During the entire trip they drank to excess, they smoked to excess, and their personal immodesty became a scandal to the party. They were enjoying a degree of liberty never before accorded to young women, and they were betraying their utter inability to handle it. Granting the social restraints of even a generation ago, those same girls probably would be decent, modest, self-respecting young women. As it is, their lengthened ropes have betrayed their weak stakes and their tents are wildly-flapping in the wind.

"If, therefore, one had a chance to broadcast a message which all young people would hear, one might well choose some such theme as this: real freedom never consists in mere release from old restraints. A young tree set out in a city's park with an iron cage around it for support may well resent the humiliation of that external curb, but if all the freedom which the tree seeks is release from that encumbrance it will discover that the only freedom which it has achieved is freedom to fall over when the wind blows. The first step toward real freedom for that tree is to grow deep roots of its own on which it can depend. Freedom never is obtained by mere release from old limitations; freedom is the positive substitution of inward self-control for external restraints." * * * *

"This is no sweeping indictment of our young people. The criticisms hurled against them are often frantic and extreme. Many of the critics forget their own youth; many others mistake superficial eddies for main currents; many others, seeing rightly the wayward wildness of some of the younger generation, fail to see the splendid spirit of the rest of them. They take no note of the sacrificial devotion with which some youths are taking this chaotic, bloody world from the hands of the older generation, in the hope of making something out of it. But when all such allowance has been made, a serious problem remains.

"There are altogether too many of our young people who, in expansion of their freedom, have passed the limit. Their staunchness is not equal to the strain."

The chapter entitled, "Seeing the Invisible" reminds us of that beautiful Collect which reads "That we may so pass through things temporal that we finally lose not the things eternal." As he rides on a Fifth Avenue Bus, he watches a girl quietly looking at a brand new diamond ring on the third finger of her left hand, unconscious of anything or anybody except her own happiness. Then he gives a scientific definition of a diamond—"A form of crystallized carbon in which every carbon atom is 'symmetrically surrounded by four other carbon atoms, arranged at the corners of a tetrahedron in such manner that the whole crystal is one continuous molecule." But to the girl, the diamond is her sacrament and a symbol of unseen reality.

Other topics treated are the Privilege of Living, Minding One's Own Business, Obedience, Above the Average, Harnessing the Cave Man, Magnanimity, Possessing a Past Tense, and The Power to See it Through. The book is lightened constantly by apt anecdote and historical allusion. Only lack of space prevents further quotation. Dr. Fosdick loves young people, believes in their idealism, and has the courage always to remember that he is a Bond-servant of Jesus Christ and a Prophet who speaks in God's name of the things pertaining to one's ultimate happiness and peace. There are at least twelve good programs offered by this thoroughly readable and earnest list of talks.

Program, April 13, Palm Sunday.

Topic: The Great Commission.

1. Hymn: Go Forward Christian Soldier.
2. Bible Reading: St. Matt. 28:18-22. St. Mark 4:14-20.
3. Prayer: O Almighty God, Who dost give to the loyal and faithful followers the zeal and grace to believe and to preach Thy true and lively Word; Grant us so to live faithfully that we may labor effectively for the coming of Thy Kingdom, which Thou hast commanded that we extend on earth as it is in Heaven; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.
4. Papers:
 - (a) The Story of the Great Commission.
 - (b) The Character of the Great Commission.
 1. It Comes from An Almighty King, and requires an aggressive ministry.
 2. It defines Christianity as a universal religion adapted to all nations and a civilizing religion, the secret of all true national life.
 3. It describes the duty of the Church, to make disciples of all nations; and its instruments, baptism and teaching.
 4. It interprets Baptism as initiation into a new life in the Triune God; and the Theme, the Authority and the Object of Christ's teaching; The Theme is the Gospel: The Authority, the Commands of Christ; the Object, Practical observance of His Words.
 5. It discloses the secret of the power of the Church. A realizing sense of the perpetual presence of its Lord.
 6. It defines the period when its work will cease, when redemption is consummated.
5. Open Forum: What are the modern methods of Evangelism.
6. Hymn: All People That On Earth Do Dwell.
7. Sentence Prayers.
8. Benediction.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

THE RIGHT VIEWPOINT.

Bishop Woodcock, of Kentucky, in a recent sermon took a very unusual text, using only three words, "Judas, Not Iscariot."

The Bishop proceeded to point out that five men by the name of Judas are mentioned in the New Testament, four of whom were saints and one a traitor. In spite of this great preponderance of the good over the bad, he asserted that we know more of the one traitor than we do of the four saints, and he emphasized that this situation existed today in regard to our daily affairs.

Some one is murdered, robbed or swindled in some obscure place, and the announcement of this fact is given in huge headlines in the daily papers; on the other hand, hundreds of thousands of earnest, honest people are working soberly and industriously, and making daily sacrifices for the education and support of their families, giving liberal contributions to keep up innumerable charitable institutions and no mention whatever is made of it.

Perhaps the most striking illustration of this condition has recently been given us by newspaper correspondence in our national capital. Whole pages of slanderous rumors have been printed about public officials. Invariably this material comes on the front page of the paper in enormous headlines.

One piece of news which is worth more to this country and to the world than all these sensational reports put together, appeared in a tiny paragraph on an inside sheet of a morning paper. It stated that the United States House of Representatives had passed a bill appropriating $10,000,000 to feed the starving children of Germany.

This action marks a real epoch in the world's history. Before now individuals have contributed—and contributed liberally, to the feeding of the starving in other nations, but never before in the record of human events, has a people, through its national government, set aside a great sum of money to feed the children of another country, with whom it was recently at war. Truly the words of our blessed Saviour, "Love your enemies," are beginning to echo around the world.

Let us rescue this obscure paragraph, this record of national charity, and write it in our hearts, with headlines as large as those that have been devoted to the Teapot Dome oil scandal.

Should this act of the House of Representatives be concurred in by the Senate, and signed by the President, as now seems likely to happen, it will be remembered and bear fruit long after the names of Denby, Daugherty, Wheeler and Walsh are sunk into oblivion.

If we could only acquire the habit of emphasizing the good things of life and the world instead of minimizing them, we should begin to see a different world around us.

Of course it does not do to minimize wrong conditions until they become invisible, otherwise we are not sufficiently aware of their existence to take the necessary steps to correct them.

It is, however, possible to hold the disagreeable before the eyes of the public until an habitual cynicism sets in, which is almost as paralyzing to useful, beneficial effort as is utter ignorance.

Let us, therefore, revel in the goodness of the world rather than wallow in its disgrace.

PRACTICAL MOVING PICTURE REGULATION.

From New York comes the news of the trying-out of a plan which seems to be more practicable than censorship for the control of moving-pictures.

According to press dispatches we are told this:

"Plans to try out as soon as possible the 'voluntary citizen jury' method of dealing with questionable plays and thus forestall a possible clamor for legal censorship of the stage were discussed yesterday at a luncheon at the Fraternity Club, 22 East Thirty-eighth Street, arranged by the Social Service Committee of the New York Federation of Churches, of which Dr. Charles E. Gilbert is Secretary.

Dr. Gilbert, who also is Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, announced after the conference that Commissioner of Licenses August W. Glatzmayer had repeated his willingness to cooperate with the Churches' representatives in making use of the voluntary jury plan.

"We heard from Mr. Glatzmayer with a good deal of satisfaction," said Dr. Gilbert, "that he proposed to use the proposed method of dealing with improper plays when complaints are made to him. Now we are going to see that the public is informed fully concerning this method."

"Dr. Gilbert added that the Social Service Committee would prepare a 'clear statement' of the proposed plan, distribute the information in pamphlets and bulletins and then endeavor to bring about its utilization.

"We will seek the cooperation of the Jewish and Roman Catholic Churches," said Dr. Gilbert, "and urge that complaints against questionable plays be sent to the Commissioner of Licenses.

"We will not stop there. We will ask people making such complaints to send duplicates to us so we may follow them up and see what results are obtained.

"If the voluntary play jury method proves impracticable and ineffective, we will seek some other way to deal with the situation, by legislation or otherwise."

"Dr. Gilbert said that the Social Service Committee was gratified to hear from the office of District Attorney Joab H. Banton that one salacious play had been taken off by the producer and that numerous revisions had been made by managers in other plays which were complained of at the beginning of the theatrical season.

"It is our aim to enlighten public opinion concerning plays," said Dr. Gilbert. "There never were so many good plays on the stage as there are today."

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Alfred Newberry, Assistant Secretary of the Social Service Department of the National Church, has very kindly called our attention to the fact that our information with regard to the letters on the Hygiene of Maternity and Infancy, which we said were issued by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor at Washington, D. C., is incorrect.

That Bureau does not issue such letters, but a set of pre-natal letters is issued by the Maternity Center Association, 370 Seventh Avenue, New York City, for which there is a charge of 25 cents.

We are glad to make this correction and again take the opportunity of calling the attention of Church people to this subject, and asking that they use their influence with women who have not the intelligence or initiative to take advantage of such courses to urge them to do so.

A Prayer For Use In Lent.

Help me, O Lord, to lift up my heart unto Thee. Thou hast promised to draw nigh to those that draw nigh to Thee. Forgive, I pray Thee, my wrong-doing, my failures, my idleness of the past; help me to use the present aright. Teach me, O Lord, Thy way, and help me to follow it. May Thy grace find its way to the heart of all Thy children, and may all the world learn of Thee. Turn aside those who plan evil, and prosper the work of all who love what is good and true. Increase kindness and fidelity among those who bear Thy name; unite Thy Church in the work of the Gospel; and give to every Christian a part in bringing Thy Kingdom upon earth; through our Friend and Saviour Jesus Christ.—Amen.

EVERY-DAY LIFE OF A MIDDLE-CLASS GERMAN HOUSEWIFE

By THE REV. ERNEST LYMAN MILLS.

Director Federal Council's Campaign for Relief of German Children.

Let us picture, if we can, one day out of the life of a German housewife and see how great the burden has become.

Breakfast is prepared easily enough, for it consists of nothing but substitute coffee and a slice of black bread, sometimes with margarine. The children won't get anything else to eat all morning long.

Before leaving for school, the twelve-year-old boy goes down four flights of stairs into the cellar to carry up coal. Those pails are rather heavy, but the child carries them gladly, for they are lucky to have a little coal. There are many who have no coal at all and are freezing. Some years ago there was steam heat in their homes, but since it grew so expensive, every one has had to furnish his own stove and fuel. And it requires a great deal of time and worry to get even the small amount that is officially distributed.

After the children are gone, mother makes fire in the only room that they can afford to heat, and then she rushes down to the baker's, where she finds a long line standing, all eager to get one loaf of bread, the price of which might be doubled if she waited until the afternoon. It is bitterly cold and raining, her coat is thin and she is shivering, but she waits patiently for more than an hour. With the rest of her meagre money she buys some margarine, a pound of rolled oats and rice, and some bouillon cubes.

When she comes home, she has to do the laundry, and there is no warm water supply any more. She must heat all her water, one pot piled on top of the other, heating both at the same time to save gas. She must be saving also with the soap, and that makes the work twice as hard and tiring.

In the meantime the children come home and ask for their lunch. They get a cup of coffee and a slice of bread with jam. They would like to ride to the far-away playground to skate, but there are many reasons against it: first of all, the fare is too expensive, and then, the worn-out coats are not warm enough. Last winter's coats are outgrown and new ones cannot be bought. Brother's shoes are torn and there is no money left to mend them this week. So he sat in school with wet feet all the time and now he has a bad cold. Sister complains of toothache, and mother finds that her gums are inflamed; she ought to send her to the dentist but that is too expensive, so she tries to help the child herself.

After that she and the girl sit down to do some of that fine needlework which will go to foreign countries and secure them a little extra money with which to buy milk, perhaps once a week. The boy tries to repair a water tap. Last time the plumber took eight million marks for repairing it, while the rent was only seven million marks last month. While they are sitting together, sister tells mother what she heard in school. The most needy children have been selected again for school breakfast. The lucky ones will drink a cup of cocoa with a real white roll, or—think of it!—milk soup with a sweet bun, while the rest look on with hungry eyes.

As they sit there talking, the father, who has some small official city position, comes home. He brings in the daily stories of food riots and shop windows broken in broad daylight. Most of the shops have iron bars in front of them, or even are boarded up clear to the top. Two of his fellow-workers did not have money left to pay their car-fare home. Another man fainted in a meeting because he had not had lunch for three days and only an insufficient dinner.

The evening meal is not very difficult for mother to prepare as it consists only of rice soup, with some bouillon cubes, and a cup of tea. There is no meat in the house. For a long time they have not been able to eat meat even on Sundays.

After dinner they go to sleep in the cold bed rooms, with anxious thoughts about the future. Although it is only eight o'clock, they must go to bed—they cannot burn the gas as that makes the bill too high.

Days like these are experienced by thousands of families in Germany with weakened bodies and tired, strained, tense nerves. They live in uncertainty as to whether or not they may be able to keep their possessions or to be without income, and inexorably given over to starvation. The joy of life fades away. All that can be thought of for many a family is simply the items of food for next day. No new clothing, books, music, theatre, or even a newspaper, can be thought of. Worst of all, there is no feeling of hope that the situation will be speedily improved. The Christian people of America are trying to help through the special campaign for German Relief now being made by the Federal Council of the Churches.

EMERGENCY RELIEF FUND FOR THE JAPANESE CHURCH

There was received for the Emergency Relief Fund up to March 20, 1924, the sum of $526,405.26. Disbursements and allotments have been made under the supervision of Bishop McKim. In accordance with his requisitions a total of $460,000 has been forwarded to Japan. The balance of the Fund has been retained in this country to meet payments necessarily made here.

The Fund will not be entirely expended for a year or two, or perhaps longer, as the aid now being given for the support of the pastors of Japanese congregations and for the maintenance of our institutional work must continue during the process of reconstruction. The following allotments and disbursements have been made:

1. Allotment for the support of Japanese clergy, teachers, doctors, nurses, etc.	$116,820.00
Prior to September 1, 1923, these workers were supported wholly or partially by the congregations and institutions they served. The earthquake and fire greatly reduced their earning and giving capacity.
2. Expenditure for emergency repairs to safeguard property	5,603.87
3. Allotments for temporary buildings for shelter and worship	40,000.00
4. Expenditures to reimburse Japanese and American workers for personal losses, clothing, household effects, etc.	55,199.12
5. Allotment to St. Luke's Hospital for barrack buildings to be used for three or four years and for equipment, exclusive of X-Ray equipment	100,000.00
6. Expenditures on account of St. Luke's Hospital X-Ray equipment, from gift designated for the purpose	8,740.94
7. Advance to Christ Church, Tokyo, for purchase of land, the amount to be repaid to the American Church Mission in annual installments through ten years	10,000.00

8. Allotments to St. Paul's University for repairs on buildings (not including chapel and library)	60,000.00
This will be returned to the Emergency Relief Fund from the Reconstruction Fund when available.
9. Allotment to St. Margaret's School for land, temporary buildings and equipment	100,000.00
Of this amount, $50,000 will be returned to the Emergency Relief Fund from the Reconstruction Fund when available.
10. Expenditure for land as site for new church and parish house to be used by the Japanese and American congregations, formerly worshipping in Trinity Cathedral	55,000.00
This will be returned to the Emergency Relief Fund from the Reconstruction Fund when available.
11. Expenditure for bringing missionaries to this country, because of lack of housing in Japan	2,795.00
12. Printing, postage, cables, travel, miscellaneous expenses	3,562.28
	$557,721.21

Of the foregoing items, it is expected that returns will be made to the Emergency Relief Fund from the Reconstruction Fund, when available, as follows:

Item 8—St. Paul's University	$60,000
Item 9—St. Margaret's School	50,000
Item 10—Aoyama Church	55,000

The amount refunded will be used to meet such further payments for the support of workers, maintenance of work, repair of buildings, etc., as may be necessary during the process of reconstruction. The unexpended balance, if any, will be transferred to the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

In addition to the money which actually passed through the Treasury of the Council, many hundreds of dollars were sent directly by personal friends to our missionaries in Japan for relief work. Thousands of other friends joined in sending packages containing a vast variety of emergency supplies, especially clothing. Bishop McKim had received approximately one thousand packages up to the time he left Japan on January 22. Members of the Church Periodical Club sent nearly 3,000 books of general reading, besides some most valuable volumes for the medical library of St. Luke's Hospital.

The aid given to the Church's work was by no means confined to what came from the United States. Japanese Churchmen in other dioceses hurried to the aid of their fellow-countrymen with contributions of approximately $13,000 in money. Hundreds of kimonos and futon were quickly made and shipped to Tokyo. The girls of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, made about five hundred garments.

The Imperial Government was most sympathetic and helpful. The city of Tokyo has assisted in the work of St. Luke's Hospital by providing five barrack-type buildings. Through its President, Prince Tokugawa, the Japan Relief Association, a civilian organization, has given $12,500 to aid St. Luke's Hospital in relief work.

The United States Army was one of the best friends American residents generally and our mission had in Tokyo during September and October, 1923. If it had not been for the food, tents, blankets and other supplies quickly delivered from the Army depot at Manila, Americans who seemed unable to get aid through the American Red Cross, would have suffered vastly more than they did. The American Army gave St. Luke's Hospital a complete field hospital outfit—nearly one hundred tents, two hundred cots, with blankets and other furnishings, surgical instruments, $20,000 worth of drugs. This enabled Dr. Teusler to reorganize the hospital soon after his return to Tokyo and put it in a position to give the magnificent relief service it has since rendered.

First Call to Rural Conference.

The successful conference of clergy engaged in rural work, the first national conference of its kind in the Church, held at Madison, Wisconsin, last summer, will be repeated this year at the same place, June 30 to July 11.

It is to be a part of the University of Madison rural conference. In addition to our own group, the Roman Catholics, the Methodists, the Baptists, and ten other Christian bodies are represented. The program is a very carefully worked out one, offering subjects of general interest, such as the economic problems of community life, rural sociology, community recreation, special interests, such as boys' work, community surveys, health programs and agricultural subjects, and also providing for separate meetings of the different Church groups on their peculiar problems. It is interesting to note in the advance announcement of the Conference a paragraph headed "Episcopal Group Sets High Standards," which reads as follows:

"Although with a relatively small rural constituency, the Episcopal group, under the leadership of Dean Lathrop, made a real contribution to the entire conference, as well as achieving particular success in their own special group, which met daily. Eighteen men were present, representing eleven states. This group printed their own proceedings, made requirements of their men, in the way of readings and studies, and made the following recommendation to the college with regard to future plans: 'We are convinced that it is a real contribution to the equipment of a rural clergyman, and to the whole problem of the rural church and social life that can be performed by an institution of this character.'"

Large Attendance Expected at Church Congress.

Interest in the Church Congress, which is to meet in Boston, beginning April 29, and running through May 2, is so keen that the Committee on Arrangements has felt obliged to secure a larger hall than had been first planned. The final decision is that the opening meeting on Tuesday evening, at which Bishop Lawrence will make his address of welcome, and at which the Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, D. D., will give his historical address covering fifty years of the Church Congress in America, will be held in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral. All the other meetings, morning, afternoon and evening, will be held in Ford Hall. The hour for the afternoon meetings has been set at three o'clock, except on the last day, Friday, when the meeting will begin at two, in order to permit people to catch the late afternoon trains out of Boston.

Summer School For Women Students At Berkeley Divinity School.

The Berkeley Divinity School will hold a summer session for women students from June 9 to 28. This is a continuation of the course, which was held one year ago and which proved so successful that the trustees have voted an appropriation, and the course will be carried out this year on similar lines. Only about twenty students can be received, and membership will be limited to college graduates or those capable of doing work of a graduate character. The faculty will consist of the following: Dean W. P. Ladd, the Rev. C. B. Hedrick, the Rev. Herbert Parrish, the Rev. Horace Fort, Miss Mary Van Kleeck and Mr. W. B. Davis.

The aim of the School is well-expressed by Mrs. Marguerite Wilkinson, the poet, who was in attendance last year, and who has recently written an article for "The Woman Citizen," regarding her impressions.

"The Episcopal Church," she writes, "often regarded as a stronghold of tradition by those who know only its conservative representatives, has begun the higher religious education of women at Berkeley Divinity School in Middletown, Connecticut. Last summer nineteen women assembled there to study great and ancient subjects usually reserved for men.

"This Summer Course for Women was not merely one more religious conference or advanced Bible Class. Courses of that kind had long been plentiful. These women met for the intellectual consideration of important aspects of the Christian faith, and a specialized study of the various theological subjects—Church History, Old and New Testament, Apologetics, etc.

"It was delightful to see these grave theological ladies going to chapel in scholastic caps and gowns as the young divinity students go in the winter. It was delightful to listen to their judicious feminine arguments as to the relative merits of Tertullian and Justin Martyr. It was delightful to drink tea with them on the green lawn—and tea was very orthodox at Berkeley. But it was more than delightful. It was inspiring. It is important to know that this work was done last summer and that it will be done again this summer—important for more reasons than one.

"Religion is drawing closer and closer to science the world over. The relationship between the two is being studied more sanely and reverently than ever before. This makes thought necessary not merely for the clergy, but for the intelligent laity everywhere. Especially is this true in colleges where young people get the best that science and pagan philosophy have to offer and meet the boldest and most brilliant of man's arguments against religion, but often fail to find anything which might sustain them in the faith of their fathers, or enable them to build a greater faith of their own. As a matter of fact, Christian Theology should be religiously taught in colleges to women as well as to men; it is not enough to teach it to a few in the divinity schools. But it is a beginning. This course should be especially interesting and valuable to young college women.

"It is not enough, either, that leadership should be able to expound from the pulpit. It is necessary that the laity should be ready to follow and support intelligent and progressive leadership. When they are ready, persecution for an idea's sake, will be most unusual, the best of the clergy will be free to say the best things they have in their minds and hearts, and the Church will be authoritative in a new and glorious way."

Nine Brotherhood Camps Scheduled.

Churchmen interested in development of the older boys of the Church are interested in plans for the chain of Brotherhood Training Camps, announcement of which has just been received.

Camp Carleton: Located at Angola, N. Y., June 23 to July 5, in charge of Field Secretary John H. Frizzell and William Roeser.

Camp Houghteling, Twin Lake, Mich., June 23 to July 5. Six parishes in the diocese have already made reservations for their boys. C. W. Brickman, Field Secretary, will be director.

Camp Tuttle, Southeast of Springfield, Mo., open June 23 to July 5, in charge of Field Secretaries Alexander and Dixon.

Camp Finney, Little Switzerland, N. C., June 23 to July 5, with Willard and Eppes in charge, and Bishop Penick as Chaplain.

Camp Morrison, Waterloo, Iowa, July 1 to 11, operated by Diocesan workers.

Camp Kirchhoffer, San Luis Obispo, Cal., July 5 to 18, directed by Field Secretary MacPherson.

Camp Bonsall, Oxford, Pa., July 14 to 26, Mr. J. B. Eppes, Director, the Rev. Edmund Gettier, Assistant Director.

Camp Wood, Delaware, N. J., July 14 to July 26, in charge of Mr. Guy Willard, with Archdeacon Bambach, of Brooklyn, as Chaplain, and Field Secretary Frank DuMoulin, Business Manager.

Camp Gardiner, Winchendon, Mass., July 14 to 26, Director John H. Frizzell; Assistant, William Rossier; Business Manager, John W. Irwin.

Camp Wood has been moved from Long Island to a beautiful site near the famous Delaware Water Gap. Camp Bonsall will have new cabins, similar to those being erected for Camp Houghteling, and Camp Gardiner is located on the new site recently announced, a tent camp with splendid facilities for recreation and athletics.

The Pennsylvania Department of Forestry has made a survey of the Camp Bonsall site, and arrangements are being made for extensive reforestation of the site with White and Red Pine, Rank Pine and Spruce trees, supplied by the state.

Keep Moving.

The Church Building Fund does not need this injunction. Not to move is to die. Therefore, in and out go its dollars year after year—always in motion. This is what the turnover of 1923 accomplished:

Completed fourteen churches, ten rectories and fifteen parish houses in loans of $162,300.

Completed twenty-one churches, thirteen rectories and nine parish houses in gifts and grants of $33,675.

A church building completed every four days.

This was possible because $111,635.66 of capital was returned from building loans; and because $26,000 was given to the capital fund by two communicants of the Church.

All dollars sent to the building fund are assured a steady job, and are in line for a try at perpetual motion.

Death of Bishop Olmsted.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Tyler Olmsted, D. D., died on March 26, at his home in Utica, New York. He had been Bishop of Central New York since 1902, and had long held a position of prominence in the National Church, although for the last five years he had been in declining health. He is succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., his faithful coadjutor since 1915.

Bishop Olmsted was born in Cohoes, New York, in 1842, and was educated at Trinity College, graduating with the degree of B. A. in 1865. He was ordained deacon in 1867 and priest in 1868 by Bishop Horatio Potter. His first work was as instructor in mathematics in St. Stephen's College for two years, leaving to become assistant in Trinity Parish, New York City. He was rector of Grace Church, Utica, New York, from 1884 to 1899, and Vicar of St. Agnes' Chapel of Trinity Parish, New York, from 1899 to 1902.

Bishop Olmsted was consecrated October 2, 1902, by Bishops Huntington, Niles, H. C.-Potter, Walker, Worthington, W. A. Leonard and C. S. Olmsted. Under his administration the Diocese of Central New York continued the rapid growth that had been demonstrated under the leadership of Bishop Huntington, and today ranks as one of the strongest and largest dioceses in the Church.

Besides his B. A. from Trinity, Bishop Olmsted also received his M. A. from Trinity in 1867, was honored by Hobart College with the degree of S. T. D., by Syracuse with a D. D., and Hamilton College conferred on him the LL. D.

Permanent Conference Center at Racine.

For some years Church leaders and workers have felt the need of a permanent center, a convenient building and equipment, for conferences and retreats, for meetings of large commissions and committees and other groups. Through gifts of interested people, and the co-operation of Bishop Webb and the De-Koven Academy, the National Council has been enabled to lease Taylor Hall at Racine, Wisconsin, as a national center for devotion and conference. The Woman's Auxiliary has loaned Mrs. George Biller for six months, beginning in April, to take charge of the house.

The Center will be a great boon, not only for convenience and efficiency in meetings and conferences, but also for the cultivation of devotional life in national Church work. Hereafter when we read notices or reports of groups "meeting in Taylor Hall at Racine," it will be a satisfaction to realize that there we are at home.

The following supervisory committees have been appointed. Representing the National Council: Bishop Gailor, Mr. Franklin, Dr. Gardner, Miss Elizabeth Matthews. An advisory committee: Mrs. Biller, Miss Frances Bussey, Milwaukee, Wis.; Mr. Charles L. Dibble, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Mrs. R. B. Gregory, Chicago, Ill.; Dean Ivins, of Nashotah; the Rev. E. J. Randall, Chicago; the Rev. George C. Stewart, Evanston, Ill.; the Rev. Harwood Sturtevant, Racine; Mrs. A. O. Simpkin, Racine; Miss R. Winkler, Milwaukee; the Rev. Charles H. Young, Howe, Ind. On this latter committee are also the executive secretaries of the Departments of the National Council and of the Woman's Auxiliary.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Two Richmond Churches to Unite.

By unanimous vote of both congregations, the Church of the Holy Trinity, and Grace Church, Richmond, will unite.

While the agreement between the two congregations for consolidation is that the two bodies will become one organization on October 1, it is thought probable that they will be united June 1. In explaining the amalgamation, representatives of both congregations pointed out that, through consolidation, a greater and larger work can be carried out.

Holy Trinity Church will be used by the merged congregation, the building of Grace Church probably being sold, although no definite plans for this have been completed. The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., and the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., will serve as associate rectors of the united church.

The two congregations will represent one of the largest memberships of Episcopalians in the city, totaling about 1,000. There are 695 members of Holy Trinity and about 300 of Grace.

St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector: On Sunday, March 30, at the evening service, Bishop Brown visited and administered the rite of confirmation to a class of twenty-two persons, most of whom were adults. This was a special visitation, the regular class, one of twenty-five, having been presented on Sunday, March 2.

This was a most impressive service, and the congregation one worthy of the occasion.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Men's Club of Columbia Conducts "Go To Church" Campaign.

St. Paul's Parish, Columbia, the Rev. G. F. Caruthers, D. D., rector, has a very active Men's Club. During Lent they are conducting a very effective "Go to Church" campaign. The campaign is being conducted by three flying squadrons of men, and they are scouring the parish for confirmation candidates to be presented to Bishop Darlington when he visits the parish on the fourth Sunday in Lent. The club has also mailed two hundred and fifty copies of a pamphlet, giving reasons for attending the church, to as many families in the community. In addition to this, they are also running a large display "ad" in the Saturday edition of the local paper. Neat window cards, carrying argument for the Church, have been placed in numerous homes, and posters have been placed in factories, stores, and office buildings. The campaign is proving a success.

Mount Joy: What is said to be one of the most attractive rectories in America has recently been completed in St. Luke's Parish, Mount Joy, the Rev. P. H. Asheton-Martin, rector. The new rectory stands on a lot attached to the church property, and is built of blue limestone to harmonize with the church. The interior appointments are of the most modern and approved designs. The total cost is about $18,000. The present rector assumed charge of the parish about eighteen months ago, and, since his coming, the parish has been a hive of activity. Mr. Asheton-Martin was one of the promoters of the Men's Federation of Mount Joy, an organization for the men of the town. In his own parish he has organized an active Men's Club, and has started organizations for the young people, a musical and dramatic society. The parish is an important factor in the life of the community.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Bishop's Guild.

A meeting of the Bishop's Guild was held on Tuesday, March 25, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Bethlehem Chapel, after which the business meeting was held in St. Alban's Guild Hall. Reports of all the women's organizations of the diocese were made and showed a marked activity and growth throughout the diocese, which the Bishop declared to be a source of great comfort and encouragement to him and all who are laboring for the building-up of the Diocese of Washington.

Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

In order to accommodate the evening branches of the Auxiliary, composed largely of women who are unable to attend the afternoon meetings, the regular April meeting was held on Thursday evening at St. Stephen's Church. The speaker was Mrs. R. W. Hibbert, wife of the Rev. R. W. Hibbert of the Ragged Mountain Missions in Virginia. Mrs. Hibbert is a native mountain woman, who came under the influence of the mountain missions in her youth and later became a worker at one of the settlements in the Blue Ridge.

A Forward Step.

Announcement is made that the vestry of St. John's Church, Georgetown, has voted unanimously to become a member of the Washington Federation of Churches. Churches of all denominations are affiliated with this organization, and the rector, the Rev. John S. Moses, in one of his weekly bulletins, rejoices that this parish has taken this step, which, he believes, is one in the interest of Church unity.

Funeral of the Rev. J. L. Fish.

The funeral of the Rev. James Logan Fish was held March 22, in St. Andrew's Church, Wheeling, of which church he had been rector since 1913. The service was read by Bishops Gravatt and Strider, Bishop Gravatt saying a few words in memory of the devoted service of Mr. Fish. The clergy present besides the Bishops, were: the Rev. Messrs. J. Brittingham, D. D., William Sidener, E. B. Andrews, J. L. Langhorne, William Meade and C. G. Cogley. Mr. Fish served faithfully in Fairmont, Keyser, Elkins, Thomas, Davis, Sisterville, New Martinsville, Chester and St. Andrew's, Wheeling. He built the churches at Keyser and Elkins. Besides accomplishing much other work of more than a local nature. He was the correspondent for the Diocese of West Virginia to the Southern Churchman. He was well known and beloved over the whole diocese and the passing of this faithful servant of Christ will be felt as a distinct loss.

West Virginia is among the one hundred per cent dioceses that have paid in full their quota for the budget of the General Church.

Lenten Services in New Orleans.

Lenten services, under the auspices of the Church Club of Louisiana, are being held in the Strand Theatre, New Orleans. These services commenced on March 6, and will continue until April 11, from 12:05 to 12:30 P. M., daily, except Saturdays and Sundays. On Tuesday of each week, night services are held in the various city churches, the preachers being the same as at the mid-day services. The Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips, of Philadelphia, was the preacher for the week commencing March 10, and delivered a series of very forcible and eloquent addresses, attracting very large gatherings, there being over eight hundred present at one of the mid-day services, and the attendance at the night service at St. Paul's Church, on March 11, when he preached, filled the church. Dr. Phillips proved himself to be an exceptionally strong preacher and made a most favorable impression upon all who were fortunate enough to hear him. The Rt. Rev. James Matthew Maxon, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee, was the preacher at the services the following week; and at the night service on March 18, at Grace Church, when he preached, the church was crowded to its capacity and over one hundred persons stood in the rear during the entire service. Bishop Maxon also delivered addresses to men at St. George's Church, on March 17, and to members of the Young People's Service League at Trinity Parish House, on March 20, both of which were largely attended and his addresses were most inspiring and interesting. The Rt. Rev. S. M. Griswold, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, was the speaker for the week beginning March 24, and at the service the night of March 25, when he preached at St. George's Church, a very large congregation was present, it being necessary to place chairs in the aisle and in the rear of the church, to accommodate the crowd. The attendance at all services has been much larger than in previous years and there has been an average of about five hundred persons daily at the mid-day services. The Church Club feels very gratified at the support given these services and the congregations are showing their appreciation of the splendid list of speakers that the Club has been so fortunate to secure by their large and regular attendance.

Bishop Kinsolving of Texas and Bishop Mikel of Atlanta, are the speakers for the last two weeks.

A Promising Mission.

A new Sunday School has just been formed in St. George's, Bristow, under the leadership of Mr. A. A. Hopper, one of the interested laymen of the mission.

Mr. Spencer, the Executive Secretary, read Morning Service in Bristow, on the second Sunday in Lent. This is one of the most promising Missions in the state; situated as it is right in the midst of one of the richest oil sections. The Bishop has recently appointed the Rev. Dr. C. B. Williams as minister in charge of Bristow. Dr. Williams is in charge of the work at Sapulpa as well.

The Rev. and Mrs. B. N. Lovgren, of St. John's, Norman, are now residing in the new rectory, recently added to the equipment of the work in the State University centre.

St. George's Mission, Bristow, now has a Sunday School, under the leadership of one of the local laymen, Mr. A. A. Hopper.

A New Organ For Trinity Church, Aurora.

On Sunday, March 9, the communicants of Trinity Church, Aurora, the Rev. Benj. E. Chapman, rector, put on a campaign for a new pipe organ in memory of the late Rev. C. S. Holbrook, who for twenty-three years was rector of that parish. By Monday evening at 6:30 the teams reported at a dinner in the parish house with the sum of $10,000 secured out of a desired $12,000. By the time the campaign was closed they reported $13,700 with some small subscriptions still coming in. It looks like the amount desired will exceed the desired goal by $2,000.

A committee has been appointed by the vestry to purchase the organ, which it is hoped will be installed in the early autumn.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Mission Services of Unusual Interest.

Weeks of quiet, serious preparation, culminating on Sunday, March 16, in a church filled with a reverent, expectant congregation, marked the opening of the Mission in Trinity Church, Covington, which was held from March 16 to 23, with the Rev. J. A. Schaad as Missioner. The rector of the parish, the Rev. James D. Gibson, had led his people in public and private prayers for the mission; group meetings for prayer and study had been held throughout the entire parish, some of which were led by the clergy and members of some of the denominational churches in Covington.

The keynote of the mission was sounded by the missioner in the opening service, "I am come that ye might have life, and might have it more abundantly," and coming to hearts ready to hear, the power of the Holy Spirit in this message and those that followed through the week, was brought forcefully to the consciousness of the hearers.

All of the services were well attended, the size of the congregations growing each night in spite of bad weather toward the end of the week.

The daily celebration of the Holy Communion with an address on personal religion based on the Twenty-third Psalm, proved to be what the rector had called it, "the power-house of the mission," but more than that, a power in the lives of those who were privileged to attend. In connection with the last of these services an unusual opportunity was given to the women of the parish and their friends to see China and the work of the Church there through an American girl's eyes, as the missioner has a daughter serving in our Mission in Anking.

One of the outstanding features of the mission was the broadcasting of the service on Wednesday night, March 19, from Station WLW, Cincinnati. It was the first time that a mission service had been broadcast, and Trinity was the first Episcopal Church in the vicinity of Cincinnati to have a service on the air. At 7:15 the chimes rang out with "Lead, Kindly Light," and for fifteen minutes one after another of the grand old hymns of the Christian faith were caught by the little receiving instrument as the bells pealed forth, and sent out for hundreds, and perhaps thousands of miles. At 7:30 the service began with "How Firm a Foundation," and it seemed that the knowledge that their voices and words were carrying to far corners of the land, added a depth of feeling and reality to the words of the prayers and the confession of faith. It was good to know that the missioner's message, giving the five points which constitute the "Charter of the Christian Religion," was reaching the hearts of a great company of unseen hearers.

A particularly happy incident connected with the broadcasting of this service was that the mother of the Rector, "listening in" at her home in Huntington, W. Va., heard her son's voice as he led in the Creed and prayers of the Church, and at the close of the service a telegram from her was received at the broadcasting station, saying that she and another son had heard the service perfectly. Through the thoughtful kindness of those who were broadcasting the service this telegram was also placed on the air, that others might know of the joy that had been given.

But that was only one of the many messages from friends in other cities and shut-ins in Covington. One lady, a member of a Cincinnati church, who has long been an invalid and confined to her home, telephoned that it was the first time she had heard the Church's service in six years, and another shut-in in Covington was made inexpressibly happy in being able once more to hear the beloved chimes of Trinity Church, while from New Rochelle, N. Y., came word from a friend of the rector that he had united in the service. But one of the most worthwhile experiences was that of a Covington boy in the lobby of a hotel in Atlanta, Ga., when the chimes of his native city rang out, "Lead, Kindly Light," and he heard the whole service. Such an experience cannot but be a marvelous influence in the life of a young man away from home.

The clergy and many of the members of the nearby churches of our communion, as well as many members of other churches, united with Trinity in helping to make this mission a thing of vital worth to the community.

Church Unity at Graham.

An unusual and most interesting venture is to be tried by the several denominations at Graham this summer. Shortly after the close of the schools at the beginning of June a "Daily Vacation Bible School" will be inaugurated, in which all of the members of the local Ministers' Union will cooperate. While the plans have not yet been completed, it is probable that some teachers will be brought from outside of Graham.

The Rev. H. H. Young, rector of St. Mary's Church, Graham, and dean of the Associate Missions field, is the Secretary of the local organization of ministers, and one of the prime movers in this important experiment.

The Parish School of St. Paul's, Lynchburg.

One of the most unique and historic activities of St. Paul's is its Parish Industrial School. Prior to the War Between the States, an especially interested and highly respected member of St. Paul's was a blacksmith and junk dealer by the name of Bob Ross. At his death, during the War, he left his estate, valued at two thousand dollars, to the Rev. T. M. Carson, rector of St. Paul's, for use at his discretion. Remembering Mr. Ross' affection for the children of his neighborhood, Mr. Carson organized in 1863 a Parish Day School. Later the public schools were inaugurated. The Parish Day School was no longer needed and in 1877 was disbanded. Its place was taken by an Industrial School for training along domestic lines the girls of the poorer families in the parish. The Industrial School has continued to the present time and is now actively functioning and receives the unselfish interest of a number of the ladies of the parish. The sessions are held every Saturday from ten to one o'clock, when sewing and other phases of household management are taught.

The late Mrs. Maria Dirom was for many years the head of the Industrial School and gave it most enthusiastic devotion. In her memory a fund was raised, from the proceeds of which lunches are served at the school. In addition to this the school has each year a Christmas celebration.

The history of this organization is a matter of the greatest pride among the ladies of St. Paul's, who see from day to day splendid results in the city of the work that they and their predecessors have done as members of the faculty of the Industrial School.

Interesting Study Groups.

Eight inter-parochial groups from the four parishes in Savannah are studying a course on "The Rehabilitation of the Church's Work in Japan," repeating a plan successfully carried out last year, and two groups are studying "The County Jail," in response to a request of the Diocesan and National Departments of Christian Social Service. In Augusta, in the Church of the Good Shepherd the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, rector, one branch of the Woman's Auxiliary is studying "Creative Forces in Japan," and the other "Stewardship," by the Rev. Mr. Kemerer. The rector of this parish is leading a night group in the study of "Jails." While in Augusta, Mrs. D. D. Taber, temporary field worker for the diocese, held five discussion group meetings on "Creative Forces in Japan," and had an attendance each day of between forty-five and fifty women. In St. Paul's Church, Albany, the rector, the Rev. John Moore Walker, is leading weekly a night group in the study of "Jails."

Healing Mission at West Palm Beach.

The rector of Holy Trinity Church, West Palm Beach, the Rev. L. A. Wye, reports that the Healing Mission which ended February 28 has been a very great spiritual benefit to all who attended. The large attendance at every service, and the many testimonials of improved condition, spiritually, mentally and physically; all have proved conclusively that the work of the Society is meeting a great need in the world today, and that the Church can most successfully minister to that need.

Dr. Banks' direct appeal to the minds and hearts of his hearers has made for him and for the Church a host of friends in the community. Thirty-five people testified to definite benefits received at the close of the service on Friday night.

Following the Mission at Holy Trinity the Director of the Society will conduct Missions at Tallahassee, Aiken, S. C., White Plains, N. Y., Pawtucket, R. I., Oshkosh and Rhinelander, Wis., and Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

On March 21 Mr. John W. Lethaby, the General Field Secretary, begins a series of Missions in Indiana with Archdeacon White.

Bishop Jones Conducts Successful Mission.

A mission for the Life More Abundant was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones in St. Mark's Church, Chester, S. C., March 16 to 23, inclusive. The addresses of Bishop Jones caused considerable friendly discussion. The subjects of these addresses were as follows:

March 16, The Simplicity of God, and the Divinity of Man; March 17, What is a First Century Gospel Worth Today?; March 18, Making Dreams Come True, and Reducing the Spiritual Death Rate; March 19, Industrial Teamwork; March 20, The One Human Family; March 21, Growing Corn and Lives, and Better Than Punishment; March 22, The Blasphemy of War; March 23, The New Way of Life, and The Conquest of Fear.

This last sermon was preached on Sunday night at the Baptist Church at a union service at the request of the pastors of the town. The Episcopal Church would not hold the congregation.

In addition to these addresses of the mission, Bishop Jones preached Thursday morning at St. John's, Winnsboro, on the invitation of the rector, the Rev. W. P. Peyton. He also addressed the High School, and was one of two speakers at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce.

Bishop Jones convinced most of his hearers that his message was in conformity with the principles of Jesus Christ. The only difficulty seemed to be in finding courage to apply those principles in the serious business of life. The Mission has served to redirect the thinking of the parish to the Way of Life laid down by Christ.

Unusual Service at St. Mark's in Bowery.

After having been forbidden to do so, the Rev. Dr. W. N. Guthrie, rector, gave in St. Mark's Church in the Bowery a service of his own arranging. He called it a Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin, and invited many Church clergy to come and see and hear it. He omitted Evening Prayer, and gave the Festal Service twice, once afternoon and again at night. So great was the press to get in that admission had to be by ticket.

In an address made by the rector, as part of the service, it was claimed to be a pageant, and as such said to be allowed. A harp played while the rector read the prayers. Colored lights were employed, and a silken banner of the Annunciation was borne down the aisle and placed before the altar, screening it.

Then six dancers came forth, barefooted, in voluminous silk garments, ample in point of modesty, but gorgeous in colors. Wide butterfly sleeves fell to wrists of the dancers. It was the ritual Dance of the Della Robbia Annunciation. It was more a series of restrained pictures than dancing of the usual kind. Incense burned and the whole was screened in part by enveloping smoke.

Among those interviewed by the newspapers, all said the service was dignified, and most approved. Some said they could not see much good in it all, but they might be wrong. It might help others. It is announced that it is to be repeated, and that similar services are set for certain future dates.

In a formal letter Bishop Manning announced that he would not keep his appointment to visit St. Mark's in June, nor would he come at any other time. He reminded that he had forbidden such service, and observed that Evening Prayer was omitted. There the matter stands.

God Is In Me.

W. B. Lydenberg.

God is in me, to rise, when I shall call,
And fill again these trembling limbs with strength.

He is in me, when cloud and storm beset
My life and I shall call to Him, to end
The night and heal the heart and wipe away

The tear. He is in me, when pride would lead

My steps astray, if I but ask of Him,
To break the bond of sin and make me pure.

He is in me, if I but look to Him,
In fear and doubt, to hush the helpless mind

And with a word to wipe away the web
Of life's uncovered mystery. And O,

He is in me, though death may come,
to keep

My drifting soul and bear it safely on!

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Great Denunciations.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord found Himself face to face with three religious forces. They were an open Bible which any could study if they chose; a great sacramental system, existing before the Bible was written, guarding and preserving that Bible, but failing to teach it individually to the people at large; and a great system of religious worship and of Bible study, teaching that Bible diligently to the individual and teaching it wrong. He Himself was the summing up and (humanly speaking) the outcome of the first of these forces. The second He left alone except in the cleansing of the Temple. The third He now denounced for false teaching, giving instances. Not because they usurped the priestly position, not because they grasped the scroll of the Law that fell from the lax hands of the sons of Levi, not because they thrust themselves forward, He denounced them. All that is justified. "The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat." It was because they taught wrong. It was because, being guides, they yet were blind.

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, faith and mercy: these ought ye to have done and not to leave the others undone. Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

Strain "out" a gnat is a better translation. We remember a picture of a man represented as having swallowed about half a camel, the remainder sticking out of his mouth: and it was an infant camel at that. With the exception of the mediaeval artist who drew that picture, criticism and comment agree that this phrase is not to be taken literally. Payment of tithe is here mentioned by Our Lord for the only recorded time. He heartily approves of it; but regards it, when compared with judgment (or justice), mercy and faith as about the same as a gnat compared with a camel.

"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess. Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside may be clean also."

This figure of the soiled dishes Our Lord used at the dinner-party in Perea, where He was insulted by His host for not washing His hands. There He added that Pharisees were like unmarked graves, by which a man could be defiled without knowing it. He uses this figure, revised and amplified:

"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; for you are like whitewashed sepulchres which indeed appear beautiful outwardly, but are within full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness. Even so ye also appear righteous outwardly unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity."

One's instinct is to be sorry for the Pharisees. This removes it. Our Lord could see thoughts. His talk about the uncleansed cup and platter recalled to every man there his own hidden sins. Our Lord read off those memories of evil and gave His verdict; which was that the men there present were thoroughly bad. He went on, ending:

"Ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

There was something especially wrong about all Scribes and Pharisees and this generation of them in particular. That thing was "acting," "wearing a mask." They were "hypocrites," that is, men who wore a mask to hide character. It seems mixed up with the sin against the Holy Spirit, the Unforgivable sin. Investigation suggests that a secret is a spiritual danger. When a man has a secret concerning character, so that he seems one thing while his acts, if known, would prove him another, he is potentially more dangerous than any wild beast. He may be good, quiet, courteous and kindly so long as you do not touch his secret; but any man approaching that is in danger, like a man approaching a coiled rattlesnake. Come too close and you die. When a man deliberately sets himself to keep such a secret he becomes a potential menace. Our Lord's own comparison of such men and women is to vipers. A viper will let you alone. All it wants is to be let alone itself. But, when you move sticks to make a fire, if you come upon a viper you die.

There is a transforming power in concealment. None undertakes it without what seems sufficient reason. Therefore, one who endangers the secret endangers what the man or woman believes to be a justifiable purpose. He who endangers the secret may care nothing about the secret. He may be engaged in healthy work. He may be cleaning up trash or clearing stones from a new field. He may be working any of God's good works which make manifest and let in light, and not hunting vipers at all. But, to the vipers, he seems engaged in deliberate and malicious attempts to find vipers, and they judge him evil. If even a poor and humble viper, hiding from light, is not free from meddlesome activities of such a man; how very cruel and evil must that man be? The vipers think the man a bad man and the work a bad work; though it be good work, God's work, and wrought by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Secrets are, therefore, the most dangerous things in the world. But when we tell on ourselves to God, and, where necessary, to repair the harm done, to man, we have no longer any fear of being told on and the whole dreadful darkness is swept away.

The Scribes and Pharisees to whom Our Lord spoke, had the confessional. Whenever a man offered a sin-offering he confessed his sin to God and—if it involved restitution—to the priest. Either the confessional is not a safeguard against hypocrisy, or else they did not use it.

"Wherefore," Our Lord continued, "behold, I send unto you prophets and wise men and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify," ending: "Verily, I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation."

Our Lord said "Amen," translated "Verily." Therefore this is not Oriental hyperbole, like the figure of a Pharisee swallowing a camel. It is a plain statement that this generation of Pharisees and Scribes was singularly accursed, above all generations. Why? The blood of Abel was to come upon them. Was Cain to be henceforth guiltless? Were both Cain and the Pharisees guilty of Abel's blood? Certainly a community of guilt is the least that can be affirmed.

We walk by deep water here; deep and deadly dark. To put out light lest it reveal, to destroy the witness lest he give testimony, is common to Cain and the Pharisees, to every man who condemned one of God's honest men in the past and every one who shall do so in the remotest future. Shall all deaths wrought by this loving of darkness rather than light come upon all, so that Cain and the Pharisees and the last criminal who kidnapped a witness are all guilty, in one dreadful community of interest, of the crimes of all? Shall Jochabed Bar Hadad, who opposed Christ, reel through eternity guilty, not only of a certain cross with its burden, but also of an altar splashed with the blood of Abel and of a sinking steamer with a witness on board? Shall Cain be convinced of Calvary and John Doe be guilty of Golgotha? Does the rule work both ways? It does. There is a sense in which every liar is guilty of all lies, every thief of all thefts, every murderer of all murders, and every hypocrite, or man who has something to conceal, of all "Justifiable removals of those who would betray great secrets." But, did Our Lord mean more than this and refer to a special curse on this particular generation?

We think He did. Certainly a peculiar, a bizarre, an uniquely horrible fate came upon those Scribes and Pharisees, which, so far as we know, never overtook the Scribes and Pharisees of any other generation. Somewhere about A. D. 30 they crucified Our Lord. Somewhere in A. D. 70 all left alive of that generation of Scribes and Pharisees were crucified by Titus. The Christians were not crucified. The young men were not crucified. But that generation of Pharisees and Scribes and that generation only, came to its end upon the cross.

A Desert Place.

"Come ye apart into a desert place, and rest awhile."

A. S. Deas.

Apart, O Lord? Apart from what?—

From all our busy work of hand and brain?

From all the work Thou gavest us to do?—The work by which we thought to serve Thee best?—

He calls to rest;—to leave the grinding cares,

The anxious fretting of our hurried lives, The clamorous days when even in His work

We lose our sight of Him.

The ceaseless strain of mind and body, clamping down to earth.

Apart from these, into a desert place:—Into the desert place of sickness or of grief,

Of seeming uselessness—

Lo! if He be there

"The desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose."

His peace breathe through it like the air of Spring;

His blessing lie like sunshine on its paths.

Our Last Hour.

In 1875, Charles Kingsley, having bidden adieu to Westminster Abbey and Windsor Castle, lay dying; and with the breath of eternity on his cheeks, the central thought of this modern man was that "only in faith and love to the Incarnate God Our Saviour can the cleverest, as well as the simplest, find the peace of God which passeth all understanding." "In this faith," said his wife, "he had lived; and as he had lived, so he died—humble, confident, unbewildered."

In the night he was heard murmuring: "No more fighting; no more fighting." Then followed intense, earnest prayers, which were his habit when alone. His warfare was accomplished; he had fought the good fight; and on one of his last nights on earth his daughter heard him exclaim: "How beautiful God is!" The last morning, at five o'clock, just after his eldest daughter and his physician, who had sat up all night, had left him, and he thought himself alone, he was heard, in a clear voice, repeating the words of the Burial Service: "Thou knowest, O Lord, the secrets of our hearts; shut not Thy merciful ears to our prayers; but spare us, O Lord most holy, O God most mighty, O holy, merciful Saviour, Thou most worthy Judge Eternal, suffer us not, at our last hour, from any pains of death to fall from Thee." He turned on his side after this, and never spoke again.—Joseph Cook.

Intellectualism.

When you get to be seventeen or eighteen years of age, and from then up to twenty-five, you are passing through a period of mental development, when your mind is questioning, when you are thinking in terms of intellect, when the tendency is to over-emphasize the intellect because of the new and fascinating discovery you are making—the ability to use your mind and to think. It is perfectly natural. But when you take that accelerated intellectualism and go to college, which is an institution that has brought together an aggregation of intellectual specialists, an average college faculty is made up of people who have given their lives to intellectual specialization, then your mood and their mood combine to put added emphasis on the place of intellect in life. When in addition to that you have in many of our universities another super-faculty of super-specialists for the post-graduate group, there is created an atmosphere which raises to the nth power the emphasis upon intellect, and rather tends to sneer at truth that comes through other channels. The tendency of such conditions is to produce a dangerous lack of poise.—A. W. Beaven.

The Great Adventure.

L. C. Cummings.

Life is often called a lottery, a chance, an adventure. Perhaps it is something of each, but it is evidently more than any.

It is true of many men that had they the world the world would not content them, and thus in a degree all men are instinctively reaching out for something which life and all its adventure does not seem to satisfy.

Some bold, adventurers scorn the limits of their little horizon, and dare to descry unknown regions—the great adventure!

Most of the world is absorbed and primarily interested in birth, but shuns the thought of death, although it may be true that birth is death—and the death we would avoid is life.

It is true then that while man is growing in the "light of common day," his life is decreasing and that birth is nothing but death begun!

Death is the great adventure, the crown of life; yes, the gate of life; and while the "majority is against it" and shuns the thought of it, yet it remains inescapable, the payment of the last indebtedness of mankind—the greatest adventure of life!

That which is so universal must be a boon and benefit—and in dying we leave only mortals behind! Fewer are the friends alive than dead and waiting for most of us, after the sun slopes toward the West.

In the sleep of death all our dreams come true; and the great adventure of life will be the revelations that we have never lived until death opened the door to a life, where no dying is!

Death then is the great adventure in human progress, more interesting even than birth, because it is the condition of a higher and more fruitful life—"the secret alembic of vitality."

Giving Expression to Affection.

It is a happy thing to be assured of love and devotion. Half of us go through life believing that those who care for us can guess just how deep is our appreciation of them without our putting in so many words just what we think and feel. I believe that we miss much that is heart-cheering just because of this. "If I had only known," is the burden of more than one regretful refrain.

However much or severe our philosophy, none of us are indifferent to what is thought of us. We like to know that we have pleased the people we have met. We like to know when we have touched a responsive chord in another heart, and we are selfish, indeed, if we deprive our friends of their right to know that we care for them. We are, I fear, becoming too afraid of being thought sentimental, but it is only the tenderest and truest and best of men and women who are sentimental.

Those who have allowed the finer sensibilities to die or become indifferent have not met the affairs of life as bravely as they should, for the best that is in one should not suffer through contact with tougher things. I like the old-fashioned sort of men and women, who keep love letters tied up in bunches and a faded flower or two.—Philadelphia Times.

In Time of Need.

As God doth kindly stay

His rough wind in the day

His east wind keenly blows;

So in the time of need;

When hearts are sore and bleed,

His dearest love He shows;

For all the storms He guides,

On all the winds He rides;

What we can bear He knows,

—Henry A. Lavelly.

The Modern Missionary.

He must and he does give everything—years, dreams, heart, hopes, life, everything. That's what makes him great and his influence tremendous.

"Not long ago one of the finest members of the diplomatic corps in Pekin said in an address: 'The American Missionary worker and teacher and doctor have done more to gain the friendship and respect and good will of the East for America than all the business men, consular and diplomatic agents who have ever sojourned here, put together.' And he was a diplomatic agent himself."

"This was the big thing—schools to educate native boys and girls in modern ideas and new moral codes and sanitation and medicine and all that the past two or three thousand years have given the world in comfort and right living."

"My missionary companion was helpless to do anything for China with his own hands, but he could train the hands of ten thousand Chinese youths to go out into the highways and byways and slowly but surely break down all stupid superstitions and traditions and customs of the dead past and give them instead the best of the West."

"This is a big part of the new missionary idea. Religious proselytizing only, among a people bound as tight by tradition as are the Chinese, is only half a job even if successful. The brand-new model missionary would teach young men to teach China modern civilization, modern Christian standards and ethics and codes, modern science and medicine—and he could rest mighty certain that China's soul would come out of the process all right."—Selected.

"The survival of the fittest" is the doctrine on which the modern scientist explains much of the universe. The next time you have an argument with a skeptical man of letters remind him that of all the institutions that were here on the earth two thousand years ago the Church alone remains. Kingdoms, empires, dynasties have come and gone, but the Church still survives and will survive.—Dr. S. N. Huchison.

For the Young Folks

The Answer.

"What is life?" asked the little child,
As he romped on a golden day,
And out of his heart the answer came:
"Life is play."

"What is life?" asked the laughing youth,
In his eyes a wondrous flame.
Up from his heart came a clarion cry:
"Life is fame."

"What is life?" asked the sturdy man
As he toiled through the sun and rain,
And the woe in his heart cried out aloud:
"Life is pain."

"What is life?" asked the old, old man
As he gazed on the stars above,
And his wise, wise heart sang joyfully:
"Life is love."

The Old Clock.

"Tick, tock! Tick, tock!" went the old clock in the corner of the living room, where mother and father were reading and Jenny and Malcolm were playing by the fire.

"Let's play louder, so we can't hear the clock," whispered Jenny to her brother. And so they played "bear" and "fireman," and all of their noisiest indoor games. But still they heard the steady "Tick, tock! Tick, tock!" of the old clock.

"O dear, I wish that clock would stop!" said Malcolm crossly. "It always does get to bed-time before I am half through playing."

Jenny agreed, but the old clock went on with her "Tick, tock!" just as if she did not hear the unpleasant things the children were saying about her.

By and by, just as the clock said eight, mother put aside her book and called Jenny and Malcolm to come and go up to bed.

"I wish that old clock would stop," Malcolm said again as he started upstairs. "I think its old 'Tick, tock!' is the unpleasantest sound I have ever heard."

"But, Malcolm, dear, what would we do without the clock to tell us what time it is?" mother asked.

"O, I'd just play and play and play and never have to stop," Malcolm answered.

Not many days after that something happened to the old clock. Just what it was nobody knew. But something surely had happened. The clock was not making any sound at all. Malcolm looked at the face as soon as he came downstairs, just as he did every morning, to see how much time he had before school. But he saw that the clock had stopped. "Why, what is the matter with the clock?" he asked in surprise.

"Maybe she heard you wishing that she would stop," suggested mother, "and decided to do it to please you."

"But how am I to know how to start to school?" Malcolm asked in distress.

"I wish I knew, but I really don't," mother said. "In fact, the cook didn't know what time to have your breakfast ready, and I am afraid you will have to wait for it."

Finally breakfast was ready, but he ate in such a hurry that he didn't enjoy it at all. Then he ran all the way to school, only to find that he was ten whole minutes late! How he hated to see that tardy mark go down by his name! He felt cross all morning, and it seemed that lunch time would never come. When the bell did ring he felt so hungry that he could scarcely wait to get home. He ran into the house and asked if dinner was ready.

"I am sorry, dear," mother began, "but you see we did not have the clock to tell us the time, and we were so afraid of having lunch late that we prepared it much too early. Of course, it isn't hot and fresh as it would have been, but at least you won't have to hurry as you did this morning."

Malcolm ate the cold lunch in silence. He could not complain, for it wasn't his mother's fault, but it made him feel all the more cross. Then he thought of a plan: "Why can't we send for a man from the city to come and fix the clock?" he asked eagerly.

"Perhaps we could do that," mother agreed, "but I am afraid he could not get here before tomorrow."

"Well, I won't have to be called in to practice this afternoon," he said. "Mother won't be able to tell when the time comes."

And sure enough, he played all afternoon. But after awhile he grew tired and hungry. "I wish it would get time for supper," he thought. Still no one called. Malcolm finally went in of his own accord and got himself all ready for supper. But he waited and waited and waited before it was ready.

And that night as his mother was tucking him in bed, Malcolm said very sleepily: "It has been a horrid day, mother. I didn't know we needed the old clock so much."

"Well, it will be fixed tomorrow," mother assured him.

"And you will never hear me say that I wish it would stop again," promised Malcolm. "I'll try to always be ready to do what it says 'do.'" And he remembered.—Christian Observer.

Laziness.

Eugénie du Maurier.

Laziness is a great big monster with a thousand legs. He is always behind you and follows you wherever you go. You cannot run away from him, dodge nor escape him. When once he gets to be your master he can do so very much damage to you. When he gets those thousand legs wound about you, you get indigestion right away, and the little master, "I," within your brain becomes so tired that he is ready to lie down and die. What a shame that you let such a creature destroy your young lives when you have dominion over all things: the power to avoid this monster altogether. How? The simplest thing in the world! Laziness begins to follow as soon as you are born. And many people have gone through life without recognizing it. But the time has come when he must be removed from our lives. And the only sure cure is: the moment you have a task to perform, go at once and do it. In that way you can overpower this hideous monster. If you have a duty to do, don't hesitate. Get it over with as carefully and as soon as possible. It is not for you to shiver and tremble. Learn to get a strong, firm grasp on yourself. And face any duty like a soldier gets ready to plant his crop, he goes drier of God. You must always have out in a boat and dips up the baby your storm-coats ready, to face any kind of weather as you walk forth into the blind future, and never put off for a second anything you have to do. Come! Brace up and use your sabres and fight. Don't let laziness get a hold on you. Don't try to crawl out of your share of things mother wants you to do. Don't be lazy and neglect to use your tooth brush, or forget to use the wash-cloth behind your ears. But pitch right in, and before you know it, the time will come when laziness will grow weary of following you, and he will die by the wayside.

Tomorrow, let us and all of you start a new day by fighting off this big monster, Laziness.

(Told to a group of Chinese children.)

Cleverness of a Sheep Dog.

Some years ago there was a terrific storm in Scotland. The snow lay in great drifts many feet deep.

The farmers were very anxious about their sheep, for there were hundreds of them unsheltered on the hills at the time. In one farm no fewer than three hundred were missing, and the farmer with his men and faithful dog, Rough, started to search for them.

When they reached the fields, nothing was to be seen but great masses and drifts of snow, many feet thick, under which the sheep were buried. The men tried to get through the snow to the animals, but it was next to impossible, for they could hardly tell when they came across a sheep.

The snow was still falling fast when Rough came to the rescue. He understood what was to be done, and, running over the snow, with quick, short barks, he dug with his paws little holes in various places.

The men went to work under these marks and under each they found a sheep. Thus they worked hard all night, Rough showing the men where the sheep were buried and the men digging them out. Most of the sheep were saved.

The farmer was very thankful to his clever dog.—Little Folks.

A Funny Kind of a Farm.

Of course you all know something about farms where cotton and corn and wheat are planted, cultivated, and the crops gathered, but we wonder how many of you know anything about farms where oysters are planted and cultivated. Well, there are just such farms scattered about over the world, and some of them right in our own country. But an oyster farm is a very different one from the farms on land, as it is on the muddy bottom of bays and rivers, clear down under the salt water of the ocean. Oysters can't live and grow in fresh water, so the farm has to be where the water is salty. When an oyster farm is to be planted, the bottom first has to be raked and all the trash cleaned up, and a lot of hard things, like brick-bats, pieces of broken tiling, stones, and the like must be scattered about for the oysters to fasten themselves to.

Now, an oyster lays millions and millions of eggs, so tiny that you have to have a magnifying glass to see them. When the eggs hatch the baby oysters are about the size of pin points, and for a while they do nothing but move up and down in the water: then they sink to the bottom, fasten themselves to some hard object, and never move again, but stay right there in one spot all their lives. When the oyster farmer gets ready to plant his crop, he goes out in a boat and dips up the baby oysters, water and all, and carries them to his farm and pours them out. They sink down and fasten themselves to the hard objects he has placed there for them, and grow and grow until they are big enough to be caught and sold to the market men. The baby oysters are called "seed," and pouring them in the water is called "planting" them. When they first settle down for life on the rocks and old shells at the bottom they look like little white dots, a little later they are about the size of a pin head, when they get to be a year old they are as large as a silver quarter, and after that they grow about an inch a year.

The oyster is one of the very strangest animals in all the world. It hasn't a sign of a head, so as there is no place for eyes or nose it doesn't pretend to have any; but it does have a mouth, situated at the narrowest part of the body. The mouth opens into a bag that does duty as a stomach, and the liver is spread out around the stomach. Instead of just two lips, as you have, the oyster has four; but it has no tongue or teeth, and when it feeds it just opens its lips and lets the sea water bring the food to its mouth. Its food consists of tiny particles of vegetables and animal matter floating in the water. As it has no brains to think with, it probably has no feeling and doesn't know when it is being fried or made into soup. It breathes through lungs that are like the gills of fish. The next time you have oysters for dinner, suppose you see how many of these curious things about them you can remember. —Selected.

The First Dandelions.

Alice B. Joynes.

Golden-hearted dandelions,
What a note of joy you bring,
As you come to greet us,
Messengers of spring.

Dandelions, we love you,
You are so glad and gay.
We are pleased to see you
All around today.

You look so bright and cheery,
In your yellow dress,—
Reflectors of the sunshine,
Flowers of happiness.

Katie.

"Let's go to see grandmother," said father to mother and Anna May. "If we start soon, we can get there some time this afternoon and come back tomorrow."

"What a splendid idea!" said mother. "I will be ready in an hour. We can take some luncheon and have a picnic on the way."

Anna May clapped her hands and skipped with delight. There would be the long drive in the new car; and besides, grandmother was the very best person in the world to visit, she was sure.

So every one became busy. Father went to get the car ready and to fill a sack with apples for grandmother; and mother went to pack a suitcase and the lunch basket. Anna May ran to the barn for eggs and then hurried to get two dolls ready to take.

"I think that one doll should be enough," said mother. "It will be a long drive, and two dolls will be hard to hold."

"But," explained Anna May, "Floribel is my newest doll, and grandmother has never seen her, and poor old Katie has never gone for a ride. I promised to take her the very next time I went."

"Oh, let her take them both," laughed father. "I'm sure Katie won't object to riding in the back seat on the apples for part of the time."

So Anna May put the pink silk dress on Floribel, who had long golden curls and big brown eyes and a lovely face. Then she dressed Katie in her best dress, which was a sober brown. Katie wasn't pretty, for her face was scratched, and she had only one eye and very little hair; but Anna May loved her, even though she had a dozen other dolls, for Katie had been her very first.

Soon everything was packed and every one was ready, and they were on their way. The apples filled the back of the car, so that mother, Anna May and the two dolls sat on the front seat with father.

It was a lovely drive; it seemed to Anna May that everything and every one were happy. At noon they ate their luncheon under a big tree near a farmhouse. A little girl peeped over the fence at them. Mother called to her and offered her a cookie. She was shy at first, but after a while asked whether they wanted to see the kittens.

So mother and Anna May went to the barn where six snowy white kittens were playing around. Anna May was delighted with them, and the little girl said that she might choose one to take home with her. Anna May chose the one with the little black spot on the tip of its tail. Then she thanked the little girl and ran back to where father was waiting.

Since Anna May had to carry the kitten in her lap, Katie and Floribel had to ride on the apples in the back seat.

So they went along. Once when they had to turn out for another automobile to pass Anna May was afraid that they should tip over, the road slanted so much, but father soon had them back on the roadway, and they came safe and sound to grandmother's house.

How surprised and pleased grandmother was! She kissed them all and petted the kitten.

"And you have brought your doll, too, haven't you, dear?" she asked.

"I've brought two dolls," answered Anna May. "This one is Floribel, and Katie is there somewhere."

But Katie wasn't there. Father took out the apples and the other things, and they looked everywhere, but they didn't find Katie.

"She must have fallen out," said mother. "I am so sorry."

Anna May winked back the tears. "Do you suppose she fell out when we tipped to one side? Oh, I hope some girl will find her and be good to her."

"Now, dear, perhaps you will find her tomorrow. And any one who found Katie would be sure to be good to her."

But Anna May wasn't so sure about that. "If it were Floribel," she said, "I shouldn't mind so much, for she's so pretty that any one would like her; but you have to have Katie a long time to like her."

Grandmother and every one, including the white kitten, did their best to comfort Anna May, and she did try to have a good time, but she was really glad the next day when they started for home. Father drove slow, and Anna May and mother looked carefully all along the way.

When they reached the place where the automobile had tipped to one side the day before father stopped, and they all got out and looked carefully through the golden rod and daisies, but they didn't find a trace of poor Katie.

By and by they came to the tree where they had eaten dinner the day before. The little girl who had given Anna May the kitten was there, but she said she hadn't seen anything of Katie.

"Oh," said Anna May, "if only some little girl has found her and not some big dog or a cruel boy." She held tight to Floribel, but the kitten slept on the seat beside her.

There was no need of looking any more. Mother said that she was sure some little girl was happy because she had found Katie.

They came up to a wagon that was piled high with apples, and father turned aside to pass. A man was driving the team of slow old horses, and on the seat beside him was a woman and a little girl.

The little girl wasn't plump and rosy like Anna May, and she wore a thin old coat, though the wind was cold; but it was what she held lovingly in her arms that made Anna May cry out and caused father to stop the car. It was an old doll without much hair that was dressed in brown. It was Katie!

"Good morning," said mother. "Will you sell us some apples?"

The man stopped the team, and father bought some apples, though there were bushels of them at home.

"Your little girl loves dolls, doesn't she?" said mother.

"Yes," said the woman; "she found this one yesterday right in the road. She's never had a doll before, and so she likes it even if it is old and broken. Some day I hope we can get her a pretty doll, but until then she can play with this one."

"Would you like to see my doll and let me hold yours a minute, please?" asked Anna May suddenly. Her cheeks were very pink.

The little girl seemed almost afraid to touch Floribel. "She's the loveliest thing I ever saw," she said.

"Would you like to trade?" asked Anna May, hugging Katie to her. "You see I like this old doll. She's—she's like a doll I had once."

"Oh," gasped the little girl, "do you mean it?"

"Of course she means it," said father. So Anna May held old Katie tight as father started the automobile. "Please be good to the doll," she said. "Her name is Floribel."

"Oh, I will, I will," promised the little girl. "Thank you ever so much."

"She'll be good to Floribel," said Anna May contentedly, "and I really couldn't spare Katie."—Youth's Companion.

Little Bear's "Gun."

"Stay at home, little Bear," said his mother, when she started away one morning. "If you should wander off by yourself, some man might shoot at you with his gun. A gun is a terrible thing. If it should hit my Little Bear it might kill him. At least he would be sick and weak for days."

Little Bear didn't understand what "kill" meant. He had never been sick an hour in his life. Besides, he was naturally very curious. "What would it feel like to have the man's gun hit me?" he asked.

"It would sting and burn worse than any slap from my paw," said Mother Bear decidedly. She knew how Little Bear dreaded a blow from her big paw.

Little Bear did not see how anything could hurt worse than a slap from his mother's paw, but he knew she was wise and truthful. "I will stay close at home," he promised.

He meant to do that, and he did play quietly about for a long while, but Mother Bear was gone for hours. The little fellow grew lonely and a wee bit frightened. Then he began to get hungry, and by that time he was sure he couldn't stay home another minute.

Pad, pad, pad, he went down the little path that led to the hunting-grounds. Maybe he would meet his mother coming home with the dinner. Maybe he would find some berries to eat. Or honey! Little Bear had never forgotten the treat of that sweet yellow stuff his mother got him from a tree one day. He believed that he could find the tree again, and he wandered off the path to look for it.

He did find the very tree, and there was honey on the ground about it, for men had been robbing the bee tree and they let some of the honey fall into the dirt. Little Bear began joyously to gather it up with his paw. Oh, how good it tasted!

Something else was after this delicious honey—a small, fat-bodied brown-black something with wings. Can you guess what that something was?

"Get away! Get away!" it warned Little Bear. Little Bear calmly kept on eating honey.

When he paid no attention to the little something with wings, it flew up and landed plump on his tender nose.

Oh, dear, and oh, dear, and oh, dear! How that nose did hurt!

Right away Little Bear stopped caring about the honey. He wanted his mother, he did, and he ran home to find her. Fortunately, Mother Bear had returned and was already coming to meet her runaway son.

"See, a man did shoot me with his gun. Right on my nose. I'm never going to run away again," wailed Little Bear tearfully.

He hadn't needed to tell where he was hurt, for that nose was getting to be remarkably large for a Little Bear.

"Maybe this has taught you a lesson," said Mother Bear grimly; "but it wasn't a gun that hit you. You were only stung by a bee. Let me put some nice cool mud on that nose."

So she did, but it was days before Little Bear's nose felt like kitself again. He doesn't see how anything can possibly be worse than a bee-sting. All the same, he is willing to take his mother's word about the gun and stay at home when she goes away.—Our Little Ones.

Sometimes.

Sometimes, when I'm sleepy and I have to go to bed,
I lie and count the many stars that shine above my head.
They seem so very friendly, winking, blinking up so high,
I wonder how it seems to be a star up in the sky.

And while I lie there thinking of the things a star can do,
I find my eyes, just like the stars, are winking, blinking, too;
And then before I quite decide I'd like to change my place,
I find myself awaking with the sunshine on my face.

Obituaries

ALBERT THEODORE POWELL.

ALBERT THEODORE POWELL, second son of William Cole Powell and Harriet Adeline Claiborne, was born at "Norburn Hill," in Nottoway County, Va., February 18, 1842. Died near McKinney, Va., December 17, 1923. Age eighty-one years, ten months and one day. Attended private schools in Petersburg and Dinwiddie County, later was a student at Emory and Henry and Randolph-Macon College. In 1861 at eighteen entered the Civil War, as first lieutenant with the first troops that left Dinwiddie County. Was a member of Company "I," Third Regiment, Virginia Cavalry, Wickham's Brigade, Fitz Lee's Division, J. E. B. Stuart's Corps, A. N. V. Served throughout the War Between the States. Was wounded in 1862 in Fauquier County, and was at home for six months on furlough.

After the war, taught school for several years, later studying law, and was twenty-five years Commonwealth's Attorney for Dinwiddie County.

Married first Louisa Jones Thweatt, daughter of Archibald Thweatt, and Sarah Fitzgerald Thweatt.

From this union eight children were born, William C., Eugene Hume, Adeline E., Percy T., Sallie Lou, Lillian E., Alberta M. and Rinaldo John Powell. Married second Drue Zehmer, daughter of Dr. Charles Gee Zehmer, who survives him.

"So live that when thy summons comes To join the innumerable caravan which moves

To that mysterious realm, where each shall take his Chamber in the silent hall of death; Thou go not like a quarry-slave scoured at night to his dungeon; But, sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust, Approach thy grave as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him And lies down to pleasant dreams."

RESOLUTIONS

Of the Vestry of St. Andrew's Church, Wheeling, On the Death of Rev. James Logan Fish.

Whereas, on March 20 it pleased Almighty God in His wise providence to take our beloved rector, JAMES LOGAN FISH, to a higher service with him, we, the vestry of St. Andrew's Church, wish to express our profound sense of loss.

Be it resolved, that we desire to place on record our appreciation of Mr. Fish as rector, pastor, friend who through the space of eleven years faithfully served the people of this parish in ways that cannot be forgotten.

And be it further resolved, that the assurance of our sympathy and prayers be extended to the family, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them, spread on the minutes of the vestry, and published in the Church press.

RESOLUTIONS

Of the Wheeling Clericus On the Death of the Rev. Mr. Fish.

Whereas, on Thursday, March 20, the REV. JAMES LOGAN FISH, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wheeling, and President of the Wheeling Clericus, passed into life eternal;

Be it resolved, that we desire to place on record our high appreciation of the service rendered the Church by our beloved brother during the thirty-four years of his ministry in the Diocese of West Virginia.

He trod the Master's way unwavering and unafraid, and laid down his life in the Master's cause; but above all he was a true pastor in every sense of the word. He was a good shepherd of the flock he had chosen to tend, and in truth gave up his life for the sheep.

And be it further resolved, that the assurance of our sympathy and prayers be extended to his family, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent them, and published in the Church press.

CHURCH NEWS.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

St. Helena's Beaufort, the Rev. R. M. Marshall, rector: Bishop Guerry paid his annual visit to this parish on March 9. A large congregation attended the confirmation services in the morning, at which time ten candidates received the Laying on of Hands.

On March 7, in place of the regular Lenten service in the church a Prayer Service for Missions, arranged for interdenominational use, was held in the parish house, under the guidance of the Woman's Auxiliary. This service was well attended. The special services arranged by the rector for the Lenten season are most interesting.

Epiphany, Eutawville, the Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., rector: Members of the Auxiliary are conducting prayer services every Friday afternoon in Lent. Church members, the Guild and the Sunday School are invited to attend. These prayer circles are of benefit to all the members of the Church of the Epiphany.

The Rev. Mr. Duncan is making a most earnest effort to make Lent mean more to his congregation. The services are well attended and he is trying to get all to do more reading of the Church papers and religious books.

The ladies of the parish have bought the property adjoining the church and hope in the course of time to have erected on it a suitable rectory.

St. Matthias, Summerton, the Rev. J. E. H. Galbraith, rector: The congregation of St. Matthias' have been saddened again by the death of Mr. James Manning Richardson, a brother of Mr. Richard Richardson, who died two months ago. He was a regular communicant, and a life-long resident in this community, highly esteemed by his friends and much missed by all.

St. Mark's, Pinewood, the Rev. J. E. H. Galbraith, rector: At St. Mark's Clarendon, there is a lay-readers' service on the Sundays on which the rector cannot be present in the afternoon, conducted by Mr. Walter Epperson with the help of visiting laymen from nearby places and the expectation and hope is that one will be held by Mr. Walker, a former rector. This is a Lenten experiment, which it is hoped may be continued.

The rector is serving St. Alban's, Kingstree, by request of the Bishop, and has held services there one Sunday in each month, beginning with February. One of the interesting features of the work there is a Sunday-school class, conducted by Miss Carrie Scott, and since her removal, by Miss Erckman, a teacher in the public school.

St. Michael's, Charleston, the Rev. A. S. Thomas, rector: The committee on the new parish house recently called a meeting of the congregation to consider what plans for launching the canvass for the proposed building had better be adopted. No soliciting was done at the preliminary meeting, but since that time a committee of canvassers has been listed and it is expected that it will soon be called out to get to work. The whole cost of the project will be between thirty and thirty-five thousand dollars, five thousand of which has been subscribed by one member of the parish, and three thousand by three other members, who have promised $1,000 each for memorial rooms in the new building.

THE BEGINNING OF WISDOM.

Chesterton says there is an element of awe in all real joy. "If our life is ever really as beautiful as a fairy tale, we shall have to remember that all the beauty of a fairy tale lies in this: that the prince has a wonder that stops just short of being fear. . . . The perfect happiness of men on the earth (if it ever comes), will not be a flat and solid thing, like the satisfaction of animals. Man must have just enough faith in himself to have adventures, and just enough doubt of himself to enjoy them."

Let me examine the ways in which awe alone brings our higher faculties to their reward.

Ideals are creative, Plato says; the building yonder is the embodiment of the architect's ideal which antedated it. Yonder tree grows because there is an ideal of treehood it must approximate. That is all very well, says Aristotle, but we must not confuse ideals with notions. Even an ideal must exist outside your mind before your mind can grasp it. It is, however, too easy to have imitation ideas which your mind extemporized for itself, without ever looking out of its window. No, ideas, to have any value, must come by humble study of fact.

No worthy scientist holds his hypothesis when facts go against it. As one noble lover of truth put it as he stood before his class before venturing a crucial experiment in chemistry, "Gentlemen, we are about to ask God a question." He abode by his answer, even if it meant the scrapping of some cherished hypothesis. What Huxley calls his "fanaticism of veracity is shown too by Darwin in his well-known statement, "I have steadily tried to keep my mind free so as to give up any hypothesis, however much beloved, as soon as facts are shown to be opposed to it."

The scientist of the right type can and does demonstrate humility of reasoning. The laws of nature are inexorable masters of his hypothesis. He does not let his learning grow irreverently arrogant. He remains in awe of reality. True learning is always in the presence of the mystery through which Law is reaching out of the Heaven of Heavens toward the attuned perception.

We can sympathize with the mystics of the middle ages when they saw lesser learning sometimes making blatant, self-assertive doctrinaires out of small-calibre men. "A little learning is a dangerous thing." A little learning, remember. Much learning brings simplicity and awe. When Frances of Assissi argued against learning in favor of ignorance, he was moved by fear of that pride of mind which comes to the unhumble. The monastic insistence in many quarters that knowing things hurt spiritually, and that childlikeness was better than sophistication, was only a terrified attempt to keep the higher powers of man as humble as they ought to be. Thomas à Kempis is still satisfyingly correct in saying, "Better it is for thee to have a small portion of good sense with humility than great treasure of many sciences with vain self-complacency." The power to build theories, to ascertain laws, to come in touch with revelation, this must be kept in awe of Truth!

The success of religion thus far is best demonstrated by the extent to which conscience has been established as authoritative. How few of us need to be told nowadays by any one else what is right and what is wrong. We can decide that for ourselves. Conscience as a psychic sense is well in touch with its Reality. The living Law of Personal Righteousness speaks to us with unmistakable voice from above and beyond our personal wills. We recognize what moral intuition ought to mean.

Yet even in this mystic ability of attunement we find the possibility of self-sufficiency. There are perversions of moral intuition which sometimes enable us plausibly to persuade ourselves that gray is white, that the questionable is permissible, that the desired thing is right for us. This is unhumble conscience, unready to acknowledge the rightness of God's ideal and purpose. I have known cases where conscience even answered in Peter's words, "Not so, Lord!" when the Righteousness of the living Lord ordained that which was unusually drastic. Have you ever known the same?

Conscience in awe of the Reality of Living Righteousness, as of something even above the qualitative realities perceived by imagination,—this humble attunement brings us higher than any other but Faith itself.

There is no time to dwell on the wisdom of humble faith. Suffice it that I should now but mention the ideal and the danger.

Faith which is unhumble grows dogmatic. It tends to drag faith down into terms of lower psychical senses; even to identification with logic or ideation. It grows too easily self-sufficient, thus misdefined.

But faith which is humble is the guarantee of childlikeness. The Beatitudes describe it and its reward of the highest Reality. On this faculty, awesomely aware of God in His beauty, Jesus counts much. Communion with God as He is, is the reward of humble faith. How can it be otherwise? Those who have kept their other powers humble will likewise keep this!

"Blessed is he who is awed, for he who is awed shall command!"

land, a rare exhibition of ecclesiastical art, that embraced the special treasures of most of the Episcopal churches. The exhibit was assembled by the Altar Guild section of the Church Service League of Maryland. Its mission was to educate and to demonstrate the infinite variety of ways in which almost anything beautiful may be used in the adornment of Churches. On Tuesday evening, March 18, the Rev. W. A. McCleneth delivered a lecture upon the subject of "Symbols in Churches." There were more than three hundred people present. The attendance during the exhibition was estimated to be three thousand.

Personal Notes

The Rev. A. E. Clattenburg does not plan to leave Hazleton, Pa., until September, when he will move into his new parish at Cynwyd, Pa.

The Rev. C. E. Buxton, of Covington, Va., has accepted a call to St. Andrew's Church, Greensboro, N. C., and will take up residence there about the first of April. He succeeds the Rev. H. O. Nash, who resigned to go to Mexico.

The Rev. J. Edmund Thompson, minister-in-charge of Trinity Church, Guthrie, Okla., and editor of the Oklahoma Churchman, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Mark's Church, St. Albans, West Virginia and is now in residence.

The address of the Rev. Arthur R. Price is changed from Greenwood, S. C., to Middleboro, Ky.

The Rev. William Way, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., is the noon-day Lenten preacher at St. James' Church, Twenty-second and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, April 7-11.

The Rev. William L. Phillips, who resigned the rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Spottswood, N. J., has accepted a position as curate at the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City.

The Rev. Royal K. Tucker, formerly of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, La., has entered upon his work as rector of St. Paul's Church, Louisville, succeeding the Rev. David C. Wright, who is now rector of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga.

The Rev. T. C. Johnson has resigned as rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Bensonhurst, N. Y., and will become curate at St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Rev. Arthur James Mackie, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Mackie, of Renovo, Pennsylvania, and Miss Mabel Helen McConnell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. McConnell, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, were married on Thursday, March 20, 1924, in All Saints' Church, Guantanamo, Cuba, by the Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, D. D., Bishop of Cuba. Miss McConnell has been in Cuba two years as a teacher in the mission school, and Mr. Mackie is rector of All Saints' Church. He was ordained December 21, 1923, by Bishop Hulse.

The Rev. John E. Gerstenberg, rector of St. Michael's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and secretary to Bishop Burgess, has accepted a call to the Church of the Redeemer, Merrick, L. I., in succession to the Rev. W. H. Littebrandt.

DEATHS.

Miss Clementine Rowe, for nineteen years a missionary, died at Grace Hospital, Morganton, N. C., on March 18. Miss Rowe had been a teacher and general worker among the mountaineers, part of the time in Tennessee, later in North Carolina. Several of her interesting articles have appeared in The Spirit of Missions from time to time.

The Rev. Dr. John Arthur, rector of St. Mark's, Glen Ellyn, Ill., died suddenly of heart disease early Wednesday morning, March 19. The burial service was at St. Mark's, on Friday, March 21, Bishop Anderson officiating. Many of the clergy were present, and the vestry acted as pall-bearers. Interment was at Fort Hill Cemetery, Utica, N. Y., the rector of Calvary Church, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Coley, taking the committal.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

By two wings a man is lifted up from things earthly, by Simplicity and Purity.

Life and religion are one thing, or neither is anything.—George MacDonald.

The measure of a man's life is the well-spending of it, not the length.—Plutarch.

God is as certain to help a man who trusts in Him, as the sun is to send its light into the open window.

It is sweet to stammer one letter of the Eternal's language; on earth it is called Forgiveness.—Longfellow.

If then we can go about our tasks with a smile on our faces and a song in our hearts we have learned the grace of patience.—Dr. S. N. Hutchison.

Who has walked this way before me?
Whose the footprints that I see?
Once, a Friend such pity bore thee,
He this way has walked for thee.
—M. E. Pettus.

Beside Thy Cross I hang on my cross in shame,

My wounds, weakness, extremity cry to Thee:

Bid me also to Paradise, also me
For the glory of Thy Name.
—Christina Rossetti.

Happiness, content and right satisfaction, all doubts answered, all dark places lighted up, heaven begun here—this is the reward of loving God. In this world tribulation; yes, but good cheer in spite of that.—Dr. George Hodges.

Wanderers in far countries
I think of Him Who came, forgot,
To His own, and they received Him not,
Jesus of Galilee.

O all ye who have trod
The wine-press of affliction, lay
Your hearts before His heart this day,
Behold the Lamb of God.

—Dinah Muloch Craik.

Love thyself last, cherish those hearts that hate thee. Corruption wins not more than honesty. Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace to silence envious tongues. Be just and fear not; let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, thy God's and truths: then if thou fall'st thou fall'st a blessed martyr.—William Shakespeare.

THE BISHOP TUTTLE MEMORIAL

In this issue of the Southern Churchman there is printed the vivid story of the life of Bishop Tuttle as told by one who for many years was his coadjutor, Bishop Johnson, in the address which he made at the 1924 Convention of the Diocese of Missouri. As printed in our pages, the Bishop's address has been abbreviated. The climactic paragraphs of it have been omitted there, in order that we might state and emphasize their message on this editorial page.

For Bishop Johnson, as he told of what Bishop Tuttle's life and work had been, went on to describe the memorial which those who loved and knew him best have devised, not only to honor his name, but better still, to serve the Church of which he was so great an honor. It is desired that there shall be raised a Bishop Tuttle Memorial and Endowment Fund of a million and a quarter dollars. With that sum there is to be maintained a work which, as Bishop Johnson says, shall be like Bishop Tuttle himself, "built on energizing not decorative lines." So it is planned to erect in conjunction with Christ Church Cathedral, in St.

Louis, the first parish which our Church ever organized west of the Mississippi River, a building to house the missionary activities of the Church in the Diocese of Missouri, to serve as headquarters for national and provincial gatherings, and to carry on the noble humanitarian work which the Cathedral in its extraordinarily strategic location in St. Louis, is already developing.

This is a time when the generosity of men and women in the Church has many appeals made upon it. It will probably not be practicable for diocesan organizations in the country generally to be of much use in raising the Bishop Tuttle Fund. But there are multitudes of individuals in the Church who knew and loved the great Bishop and will want to honor him by helping the Church in Missouri to serve more greatly in his name. Under the virile leadership of Dean William J. Scarlett, Christ Church Cathedral is already rendering conspicuous service. The Building and Endowment Fund, which is sought, will enable that service to reach its maximum.

THE INESCAPABLE CHRIST

The Christ that was in Jesus comes and stands by every man for ever. It is Jesus-like. It speaks to us again with the voice of Jesus. It holds out to us hands like His. It bids us walk on paths where Jesus' feet have gone. And the Christ in Jesus is not some alien principle separated by a great gulf from the essential nature in ourselves. We only recognize God in Him, because that which is of God in us, blind, fumbling, imperfect, though it be, reaches up to claim its own in Him. The Christ that walks beside us is for ever God and man, the beauty and holiness that are so far above us coming down to incarnate themselves in the struggling ideals that are within. For every man the Christ-voice that calls him to come home to his Father has in it a strange intimacy of compulsion which he understands only when at length he realizes, like the son in the far country of the parable, that in answering that voice, he has for the first time come to himself.

Thus it is that the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which was in Him in order that it might be called forth in all, walks by our side in friendship which links itself with the deepest instincts of those who understand. Christ Who stands outside us in the ever-familiar personality of Jesus, appeals to us not by any outward authority alone, but by the awareness that in Him is revealed the possible glory of our Christed selves.

Manifestly then, when the Christ comes thus, not through a mere theological pageant of far-off history, passing by outside our windows, but a presence that enters in to adjust the deepest elements in our nature, to challenge the dominance of many of the common impulses that rule, and to realize in us the awful mastery of the God-consciousness that may have been long in prison, there may be rebellion from those elements in our nature which do not want their sovereignty disturbed. So Christ may be a presence disturbing us with elevating thoughts, but not with the joy of them. If sin or selfishness sufficiently bar the door so that He cannot come in, there is no rising of the Christ-ideal in glorious mastery, but only tumult and confusion and deadly inner strife.

It may be that there are some souls which have so barred the door against the presence of Christ and have buried in so deep a dungeon the Christ-response within themselves that they are no longer troubled in their deliberate ungodliness. No voices haunt them any more. No sudden knocking of scarred hands at the outer gates startles them in the still hours of their complacency. It may be that there are such; but surely they are few. In most lives which know that they are unconsecrated and know that the bars are still across the doors where Christ stands at the outer threshold, there is a deep disquiet. The thousand devices by which they would continually amuse themselves within are a confession that there can be no rest as long as they bar Him out. Still that implacable love follows those who deny Him, and in such wise as Francis Thompson has imperishably expressed in his "Hound of Heaven."

I fled Him, down the nights and down the days;

I fled Him, down the arches of the years;

I fled Him, down the labyrinthine ways

Of my own mind; and in the mist of tears
 I hid from Him, and under running laughter.
 Up, vistaed hopes I sped;
 And shot, precipitated
 Adown Titanic glooms of chasmed fears,
 From those strong feet that followed, followed after
 But with unhurrying chase,
 And unperturbed pace,
 Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
 They beat—and a voice beat
 More instant than the feet;
 "All things betray thee, who betrayeth Me."

It is well, then, that we should recognize that we cannot escape that sure pursuit. There is no depth nor distance in the earth where we can hide from the challenge of Christ's Spirit. The thing in us that is akin to it will draw it after us on an unerring track.

"Fear wist not to evade as Love wist to pursue."

And, of course, this sense of the challenge of Christ, not at first as a friend, but as a pursuing presence, which one would fain escape (knowing not yet His beauty and His healing) comes not only to those who are in deliberate or gross sin, but to those whose guilt is simply in their worldly-mindedness. There are thousands of men and women in the Christian Churches to whom the thought of Christ is a disturbing thing, because they will not let Him woo them from the false satisfactions in which they try to rest. They are men who secretly see their better natures fostered in the midsts of their mercenary pursuits, women cursed with restlessness in the midst of a thousand luxuries, because they feel the emptiness of their existence, young men and girls who may try to hide their innate idealism under the brazen acceptance of the selfish standards of their world, who yet have their moments when in the presence of some noble and courageous thing they stand consciously cheapened and ashamed. For such lives the message of the Gospel is still urgent and powerful. It speaks in the same old terms that never lose their vital reality, of the Christ Who lives in spite of sin, indifference, and denial. "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself." Yes, to the foolish heart, seeking its fulfilment in vain things, He comes with an offer of that joyous redemption which is only found when the heart surrenders all things to the touch of that transfiguring Friend.

But there are two ways in which the presence of Christ can make itself felt. One—as we have said—is in the pursuit of the sinning soul; but the other is in that companionship which the consecrated and active spirit is eager to claim.

It was when men should go out to do His will that He should be most gloriously present with them, the Master said. His promise followed His command, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Then would He be present with them always. On the roads of service in Christ's name, men are most sure to find the sustaining presence of their Lord. How greatly this rebukes the sorry mistake which Church-teaching too often falls into. Men argue and dispute about their definitions of Christ, as though the disciple would find Him in the forum or in some wrangling assembly whose conclusions would be Christians must agree to. They would find Christ by accepting this or that formula which self-assured teachers take it upon themselves to make authoritative. But that was not His promise. He said that those who went out to do His work should find Him on all their roads of faithfulness. He said that whosoever should do His will should know of the doctrine. Christianity is not a thing to be argued and proved, that then we may go and live it. It is something to be lived, and so in the living proved. There is no effective knowledge of Christ nor possession of Him until, as Martin Luther said, "He may not only be Christ, but a Christ for you and me, and what is said of Him, and what He is called may work in us."

To our world today, hungry for a saving faith, this simple Gospel can come in all its power. Men will not find Christ by blind obeisance of their intellects to old formulas, no matter how stubbornly the teachers may insist upon that. Christ is not seeking servants who recognize formal authority and clothe themselves in a mere livery of His Name. Christ calls men to be His friends, and only to His friends can He reveal Himself convincingly. If any man would be His friend today, if he will look honestly into the face of the matchless Christhood of Jesus, he will feel the Christ in Him appealing to the Christ in the man's own soul, and will go out with such faithfulness and courage as he may to live his life in that Spirit of Jesus which is for ever plain to the conscience that will be guided by Him. Then the roads of life shall not be unaccompanied, but on them will move the radiant presence of the Master Himself. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," comes His unfailing promise, and in each fresh day of duty, the souls of men may make their own again the ancient words:

I bind unto myself today
 The power of God to hold and lead,
 His eye to watch, His might to stay
 His ear to hearken to my need:
 Christ be with me, Christ within me,
 Christ behind me, Christ before me,
 Christ beside me, Christ to win me,
 Christ to comfort and restore me.
 Christ beneath me, Christ above me,
 Christ in quiet, Christ in danger,
 Christ in hearts of all that love me,
 Christ in mouth of friend and stranger.

George Marion McClellan, in "The Feet of Judas," finds in the Master's example consolation and guidance:

"For that supremest token of Thy love,—
 Thyself made manifest in human flesh;
 For that pure life beneath the Syrian sky—
 The humble toil, the sweat, the bench, the saw,
 The nails well driven, and the work well done;
 For all its vast expansions; for the stress
 Of those three mighty years;
 For all He bore of our humanity;
 His hunger, thirst, His homelessness and want,
 His weariness that longed for well-earned rest;
 For labor's high ennoblement through Him;
 For that dark hour in lone Gethsemane;
 For that high cross upraised on Calvary;
 The broken seals, the rolled back stone—The Way:
 Forever opened through His life in death,
 For all His gracious life, and for His death,
 With low-bowed heads and hearts impassionate,
 We thank Thee Lord!"

—John Oxham.

Christ washed the feet of Judas!
 Yet all his lurking sin was bare to Him,
 His bargain with the priest, and more than this,
 In Olivet, beneath the moonlight dim,
 Aforehand knew and felt his treacherous kiss.

And so if we have ever felt the wrong
 Of trampled rights, of caste, it matters not;
 Whate'er the soul has felt or suffered long,
 O heart, this one thing should not be forgot:
 Christ washed the feet of Judas.

SIMON OF CYRENE---A GOOD FRIDAY SERMON

By the Reverend Elwood Worcester, D. D.

And as they came out they found a Man of Cyrene, Simon by name. Him they compelled to bear his cross. St. Matt. 27:32.

ONE of the amazing aspects of the life of Jesus, especially as it neared the end, is the strange things which contact with Him brought to light in the lives of many men and women. Had Peter never met Jesus he would have continued his pleasant life on the Sea of Galilee, writing his name on the water, his highest ambition, a net full of fishes, his end an unknown grave in the soil of Galilee. He would not have been crucified, but he would not have been an Apostle, a cornerstone of humanity, or a Rock on which Christ built His Church. Had Judas Iscariot never heard the name Jesus pronounced, nor been intrusted with the great Messianic secret, he might have lived and died a petty scoundrel, but he would not have gained his hideous immortality. The gracious woman who brought her box of precious spikenard to anoint the Saviour's feet, has been commemorated, as He promised, wherever His Gospel has been preached throughout the world. How little did Pontius Pilate imagine, when he went out of his house on Good Friday morning, that the cowardly and unwilling act he was to perform that day would cause his name to be publicly recited in reprobation every day, in every city of the world, to the end of time, by the adorers of his Victim.

"And I believe on Him Who died,
By Pontius Pilate crucified."

It is not merely that these persons, by crossing the path of Jesus, inherited the immortality that attached itself to His every act. The day they came to Jesus was to them a day of destiny, and the attitude they assumed toward Him revealed the secret of their hearts, and tested what was in them, so determining their life and fate, little as they suspected it. Nor is it otherwise now. The day we come to Jesus, and the response or the refusal we make to His call, determine our moral value and the whole tenor of our lives. The fate of Christ's seed in a man is the fate of the man himself. By our very acceptance of Christ, and by calling ourselves Christians, we acquire a power to help or to hurt His cause we should not otherwise possess.

One of these strange experiences was that of the man of whom I wish to speak this morning. Simon had come up from his distant home in Africa like any other pious Jew, to keep the feast. We hear of him here for the first time, and probably he had never heard of Jesus before that day. The part he played in the crucifixion of Christ is a certain proof that Jesus, at this solemn hour, was forsaken by all His disciples. We are so accustomed to this melancholy story of human cowardice and infidelity that we do not remember that hardly a robber chief has been so infamously betrayed and deserted in his hour of need. Simon was not one of those Galileans who had cried Hosanna and had strewn palm branches before the Lord. He was not present at the secret session of the Sanhedrin. He had not seen that travesty of justice in the judgment hall of Pilate, nor had he witnessed that miserable man striving to cleanse his hands of the blood that all the perverse, critical ingenuity of the nineteenth century was unable to wash away.

It was after all these things had taken place that he first saw Jesus. The great gates of the fortress Antonia swung open, and there He stood,—His seamless coat dyed with the blood that still welled from the wounds and gashes of the scourge; His face defiled with spitting, and bruised by blows; on His head the crown of thorns. A man walked before Him, carrying a white tablet on which was rudely scrawled in three languages, "The King of the Jews"; on His shoulder the heavy beam of the cross. Two thieves, sworn enemies of the human race, also bearing crosses, stood beside Him. The procession of death formed. The centurion mounted his horse. The callous Roman soldiers began to urge their prisoners forward.

Simon beheld all this with the same kind of awed fascination with which we witness some horrible street scene, from which, though it wounds us, we cannot turn our eyes. Then a company of women appeared, weeping and smiting their breasts. Jesus turned to them and said: "Women of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and your children. For if these things are done in the green wood, what shall be done in the dry?" Having said these words, He sank beneath His burden. He who was bearing the sin of the world, was not strong enough to bear the transverse beam of olive wood. Probably without enacting one of those scenes of cruel torture, with which Roman Catholics love to decorate the walls of their churches, the Centurion perceived that the fainting frame of Jesus was no longer able to sustain its burden. No disciple was at hand to take the cross from Jesus, to take with Him His last steps on earth, or to show Him one friendly, faithful face on which He could look with pride. The Roman soldiers, scorning to touch the accursed instrument of death, laid hold of the first man they met, an absolute stranger. "When they came forth they met a man of Cyrene, Simon by name. Him they compelled to bear the cross."

At first this must have seemed to Simon a hard and cruel misfortune. It exposed him to the coarse jokes of the rabble, who followed mocking, as the vulgar always mock at the sorrows of a noble heart. The wood was heavy and the way to Skull Hill was long and steep. The cross, in his eyes, was a polluting and loathsome object, and the whole situation must have been painful and revolting to the last degree. He would just as lief have carried the cross of one of the two thieves, for he saw no difference between them. He thought of the beautiful day he had come so far to spend in Jerusalem, the quiet day of preparation for the Passover, and his heart burned with indignation against the insolent soldiers, and very likely against the innocent cause of his mortification.

But what if, as the sad procession wound its way through the streets of Jerusalem, some sense of the meaning of this scene began to dawn on Simon? What if with one of His profound glances, one of His penetrating words Jesus bound to Himself the heart of this Cyrenian as He had bound the heart of many another? What if some intimation of the nature of the awful sacrifice, about to be offered on Calvary, began to rise in Simon's soul? Would not the heavy burden grow lighter? Would not the shame and ignominy of bearing the cross for Jesus disappear? Might he not even feel it a blessing and a privilege to be alone with Jesus at this hour?

All this, I hasten to say, is more than a supposition. Simon's conversion was probably one of those unrecorded miracles of Jesus, of which St. John says: "And there are also many other things which He did which are not written in this book." Thirty or forty years later, when the Gospels were composed, Simon's name was still remembered. St. Mark speaks of his sons, Alexander and Rufus, as Christians well known to the Church. In all probability it was on that walk from Antonia to Golgotha that Simon's heart opened to Jesus Christ. He took the cross from Jesus' shoulder that morning, and walked with Jesus to His death. But who knows what cross Jesus took from Simon, or what sustenance Jesus gave him when Simon's eyes were closing in death? In after days, when the disciples met to rehearse the death of the Lord, must it not have been Simon's gladdest memory to relate how that day he had carried the cross on which Jesus hung, and to repeat every utterance that fell from Jesus' lips? And if we remember how absolutely alone Jesus was in this solemn moment of His life, we shall see it is distinctly possible that today the world owes its knowledge of the incomparable last words of Christ to the man who, by the strange decree of God, "was compelled to bear His cross."

At some time of our lives this story contains a touching lesson for us all. How many of us are bearing our cross in life sullenly, angrily, unwillingly, for one whom we do not know. Of how many of us can be said just this and no more: "Him they compelled to bear His cross." And, ah me! how such a cross cuts into our flesh, bows our backs and breaks our hearts. How we long to lay our hands upon it and cast it from us. We do not comprehend its mystery, we do not taste its sweetness. It is to us only what it was at first to Simon—a bar of wood, a heavy clog upon our lives. We have had ambitions. We have heard the imperious voices of intellect calling us, promising us a life of splendid usefulness, of reciprocal love, of brilliant fame. But we have not been free even to sacrifice ourselves to our chosen profession. Some obligation to others we dared not dishonor bound us to a life of petty and wearisome routine. Oh! the bitterness of seeing our bright ideals fading, the good years passing, devoured by the canker worm and the caterpillar.

But now suppose that we begin to learn the lesson God sent adversity to teach us. Suppose we begin to comprehend that all great souls are sent into this world not to be

THE WORK OF A GREAT BISHOP

By the Rt. Rev. Frederick F. Johnson, D. D.,

WHEN at the age of eighty-six, on the seventeenth day of April last, Daniel Sylvester Tuttle finished his earthly course and entered on the life beyond the bridge, he probably had a larger following of personal friends than any other man in the United States. From early manhood he was marked for leadership. Throughout his life he was a spiritual, intellectual, and moral dynamo. Rugged in frame, yet gentle as a woman, he drew the people to him with cords of love and grappled them to his soul with hoops of steel. He was a noble man. And the nobleness which lies in other men, sleeping but never dead, was quick to rise in majesty to meet his own.

Born in Windham, Greene County, New York, January 26, 1837, he graduated from Columbia University at the age of twenty, and from the General Theological Seminary at the age of twenty-five. On Sunday, June 29, 1862, in the Church of the Transfiguration in the City of New York, being twenty-six years old, he was given authority to execute the office of a deacon by Bishop Horatio Potter, sixth Bishop of New York.

The young deacon preached his first sermon in St. Peter's Church, West Twentieth Street, New York City, on the afternoon of the day of his ordination. The following Sunday, in the Church of St. James the Less, Scarsdale, N. Y., he for the first time ministered the cup in the office of the Holy Communion. The second Sunday in July, he came to Windham, where he had been brought up, conducted three services and preached three times. In July of 1863 he was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Horatio Potter in Zion Church, Morris, among the hills of Otsego County, in the State of New York. A month later he became assistant minister to the Rev. George L. Foote, rector of Zion Church, Morris; and on New Year's Day, 1864, he succeeded Mr. Foote as rector of the parish, at a salary of $800 per year. Four years and four months after he was ordered deacon, in October, 1866, being not yet thirty years old, he was elected by the House of Bishops to be Missionary Bishop of Montana, with jurisdiction in Utah and Idaho; and on May 1, 1867, he entered upon the duties of his office as a Bishop in the Church of God.

From the beginning of his ministry, the eyes of what we call the Middle West were on young Tuttle. In December, 1862, Quincy, Ill., called him at $300 a year, which call he "declined with thanks." A week later Quincy wired him, "Come as rector at $1,000 a year." To which he returned, "Thanks. I cannot." St. Peter's, Sycamore, in what is now the Diocese of Chicago, went after him in March of 1863. On May 29, 1868, he having been occupied in the Missionary Episcopate only a year and one month, he was unanimously elected at Kirkwood to be the Bishop of Missouri. This election he declined. Eighteen years later, in May, 1886, Missouri elected him the second time at a convention of the Diocese held in St. George's Church, St. Louis. The election was consummated by the required majorities of consents of Standing Committees, August 9, 1886. When Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, died, September 7, 1903, Bishop Tuttle became Presiding Bishop of the Church. These are the dry facts of his career. His life was a great epic poem; in the West, filled with wild adventure; in Missouri, crowded with great and increasing responsibilities. The years which multiplied upon him confirmed the promise of his youth. Unusual gifts of guidance and of friendship and a fire of faith enabled him to do good in his generation such as few men find opportunity to do. The steady-moving shuttle of his days wove the best that was in him into the very fabric of the spiritual and intellectual and political life of this city and state and nation.

Bishop Tuttle's first official act within this Diocese was in Christ Church, St. Louis, preaching and celebrating the Holy Communion on the morning of September 5, 1886. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Schuyler and by the Rev. Messrs. Sterling, Greene, Robert, and Benedict. His first confirmation in Missouri was in the evening of the same day, in Mount Calvary Church, St. Louis; four persons, presented by the Rev. Benjamin E. Reed, rector of the parish, who is with us today. The Rev. Frederick B. Scheetz and the Rev. Robert A. Holland assisted in the service. During his entire episcopate he confirmed a total of 18,780 persons in Missouri; elsewhere he confirmed 2,000.

February 18 Bishop Tuttle conducted part of the worship at Westminster Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, at the annual patriotic service of the Sons of the Revolution. February 21 he attended the monthly meeting of Trustees of the Missouri Botanical Garden. February 22 he addressed at the College Club the Daughters of the American Revolution. The evening of the same day at Hotel Chase, he addressed the Sons of the Revolution. February 23 he preached in the evening at Palmyra. February 24 he appointed Mr. John F. Shepley of St. Louis a member of the Diocesan Council. February 26 he lunched with the "Community Drive" at Hotel Statler and pronounced the invocation. February 27 he buried his devoted friend and near neighbor, Mrs. Kate M. Howard, from the Cathedral to Bellefontaine Cemetery. (This was the last service of his life. It was public service "No. 13,700," counting from the day when he was ordered deacon in 1862.) These were his last days. I have printed the record that we may remind ourselves how broad his sympathies were to the very end; how nothing that concerned the welfare of humanity lacked interest for him. You know how Gordon's journal closes, in the Soudan:

"I have done my best for my country. C. G. G."

Until today, not since the Convention of 1887 has Bishop Tuttle been absent from the annual Convention of the Diocese. Each year for thirty-six consecutive years (first as Bishop of the entire State, and later of the eastern half), he gathered with clerical and lay workers of the field committed to his charge, to confer with them, to seek counsel of them, to leave words of loving warning and wise exhortation with them. Many present today have come back year by year as affectionate children to grasp a father's hand, to catch the accents of a father's voice, to take the benediction of a father's smile, and to return heartened to their work because of tarrying together for a space in a father's gracious presence. I venture to say that there have been few dioceses or missionary districts in the length and breadth of our land—or of any land—where the Prayer Book phrasing, "Reverend Father in God" has hit so close to the truth of the matter in expressing existing relations, as in this Missouri Diocese during the episcopate of Bishop Tuttle. Today we meet without him, and we are lonely, lacking our late Bishop's loving greeting. Yet, saddened as we are because he is away, and hungry as we are for him to feed us once again with bread which he through all his life had eaten and found good, we should do ourselves and God and him a wrong if we should say today, "My heart within me is desolate," and stop there. We must add, with the Psalmist, "Yet do I remember the time past!" I do remember concerning the first crude beginnings of the Church's work out in the Rocky Mountains and on the Western plains. I do remember concerning the laying of the bottom stones for the upbuilding of Helena and Butte and Salt Lake City and Boise and the rest. I do remember concerning the courage with which he faced the road in days of loneliness with none to share with him his cabin home but his cat Dick! I do remember how with a hand unshrinkingly firm but caressingly gentle he addressed his whole loving nature to sweetly winning souls to Jesus Christ, exulting in the good of all mankind. I do remember concerning his daily life and conversation in this great city, whose distinguished citizen he was for many a year before he fell on sleep. I do remember his incurable determination "to see a good in evil and a hope in ill success"; his entire belief that everywhere he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him. I do remember how he "... never doubted clouds would break;

Never dreamed though right were worsted wrong would triumph;

Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake."

I do remember deeds of week-day holiness which everywhere fell from him noiseless as the snow, as through his whole long life he learned the luxury of doing good. I do remember concerning all the years in which he fed God's people faithfully and led them like a flock. I do remember concerning churches, chapels, schools, hospitals, orphanages, which made a fruitful field where once was howling wilderness. For these, memorials all of them to his love and labor, now thank we all our God! And thank we God the more for the nobler and imperishable monument found in souls which have heard his voice as that of a good shepherd and have followed him in those paths in which he followed Christ; in lives led by his loving counsels and strengthened by his strength and purified by the contagious purity of his life; in Christian families sanctified by his frequent presence in them as a winsome guest.

Above the dust and din and fuss and fret and grime and greed and rush and roar and stress and storm and toil and tears and work and worry of the world, I seem to hear today a voice whose sound is as the sound of many waters, "Unto the angel (or messenger) of the Church of Missouri write: I know thy works and thy labor, and thy charity and thy gentleness. I know thy faith and thy courage and thy patience. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God."

In the soft sunset glow of a perfect April afternoon in Bellefontaine Cemetery, among the graves of dear ones loved long since and lost awhile, we "sowed" the natural body of the great fourth Bishop of Missouri, until the day break, and the shadows flee away. After the singing of sweet hymns which he and those who loved him loved, beneath a wilderness of flowers we left him sleeping; and we rendered unto God most high praise and hearty thanks for the wonderful grace and virtue declared in that choice vessel of His grace. At this first corporate assembly of our clergy and people since our late leader went away, we take up the work which had so long been his, conscious of how unspeakable is our loss, yet rejoicing that he has entered through the open door which leads to larger life and wider liberty. And we pledge ourselves to carry on, in humility striving to build better up to best; in humility asking the Giver of every perfect gift to teach us to "Measure our lives by loss instead of gain,

Not by wine drunk, but by the wine poured forth."

Missionaries and Books

Among the indirect ways of furthering the missionary cause one of the most helpful is to supply missionaries living in the remote quarters of the world with books and periodicals. It would be hard to over-state the value to such workers of the means thus provided to keep them in touch with the progress of thought and life in the more advanced centers of world civilization.

An unusually attractive opportunity for this kind of service is offered by the Book Committee of the Kuling Library.

Kuling is the largest of the summer resorts and sanatoria that have of recent years revolutionized the life of foreigners in China. There are between 2,500 and 3,000 Americans and Europeans there in the summer months. Of this number probably two-thirds are missionaries and their children, so that there is little doubt that the normal Kuling summer community contains the largest number of foreign missionaries of any community in the world.

Kuling is situated in the Lu Mountains near the Yangtze River, five hundred miles from the coast. It is one of the most beautiful and most healthful places in Asia. Jaded missionaries, worn down by strenuous work in a debilitating climate, are made over by a few weeks there and sent back with new hope and energy to their work.

Great, however, as is the value of Kuling to Central China missionaries, this value would be greatly enhanced if they had there a well-equipped Public Library. The weeks in Kuling are for the missionary simply the best time of the year for reading and study. The work at their stations in this day of open doors and vast opportunity is done under a pressure that allows little time for anything but preparation for the next immediate task. In Kuling it is different. There is time and there is quiet, but the facilities for reading and study are quite inadequate.

A well-equipped Public Library would serve the missionaries in a three-fold way. First, it would enable them to read for recreation and relaxation, a boon of no small value if they are to keep a healthy tone of mind among the many things that prey on the mind and distort perspective. Secondly, it would enable him to keep abreast of the religious thought of the day, as well as renew his inspiration from the saints and scholars whose labors have enriched the Church throughout her history.

Finally, by its books on every phase of Chinese civilization it would enable him to prepare himself for a closer contact and a better understanding of the people he is seeking to reach. The importance of this cannot be over-emphasized in this day of sensitive national nerves and when the outward aspect of things is changing so rapidly before our eyes.

There is an attractive library building in Kuling recently built at the cost of no little sacrifice on the part of the community. It contains several thousand volumes, but these are by no means adequate for serious study and research. Books of reference are especially needed as well as recent publications on all subjects that touch the missionary's life and thought.

The Kuling community is making a determined effort to bring the library up to a high point of efficiency. A committee is engaged in the task of raising in China a thousand dollars for the purchase of new books. More than half of this amount has already been pledged. The committee is seeking to secure $2,000 from the friends of China in the United States and urgently desires the cooperation of those who can see in this an opportunity by a small investment to give definite and valuable aid to the missionary cause in one of the greatest mission fields in the world. Checks should be made payable to the Kuling Library, and sent to the Rev. Edmund J. Lee, American Church Mission, Anking, Anhwei, China, Chairman of the Book Committee of Kuling Library.

Holy Week Poetry

By Francelia Leonard.

CHRIST PLEADS FOR JUDAS.

Father, Who art in Heaven, his and Mine—
Give Me his soul to save!
Behold his desperate repentance, see him spurn
The cursed price for which he sold his King—
Fated fulfilment of sad prophecies
See him hang there—his life a broken thing—
Broken by his own hands, because his heart is Mine,
Father, because he knew not what he did, until too late;
Because his sorrowing heart denies his treacherous caress,
Oh, give his sin into My willing keep!
And let Me lift his soul to Thee again!

JUDAS FORGIVEN.

So—I choose death!
And throw myself into its silent, dark oblivion
There to be free
From that clear, ringing voice which forever says:
"Betrayest thou Me?"
No more to feel upon my lips
The stinging bitterness of my false caress.
Best—best of all—no more to see—
That stern, sad gaze, that sunk deep in my shuddering heart,
Will ne'er depart!

So—here is death!
But where is rest?
The silence rings with echoes
That bitter sting, burns yet upon my lips.
Those eyes!—those eyes!

But Christ—My Christ?
Those echoes—listen what they say:
"And so Thou diest for me?
Behold, I die for thee!"
Thine eyes so tender, loving, longing, through the gloom?
Thy Hand, so cool upon my burning lips?
Thy Hand stretched out my King—My Christ!
For me—for me?

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

WHAT THE YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETY HAS MEANT TO US.

(Miss Isabelle E. Fisk.)

Conference Young People's Societies,
Diocese of Southern Ohio.

WHEN I was asked to speak on "What the Young People's Society has meant to us at the Church of the Epiphany," I felt that I really should speak on what it has meant to us, and not simply on what it has meant to me. So, at one of our meetings, every person present was asked to tell what the Society meant to him. I am now, therefore, simply acting as the spokesman of the Society to tell you the things we told each other then. In discussing what our Young People's Society has meant to us, we discovered that it had several aspects. First, there is the social aspect, which we like to emphasize by calling ourselves a Fellowship. We found that several of our members had been attracted to the society because they were strangers in town, and were looking for friends. Among them, one had come from England, others had come to Cincinnati to study at the University, and still others had moved here from other cities. Feeling that the quickest way to become acquainted with congenial people was through a connection with their Church they had come to us, and found in our society the friendships they desired. It was pointed out that in the Young People's Society wholesome pleasures were being provided for the Young People, who, in their natural quest for relaxation and fun, might only too easily turn to amusements of the wrong kind. It was felt that a step forward had been taken when the Church, instead of looking with the old-time frown upon various forms of amusements, had begun to make use of legitimate pleasures to attract the young people and to win their loyalty. Another aspect of the Society is in the relations of the members to each other. The Society develops among us a sympathetic interest in and understanding of each other, which is all too often lacking among the older members of Church congregations.

The study part of our program presents the Fellowship to us in another light, and we become aware of a distinct educational aspect. In our discussions we are surprised to learn that, after all, a good many people think as we do, that we are not alone struggling along some line of thought or reasoning, but have companions on the way on whom we may rely for counsel and support. Then, too, there is always the mental stimulus derived from the interchange of different ideas. And, fortunately, we do have different ideas presented, for we do not all think alike. When two or more points of view are being defended, a lively discussion must follow and we find that our society is, all unawares, training us to hold our own in an argument. We are learning to crystallize and express our own ideas, and to find the weak point in our own as well as in our opponent's argument. Moreover, our arguments here give us something we can discuss with our friends elsewhere, and frequently enable us to take an intelligent interest in vital topics that might otherwise escape our notice. Our discussions afford us a kind of clearing house for our academic knowledge. To questions never discussed in the classroom, we come to apply what we have learned of science, philosophy, and the higher criticism. We find that our religion and our education must go hand in hand; that in the last analysis there is no antagonism between them.

Then, there is the spiritual aspect of our Society, always difficult to define. We feel that in our Fellowship our minds are being directed towards things on a higher level than those we encounter in our daily life. We are being led to take an interest in vital questions, to look for something higher than ourselves.

So much, then, for what our Fellowship has meant to its members. Yet this does not exhaust the question, for it fails to consider two things: What our Society has meant to our Church and what it has meant to our leader, the rector. Wishing to know about these two things, we asked our rector for his point of view. As to the former the rector felt that the society established for some of the young people a connection with the Church lacking before. Moreover, our corporate communions bring to the Church some young people who would never come to the service otherwise. This at least makes a beginning for active participation in the services and life of the Church.

As to the latter question, our rector has found in our Fellowship an excellent opportunity to establish the most cordial relations between himself and the young people, a splendid thing for both. Due to the informality and intimacy of our meetings, the rector finds that he can say there things he cannot say in the pulpit, because of the conventions which inevitably attach to any form of public speaking. In our Fellowship meetings rector and young people come to know and understand each other, and our rector has gone so far as to say that as far as the educational aspect is concerned the educating is not solely on our side.

A Call to Youth.

By the Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines,
St. John's Industrial School, Cape Mount, Liberia.

The Church, the Master's Body, calls
And shall not Youth reply?
She needs your gifts of heart and mind,
Your warming love for human-kind
O Youth! With holy emblem signed
Of Him Who came to die.

The Church, the Master's Body, calls—
For you, O Youth, she pleads!
She needs your strength to run the race,
Your steady nerve, your sturdy pace
O Youth! On whom He sheds His grace
She needs your gift of deeds.

The Church, the Master's Body, calls;
The world is shadowed still
With doubt and fear, with strife and pain
She needs your clear and ready brain,
O Youth! For whom the Lamb was slain:
She needs your gift of will.

The Church, the Master's body, calls,
For courage to endure,
O Youth! All gifts that you possess
Are hers by right, and He will bless
Those gifts with growing blessedness,
If you but answer sure.

The Church demands your life for Him
Whose blood for love was poured.
The veins of age are running thin,
O Youth! But lend the will to win,
Your bounding blood to outrun sin—
Oh, lend them to the Lord!

The Church, the Master's Body, calls—
Each hour a soul is lost:
Each hour a soul for whom He gave
His body to the cross and grave
Is drifting past His power to save:
Arise! Count not the cost!

Y. P. S. L. Activities in the Diocese of Georgia.

"Some of the young men of the Young People's Service League of St. John's Church, Savannah, are rendering an unusual service to the parish during Lent by assisting the rector, the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, in his confirmation instruction for his adult class. Following the rector's talk, there is a dramatization by the Y. P. S. L. members, of the book, 'The Episcopal Church for Men of Today,' by the Rev. George P. Atwater, D. D.

"A simple but vividly portrayed, missionary pageant in preparation for the Lenten Offering, was recently given by eight boys of the Church School of Christ Church (the Rev. David Cady Wright, rector), Savannah. The pageant was compiled by the principal, Mrs. T. P. Waring, by using the pamphlet, 'A Call to Service,' issued by the National Department of Religious Education to the Y. P. S. L., and the posters sent out by the same Department the beginning of Lent to the Church schools. The boys in cassocks and cottas and wearing the posters suspended from the neck, carried unlit candles, and represented the different mission fields. The principal as 'The Teaching Church,' read the lines of the pageant, and from a lighted candle, symbolizing 'The Light of the World,' lighted a taper at the end of each episode. The procession of 'Light Bearers' during the recessional was very impressive."

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

LET RELIGION KEEP ABREAST OF THE TIMES.

Last week we published a plan suggested by a committee in the Diocese of New York for controlling the moving picture business and rendering it harmless. Since then a press dispatch has appeared which offers a method of carrying this matter a step further so that moving pictures shall become not merely harmless but helpful in the religious and social life of a community.

While this report is somewhat local in its nature, we feel that the same situation herein referred to would probably apply equally well in thousands of our small towns throughout the country.

We quote as follows:

"Winchester, Va.—An effort to put the City Council on record as decrying a recent movement for the exhibiting of religious motion pictures here on Sunday afternoons failed last night, when a resolution offered by Lewis F. Cooper went by the board for want of a second.

"The theatre in which the films are shown at what is known as the people's picture service has been packed and jammed with people since the first Sunday in Lent, and the clergymen in charge have repeatedly urged regular Church-going people to remain away, so that the unchurched could be reached 'through the eye,' which, they said, had been proven a quick and easy way of bringing religion home to many people.

"Mr. Cooper's resolution stated that the people's picture service or motion pictures on Sunday, was 'an innovation which must necessarily be a stepping-stone to the further desecration of the Sabbath, the tendency to which is becoming more and more alarming in the life of our community every day.'

"Mayor W. W. Glass, who was present, said he could recall that years ago, when efforts were made to introduce organs and other musical instruments into Church worship, many old-time members held up their hands in 'holy horror,' declaring such things as organs and horns to be 'tools of the devil.' The Mayor gave it as his opinion that the people's picture service already had proven its worth.

"The Rev. F. R. Casselman, pastor of Centenary Reformed Church, and the Rev. Robert B. Nelson, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, who are sponsoring the Sunday afternoon pictures, had no comment to make on the resolution that failed to get a second in the Council, other than to reiterate what they already had said in reply to other hostile criticism, that 'the audiences speak for themselves'."

The Rev. Robert B. Nelson referred to in this dispatch has had large experience in social service. He was the beloved and admired chaplain at Camp Lee during the war, and immediately afterwards spent a couple of years in governmental social hygiene work before resuming parochial responsibilities. He is now a member of the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Virginia.

While we are not prepared to advocate even religious moving pictures on Sunday afternoons in every community, nevertheless the fact remains that there are some places where this form of presentation will undoubtedly be the most effective that can be used.

The situation varies with every community, as does its size and community life. The whole subject, in fact, involves the observance of the Sabbath, which is a matter that is almost as much in controversy as are some of our Church doctrines. It is a subject on which it is not safe to dogmatize except to say in a general way that clergy and Church authorities should preserve open minds on innovations. Things which in years past would have seemed to be a breach of reverence, if not indeed actual wickedness, under prevailing conditions may be of the greatest religious value.

There is no doubt that Bible scenes, and even incidents in the life of Our Saviour can be presented through the medium of the motion pictures in a theatre to hundreds of thousands of people who would never come in contact with these influences through the ordinary medium of the theatre, and it would certainly seem to be wrong not to use such a method of presenting religion.

To those who are shocked at the idea of religion in a theatre on Sunday afternoons, let us say that it is worth remembering that St. Paul did not hesitate to use the language of the gladiatorial arena in drawing his similes, and presenting his arguments for the Christian to take the "whole armour of God."

It seems to us that the presentation of religion should have the advantage of every modern method available.

A NEW ALLY FOR PROHIBITION.

It begins to look as though prohibition enforcement might find a new and unexpected ally in the automobile. Many police justices are rapidly appreciating the fact that the danger of a drunken man is multiplied at least a hundred-fold when he sits at the steering wheel of a motor car.

Many a faithful horse has safely guided its drunken driver and his buggy into the haven of the saddling-shed, but even a Ford car, with all its advantages, will not perform this kindly office; on the contrary it becomes wilder and more erratic in its movements under the hand of one whose brain is even slightly affected by intoxicants.

According to the reports of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, the fatalities caused by automobiles are increasing every year, and jumped by more than thirteen per cent during the year 1923. Their report shows that:

"If the same rate of increase prevailed in the United States Death Registration Area, in 1923, the mortality rose from 12.5 per 100,000, the 1922 figure, to 14.2. At this rate, the number of automobile fatalities in the total population of Continental United States was very close to 16,000. In an earlier Bulletin, we estimated that the figure might be 15,000. It is now assured, therefore, that our previous estimate, discouraging as it was, was too conservative. And the outlook for 1924 is bad! The mortality from automobile casualties in January of this year exceeds that for the same month of 1923 by more than 17 per cent.

"The lives which are being lost to an increasing extent year after year through automobile accidents are, very largely, those of children. Approximately one-half of all the deaths from this cause occur among those under fifteen years of age. If ever the tide turns, and any progress is made in the suppression of fatal automobile injuries, that progress will constitute, very largely, a step in the direction of the conservation of child life. If we were to disregard for a moment those deaths which occur among passengers of motor vehicles, and consider the relatively greater mortality among those who are struck or run over, the fatalities among children would be much more than one-half of the total."

Of course, no method is provided by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company Statistical Department, nor by any other agency compiling such statistics to show in how many cases drunkenness was one of the factors in producing such an appalling number of accidents.

Probably it will not be possible to ascertain exactly the extent to which intemperance enters into such tragedies. No one likes to pry into the condition of a man who has been killed. We believe, however, that as each year shows a more universal usage of motor vehicles, more and more stringent means will be adopted for fixing severe penalties upon those who drive a car after having partaken of intoxicating liquor, however temperately, and that these necessary restrictions will tend rapidly to bring about the practice of total abstinence among automobile drivers, which will soon mean among the entire population.

Church Intelligence

The Episcopal Church Called to Aid Churches of the East in the Holy Land

By the Rev. Thomas Burgess.

Holy Week irresistibly draws our thoughts towards Jerusalem, that fateful city of the ancient world to which Jew, Christian, and Mohammedan look with reverence. Outstanding incidents in Our Saviour's earthly life and ministry are pictured before us upon the background of this hill built, battlemented city, which today as of old crowns the Judean Mountains with square white buildings, glistening domes and precipitous walls. The modern city reveals her varied past. Here have assembled the nations of the world, each of which in turn has left a mark upon her history, architecture and population; Jews of the old remnant left in the land, Christian Arabs and their Moslem brothers, Greeks, Egyptians, Latins, French, Germans, Armenians, English, and, by no means least, the European Jews of the Zionist immigration.

The largest and most influential Christian group is that of Orthodox Church under the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Jerusalem, the successor of that Church founded by Our Lord's brother St. James. Seventy-five per cent of the Christian population in Palestine belong to the Greek Patriarchate, and in her care are such sacred places of Our Lord's earthly life as the Holy Sepulchre and the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. Though stricken and impoverished by the war, which deprived her of her strong Russian friends, she holds the key to Christian life in the Holy Land and bears the burden of maintaining the Blessed Hope of the Gospel in the midst of the unbelieving Moslem majority and the enthusiastic Zionists.

The Armenian Patriarchate of Jerusalem centering in St. James' Monastery on Mt. Zion, comprises but a mere handful of people, but being the only part of the Armenian Church under a government which allows complete freedom it occupies a strategic place in Armenian Church life.

The Episcopal Church has been invited to enter the lives of these two great Christian Communions in the Holy City, by helping them lift their educational systems to a higher plane.

Better education for their clergy is the form which they wish our assistance to take.

The Armenians have a seminary of importance in connection with the Cathedral of St. James, built over the prison where the "brother of John" was beheaded (Acts 12:23). They wish it to be a center from which a new type of Armenian Church leaders may be sent forth to revive their scattered people and maintain Church life.

The National Council at the urgent request of the Armenian Patriarch, His Beatitude Turien, is sending the Rev. Charles T. Bridgeman, M. A., formerly of the Department of Missions, to be American Chaplain in Jerusalem with special commission to aid in the revitalizing of this seminary.

The Greek Orthodox Church has a similar problem. Sixty thousand Christian people but await a better educated priesthood to advance to new levels of Christian living and usefulness. The seminary, the Convent of the Holy Cross, is now closed as a result of war losses. The American Church through its Chaplain in Jerusalem is asked to aid them in reviving this much needed school.

The Good Friday offerings of our Church people last year, which, at the request of the National Council, were given for this work as well as for that of Bishop MacInnes in Jerusalem, enable the Council to initiate this new educational missionary activity in July.

Continuance of the work will depend upon the Good Friday offerings again this Holy Week. Bishop Garland in Provincial Meeting of Commission on Religious Education.

The regular spring meeting of the Commission on Religious Education of the Province of Washington will be held in St. John's Parish Hall, Roanoke, Va., on Tuesday, April 29. On the preceding evening there will be a mass meeting in the interest of Religious Education, at which the speakers will be members of the Commission.

The Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, Bishop of Erie, was elected president of this Commission at its meeting in Washington last November, but it is understood that the business of his diocese will prevent him from coming to Roanoke. Bishop Ward's predecessor as President of the Commission was the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia, in whose diocese Roanoke is situated. Bishop Jett is much beloved and respected by the Commission and proved a most valuable presiding officer. The Commission feels itself fortunate to be able to meet within his diocese.

Since the last meeting of the Commission the Rev. James Lawrence Ware, formerly Educational Field Secretary of the Province of Washington, has resigned that office to accept the rectorship of Trinity Church, Warren, Pa. It is probable that the Commission at the coming meeting will appoint a committee to select his successor.

It is not known that any new projects will be inaugurated at this meeting, but the standing committees will report their progress on the matters already in hand. These include the development of religious instruction at Normal Schools, the use of college students as councillors for young people at summer schools, aid to college pastors and increased interest in students by local rectors in college towns, the preparation of an elementary text book for teachers unable to attend training classes, and the maintenance of a provincial summer school for colored Church workers.

Two important meetings of provincial interest have been held since the last meeting of the commission. The first of these was called by the Rev. Howard W. Diller, of Pottsville, Pa., Executive Officer of the Commission and Chairman of the Committee on Church (Sunday) Schools. It was held in Philadelphia in January and was attended by representatives engaged in Sunday-school work in the dioceses of the province and by workers in the Church his letter to the clergy concerning the Good Friday offering writes: "There is crying need for extension of this work of helping the afflicted churches of the East train new spiritual leaders. Therefore an increased offering is greatly needed."

On the sacred day reminding us of Our Lord's great sacrifice for His people, both in Jerusalem and throughout the world, it is appropriate that we should especially remember the Mother City of our holy religion. Here above all places it is imperative that His gospel be maintained, and that it be expressed in vigorous and intelligent Christian living.

To no Christian Church has so great an honor been given as that now bestowed upon the Episcopal Church. Our sister churches of the East have such confidence in our willingness to help them and in our sincerity in doing so in harmony with their ancient faith that they have permitted us to enter their ecclesiastical system at its most vital spot, namely: the education of their clergy.

School Service League. The discussions of this conference will be described at the meeting of the Commission and plans made for the increased use of the Church School Service League program for children's work in the parishes.

The second meeting was that of representatives of Diocesan Young People's Societies, and was held in Washington in February. At this meeting a Provincial Young People's Service League was organized. This work is under the direct charge of Rev. C. P. Sparling of Baltimore.

The Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Petersburg, Va., is the chairman of the Committee on Teacher Training, which includes supervision of summer schools. Dr. Carter is Chairman of the Committee directing the management of the Provincial Summer School for Colored Church Workers, which will be held at St. Paul Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va. The attendance at this school last year numbered about 80 persons. The difficulty of securing a larger enrollment is largely one of finance, as the parishes and missions from which the workers come are not able to pay the costly railroad fare. The Commission hopes to persuade Diocesan Boards to supply the funds necessary for securing an adequate enrollment in the school of 1924.

The Rev. Karl M. Block, rector of St. John's Church, in whose parish the meeting of the Commission will be held, is chairman of the Commission's Committee on Week-day Religious Instruction. He is much interested in securing week-day instruction in connection with the public schools of Roanoke. He is in charge of the mass meeting on the evening of the twenty-eighth, at which he hopes to secure the presence of representative citizens before whom the speakers will place the importance of adequate religious instruction for school children. The ladies of St. John's Church will serve luncheon for the Commission in the parish hall. The Rev. W. L. DeVries, D. D., Canon of Washington, Chairman of the Committee on Schools and Colleges, has recently visited the University of Virginia, and conferred with the Rev. Noble C. Powell, the student pastor. The Commission is anxious to secure the building at an early date of a suitable plant for student work at the University.

The Commission will adjourn on Tuesday to permit its members to attend the National Conference of Educational Executives, which will be held in Boston early in May.

The Church Congress: Final Arrangements.

After several changes in the plans, final arrangements for the accommodation of the Church Congress, which will meet in Boston April 29 to May 2, have been made as follows:

All regular meetings, including the opening meeting on Tuesday evening, when Bishop Lawrence will make his address of welcome, and Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, D. D., will give his historical address, will be held in Ford Hall, which is on Ashburton Place in the neighborhood of the State House. The celebration of Holy Communion on Wednesday morning at nine o'clock will be at St. Paul's Cathedral. The meeting of the General Committee, on Thursday afternoon at 2:30, will be at the Harvard Club, 374 Commonwealth Avenue.

The Committee on Hospitality is arranging to put up the speakers and officers of the Congress either at the Harvard Club, or at the Hotel Somerset on Commonwealth Avenue. In order that visitors to the Congress may succeed in obtaining rooms, the Committee has asked the management of the Hotel Somerset to hold a certain number for people attending the Congress. The management have said they would do so, and would give special convention rates as follows: Room and bath for one person $5.00, $6.00, $7.00 per day. Room and bath for two persons $6.00, $7.00, $8.00 per day. Two rooms with bath between for four persons $12.00 per day. Suite of two rooms and one bath $10.00 per day. Room without bath for one person $4.00 per day. Room without bath for two persons $5.00 per day.

Dean Washburn is inviting those attending the Congress to a tea at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge between four and six on Thursday afternoon.

From Alaska to Japan.

The Rev. William A. Thomas, St. Thomas' Mission, Point Hope, Alaska, writes to the Department of Missions, January 10, 1924:

"Enclosed you will find check for $25.06, which represents the balance of the Communion Alms for the year 1923. It is the wish of our people that this amount be their gift to the mission stations in Japan which suffered so terribly. They would send more if they had it. Times are not prosperous with them and with the drop in the fur market which we have heard reported and the poor prospects for the present trapping season, winter and spring will not be easy."

A Step In Friendly Relations.

To bring about closer relations with the churches of the Near East, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches has appointed a permanent Committee on Relations with Eastern Churches. Bishop Charles H. Brent of the Episcopal Church has been elected chairman. The Rev. Dr. George R. Montgomery is secretary.

As a first step in friendly relations the committee has appointed the Rev. Dr. F. W. Burnham, of the Disciples of Christ, and chairman of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, and the Rev. Dr. William C. Emhardt, of the Episcopal Church, as friendly visitors to the Christians of the countries of Eastern Europe and Western Asia. Dr. Emhardt is already in the Near East. Dr. Burnham will make his trip this summer.

The full membership of the committee is as follows: Bishop Charles H. Brent, chairman; the Rev. Peter Ainslie, the Rev. James L. Barton, Professor Charles H. Boynton, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., the Rev. William I. Chamberlain, the Rev. S. N. Chester, E. T. Colton, Mrs. Elizabeth Boies Cotton, the Rev. William C. Emhardt.

Dr. John H. Finley, Robert H. Gardiner, the Rev. William I. Haven, President Henry Churchill King, the Rev. F. H. Knobel, the Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, the Rev. Frederick Lynch, Mrs. William A. Montgomery, Dr. John R. Mott, the Rev. Frank Mason North, the Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, the Rev. Stanley White, Mrs. Charles V. Vickrey, the Rev. John S. Zelle.

Educational Executives Meet May 2-5.

The Conference of Educational Executives meeting for the fifth successive year brings together about a hundred leaders, diocesan officers and others, from all parts of the country. It takes place this year at the Church of Our Saviour, Brookline, Mass., May 2 to 5.

The outstanding subjects for consideration is the Training of Teachers and Leaders, various means of training teachers, within and without the parish, the securing of leaders for other groups, the whole development of lay leadership assisting the clergy.

Professor Erskine of Columbia, Dr. George Craig Stewart and Archdeacon Severance of Spokane are among the speakers announced.

Family Sunday.

A feature of the services held in Grace Church, Mount Airy, on the fourth Sunday in Lent was the observance of "Family Sunday," nearly every family of the parish being present at the morning service, conducted by the rector, the Rev. Thomas S. Cline. It was the third time this custom was observed at Grace Church. The rector stated that this particular Sunday has been known for centuries in the Church of England as "Mothering Sunday," and from ancient times was the occasion for family reunions and visits to the mother parish. The revival of this custom is being promoted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Rev. John Doyle, curate of the Chapel of the Mediator, West Philadelphia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Pottstown. Mr. Doyle leaves May 1, but still remains in the diocese.

He succeeds the Rev. Stanley R. West, who resigned to go to Calvary Church, Conshohocken. Mr. Doyle is a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School, Class of 1923, and is a World War veteran, having served as a naval aviator.

The Rev. William Oscar Roome, Jr., assistant at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Seymour, Conn., succeeding to the vacancy caused by the death of the Rev. W. A. Woodford, some months ago. Mr. Roome takes his new charge May 1. Before becoming assistant at Holy Apostles, Mr. Roome was curate at the Mediator, West Philadelphia, and prior to that was rector of Emmanuel Church, Washington, D. C.

The Rev. R. W. B. Hutt was instituted as rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, at the service Sunday morning, April 6. The Rev. Percy R. Stockton, Superintendent of the Seamen's Church Institute, Philadelphia, was in charge of the Service of Institution as the representative of Bishop Garland.

Memorial Services for the Rev. G. S. Whitney.

Memorial services for the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, late rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, were conducted by the Bishop of Georgia, at St. Paul's Church, Sunday afternoon, March 31. The service was simple but beautiful, with appropriate Psalms and Scripture lessons, and with a special musical program, and was attended by many friends from other churches. The Rev. Jackson H. Harris, rector of the Church of the Atonement, and the Rev. J. M. Wright, the new Vicar of Christ Church, assisted in the service, and the memorial address was given by Bishop Reese, who, in paying tribute to Mr. Whitney, said, among other things: "Mr. Whitney was not merely a parish priest, but a citizen of this community. He identified himself with its moral, religious and civic interests. He was ready to serve or to lead as opportunity and duty required, and he filled a large place in the life of the city and in the esteem and affection of his fellow-citizens." This is but a small part of the just and deserving words spoken in appreciation of a priest and friend of his Bishop, Diocese and Parish, one who served well and faithfully.

The congregation of St. Paul's Church expects to realize one of Mr. Whitney's desires by placing a window above the altar in memory of the rector they loved so devotedly. A committee has been formed to receive contributions, which, it is believed, will include donations from scores of people not members of the church. Already the fund has been started, and contributions have been received without solicitation.

New Parish House Completed.

The members of the Parish of the Church of the Atonement, the Rev. J. H. Harris, rector, are rejoicing in the completion of their parish house, which is already in use and will be dedicated shortly. This is the beginning of new building enterprises, for the contract has been let for re-stuccoing the church building and work was started the first week in April.

Assisting the Struggling Russians.

Certain Church people, it is known, assisted some of the priests of the Russian Church, with expenses to attend a convention just held in Detroit. This convention was called by Metropolitan Platon to consider present conditions in his Church. These conditions are known to be desperate, owing to lack of financial support. The Church is in sympathy, of course, with the Church in question, and it is shown in a new way by a Detroit parish lending its parish house for the convention. The contestant for honors and property, supported by a Sovietized Russian Church is not supported by Episcopal Church leaders. Rumors that the two churches named are to seek union at this time, are denied by leaders in both, who say that Russians in America will not sever relations with Russians in Russia, while warmly appreciating the brotherly spirit that is shown by Episcopal leaders.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Formal Opening of the Church of Our Saviour, Sandston.

On Sunday, April 6, the Bishop made his first visitation to the new congregation, the Church of Our Saviour, Sandston. The purpose of the visitation was the formal opening of the new church building, which has just been erected, and the confirmation of a class of adults who have been awaiting his coming.

The service began, after the processional hymn, with prayers by the Bishop, setting apart the church building to the service of Almighty God, after which Evening Service was said, and a class of five persons presented to the Bishop by the Rev. John G. Scott, who has prepared the class for confirmation.

The Church was filled to overflowing with people of the community and Richmond, and some of the clergy from the Richmond churches took part in the service. One person also was confirmed for the Church of the Messiah at Highland Springs.

This service marks the culmination of about the most rapid and efficient project of Church organization which has been undertaken in the diocese for a great many years. The village of Sandston, which is on the scene of the heaviest fighting in the battle of Seven Pines (or Fair Oaks), May 31, 1862, has grown up in the past two or three years at the end of the trolley line coming out from Richmond. The first suggestion of the establishment of a congregation in the village was made shortly before Christmas last year, and, on Sunday in Christmas week, a meeting was held in the Community Building to organize a Sunday School and to discuss plans for the holding of services. Within a period of three months a congregation has been organized with about forty members, and set apart as a mission congregation with its own vestry. A lot has been purchased and a church erected at a cost of about $2,000. A great deal of the work of building was done by members of the congregation working at night by electric light.

On the day of the formal opening the church stands completely furnished. Most of the furniture in the chancel was presented by members of the congregation and others. The font will be given by the Rev. John Scott as a memorial to his father, Mr. William Henry Scott, who served as a courier in the Battle of Seven Pines. The fact that the Church of Our Saviour is located on the battle field makes it an eminently fitting building in which to place memorials to those who either served or gave up their lives for their country.

Death of Prominent Layman.

The Diocese of Virginia has lost one of her most devoted and useful laymen in the death of Col. Eugene C. Massie, which occurred very suddenly at his home in Richmond on Friday evening, April 4. Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon from Grace Church, of which he had been a vestryman for several years. Colonel Massie was for many years the teacher of the Men's Bible Class of Grace Church and an active member of various organizations connected with the work of the Church in Richmond and in the diocese. For several years he had been one of a group of five laymen who held lay services at the Boys' Reform School at Laurel, Va. These were the only regular services that the School could depend upon, and Colonel Massie was one of the leading spirits in carrying on this work.

Dr. Tebeau Goes To Bristol.

The vestry of Emmanuel Church, Bristol, considers itself most fortunate in having secured from the Rev. A. C. Tebeau, M. D., his acceptance of a call to that parish.

Dr. Tebeau, a native of North Carolina, has been located in Eastern Oregon since his graduation in 1923 from the Virginia Seminary. He will find a warm welcome awaiting him in his new field of labor and among his co-workers in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, when he comes to his charge about June 1.

Mr. Buxton Leaves Covington.

It is with the greatest regret that announcement is made of the resignation of the Rev. Clarence E. Buxton, of Alleghany Parish, to accept St. Andrew's Parish, Greensboro, N. C., effective April 1.

For the past six years Mr. Buxton has been the beloved rector of Emmanuel Church, Covington, Grace Mission, at the Home for Boys, near Covington, and the little church at Low Moor. As a wise counsellor, sympathetic pastor and personal friend he has endeared himself to his people and to his fellow clergy and the others with whom he has come in contact in the diocese.

The vestry of Emmanuel Church, at a recent meeting, adopted resolutions of the most complimentary and affectionate character, testifying the deep regret of the congregation and the citizens of Covington generally at the loss of Mr. Buxton and his family, calling attention to the fine progress made by the church under his leadership, as evidenced by the large increase in the number of members and the fact that plans have been completed for the erection in the near future of a handsome church building and parish house at a cost of more than a hundred thousand dollars.

Christ Church, Blacksburg.

On the first Sunday in March the rector, the Rev. J. Hubard Lloyd, had a special children's service, and will continue these on the first Sunday in each month. Appropriate selections of psalms, lessons and hymns were used and the first ten minutes of the sermon was addressed to the children. After this a hymn was sung, during which the children were allowed to leave the church and the service was continued. The front pews were filled with children, from two years upward. They seemed to enjoy the service greatly and it was pretty to see their intent, eager little faces as they listened to the sermon. This being the first Sunday in Lent, the rector spoke of some ways in which they could observe the season.

The Women's Missionary Societies of all denominations in the United States were requested to observe March 7 as a special day of prayer. Accordingly, in Blacksburg, a union meeting was held in the Methodist Church; delegates from the various missionary organizations taking part in the program, which consisted of prayers, readings and special music. The Rev. Mr. Lloyd made the address; the meeting being largely attended.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd, who, it will be remembered, have been missionaries in Japan for a number of years, were both asked to speak at a recent meeting of the Missionary Society of the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Clarence Abernathy, of the V. P. I., was a delegate from Christ Church to a meeting of the Students' Volunteer Movement, held in Lynchburg the last week in February; delegates attending from all the educational institutions in the State. Mr. Abernathy gave a report of this meeting at the morning service on March 23, with a brief account of the various addresses made at the meeting and the need for workers in the mission fields as shown by them.

Dr. Smith's Twenty-fifth Anniversary.

The Rev. Hubert Scott Smith, D. D., celebrated on April 2, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorate at St. Margaret's Church, and was the recipient of appropriate resolutions on that occasion from the vestry and wardens of the church. It is planned that a reception be held in honor of this anniversary on May 1. St. Margaret's Church has grown steadily in numbers, financial status and equipment under Dr. Smith's leadership, and is recognized today as one of the most active parishes of the Diocese.

Dr. Smith is a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, a member of several committees of the Diocesan organization and a member of several of the boards of Diocesan institutions. At the time of the consecration of Bishop Freeman, Dr. Smith served as one of his attending presbyters.

The Diocesan Coaching Class for Sunday-school teachers, which has met every month during the winter, has met with great success, both from the standpoint of attendance and instruction and help gained in the classes. The April class will be held at Christ Church, Georgetown, and, according to the custom, supper will be served at six o'clock and classes will begin immediately thereafter.

"Olivet to Calvary," sacred cantata by Maunder, was sung by the Cathedral choir in Bethlehem Chapel on the afternoon of April 6 at four o'clock. True to the spirit of this cantata, and true to the accustomed renditions heard by the Cathedral choir, this music was beautiful and devotional, making its strong appeal to those of the crowded congregation in the Chapel and the many absent listeners by radio.

Members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew throughout the Diocese have been invited to join with the Chapter of the Church of the Ascension in a corporate communion service on Palm Sunday morning. After the service there will be a fellowship breakfast for all the members.

New Parish House Opened.

On Thursday, March 27, the rector, the Rev. Walter B. Capers, D. D., and the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, were able to rejoice in the completion and occupation of a splendid parish house, furnished and equipped in every detail for Church School, social activities and welfare work. Bishop T. D. Bratton and Bishop Coadjutor William M. Green were present to participate in the occasion.

The parish house accommodates the Church School Assembly Room, twenty-four class rooms, kindergarten, the Young People's and Boy Scout Room, the Woman's room, kitchen and dining room. Bishop Bratton said beautiful and impressive prayers of blessing in each of these several departments.

Adjournment to the auditorium followed, where Dr. Capers, as master of ceremonies, introduced the speakers, who were: Bishop Green, a former rector and guest of honor; Marcellus Green, senior warden; Richard Green, junior warden. The last speaker was the Bishop of the Diocese, Bishop Bratton.

In his remarks, Dr. Capers gave a brief and interesting review of the promotion and building of the parish house. He stated the period of "agitation, promotion and collection" before the actual work was begun covered three years. This enterprise was accomplished with this unique feature, that it was one parish house actually built without controversy or wounded feelings.

Dr. Capers then presented statistics which demonstrated the remarkable growth of the parish within the past four and a half years. He said that six years ago St. Andrew's published a parish directory. In that directory the treasurer's report showed total receipts and disbursements for all purposes of $8,000. In the parish directory now being published, $22,000 was raised in the parish for parochial and extra-parochial purposes. This does not include $42,000 paid on the parish house, nor does it include $10,000 subscribed by individual members of the parish toward the endowment fund of our own diocesan schools. At the time of the publication of the former parish directory (1918) the Church School enrollment was one hundred and fifty; this year's directory will show an enrollment in the Church School of three hundred and fifty-nine pupils and thirty-four teachers and officers. The pledges to missions in 1918 was $1,500. This year the pledges to the N.-W. C. are $5,400. Four and a half years ago there was but a nucleus of a Men's Bible Class. Now, from sixty-two to seventy-five men meet the rector for Bible class instruction every Sunday morning. At that time there was no Woman's Bible Class. Today, the Woman's Bible Class has an enrollment of about forty, and there has just been organized a Young Woman's Bible Class of sixteen members. In the 1918 directory, the list of communicants is given at about six hundred, and it was stated that this included names of all persons on the books, whether residents or not. Today there are seven hundred and thirty-five communicants in the parish who can be claimed as "present and accounted for."

Dr. Capers became rector in 1919. He is president of the Standing Committee, a delegate to the General Convention, and a member of the Diocesan Executive Committee. He is also deeply interested in the civic affairs of Jackson, being a member of the Exchange Club, Chamber of Commerce, Vice-President of the Community Welfare Association and a director of the City Park Association.

Woman's Auxiliary in Mobile: Other Items of Interest.

The several branches have for years combined for inter-parochial mission study class work. "Creative Forces in Japan" is the topic occupying them at present, with increasing interest and numbers.

The Feast of the Annunciation they celebrated together in Trinity Church, the Rev. V. C. McMaster conducting a Quiet Hour, several men being present by invitation.

The spring meeting of the Auxiliary is to be held at Fairhope after Easter, when Miss Weed is expected as speaker.

St. James' Chapel is to be consecrated by Bishop McDowell May 25.

During Passion Week Messrs. Mercer and Hadley are scheduled to hold a mission in All Saint's Church, Mobile; and are being preceded by Mr. E. P. McNeill, Business Manager of Calvary Parish, Memphis, where a very successful mission has recently been held. Mr. McNeill is to prepare the way for the missionaries.

The Auxiliary of St. John's, Ensley, hold a Quiet Hour on the Feast of the Annunciation, under the conduct of the rector.

Personal Notes

On account of ill health the Rev. Malcolm Taylor, of St. James' Mission, Lydia, Greene County, Va., has been given leave of absence until such time as he may be able to recover his health. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Malcolm Taylor, care St. James' Mission, Lydia, Va.

The Rev. C. E. Buxton, for the past six years rector of Emmanuel Church and chaplain of the Boys' Home, Covington, Va., on April 1 assumed the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Greensboro, N. C. Mail should be addressed to him at No. 311 Blawie Avenue, Greensboro, N. C.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Blanchet will preach the baccalaureate sermon on Palm Sunday to the graduating class of the Senior High School, Zephyrhills, Florida, where he has for the past year been instructor of History, English and Civics. Dr. Blanchet has been asked to continue his services for another year at an advanced salary.

ORDINATIONS.

On the third Sunday in Lent, in the Church of the Holy Fellowship, Greenwood, S. D., Mr. David A. Swan, Indian, was ordered deacon by the Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, Suffragan Bishop of the District. The candidate was presented by the Rev. John Flockhart, Superintending Presbyter of the Yankton Mission. Archdeacon Ashley read the Litany and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Joseph Goodteacher of the Cheyenne Reservation. The Rev. Mr. Swan studied at Seabury for three years and will work in the Yankton Mission under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Flockhart.

On the fourth Sunday in Lent, March 30, 1924, at St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Wash., Olof Hanson, a deaf mute, was ordered deacon by the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, D. D., Bishop of Alaska, who, owing to the vacancy in the Episcopate of the Diocese of Olympia, is performing the Episcopal duties. The candidate was presented by the Rev. John D. McLaughlan, Ph. D., rector of the parish. The sermon was preached by the Rev. George F. Flick of Chicago, Ill., who is also a deaf mute, the rector reading the same sermon to the large congregation. The "silent children" of this section were all present.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Edward Turner Lawrence, D. D., for thirty years rector at St. Marks-on-the-Hill, Pikesville, Maryland, died March 19, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was compelled to give up the fine work he was doing there on account of his failing health. He spent the best part of the remainder of his life with his brother-in-law, Mr. Otway B. Zantlinger at Hyattsville, Maryland. He is survived by his wife, Susan Alexina Lawrence.

Dr. Lawrence was born in Baltimore, August 2, 1854. For many years he was examining Chaplain of Bishop Parrett and Bishop Murray, and was greatly interested in Hannah Moore Academy.

He was graduated from St. John's College, B. A., 1876 and M. A., 1904, D. D., 1908, and from the Virginia Seminary, 1884.

Collect for Sunday Next Before Easter.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who, of Thy tender love towards mankind, hast sent Thy Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ, to take upon Him our flesh, and to suffer death upon the cross, that all mankind should follow the example of His great humility; Mercifully grant, that we may both follow the example of His patience, and also be made partakers of His resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collects for Good Friday.

Almighty God, we beseech Thee graciously to hold this Thy family, for which Our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men and to suffer death upon the cross: Who now liveth and reigneth with Thee, and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, by Whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified; Receive our supplications and prayers, which we offer before Thee for all estates of men in Thy holy Church, that every member of the same in his vocation and ministry, may truly and godly serve Thee; through Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Merciful God, Who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made, nor desireth the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, infidels and heretics; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

"I See Again the Shadow of the Cross."

I see again the shadow of His Cross,

I hear once more His voice, the Pure, the True:

"Father forgive them—Love doth plead with Love—

"Forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

Lord of my life, I bless Thee for that prayer;

I bless Thee that Thou couldst forget Thy pain,

And in that hour supreme couldst love and care

That I Thy lost one be brought home again.

I see again the shadow of the Cross

On Calvary's height. My soul, come worship there!

Another voice the awful silence breaks:

The Penitent breathes out his deep heart-prayer:

"Remember me, my Lord; Thou art my Lord;

I sinful, dying, dare to cling to Thee; When Thou art to Thy throne and kingdom come Conquering and Saving One, remember me!"

Glad parting soul, you shall forever bless Your suffering on Cavalry, and His grace

That, by the Master's cross your cross should stand,

And you in that dread hour should see His Face,

And hear His Word of Power. Our King Divine

Gives from His cross the Life of Life to thee,—

"This day." He spoke these tender, gracious words:

"Thou, soul, shalt be in Paradise with me!"

O let me seek the shadow of Thy cross, Dear Resting Place! where Thou dost promise me

That I shall see Thy Face, my Risen Lord One day shall be in Paradise with Thee!

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Great Denunciations. II.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord denounced eight woes against the Scribes and Pharisees. They are: Religious exclusiveness, covetousness concealed by hypocrisy; intrigue in gaining converts, moral blindness justified by casuistry, disproportion, exalting good but unimportant minutiae above the chief things, punctilious ceremonial purity substituted for moral purity, and preserving the outward appearance of respectability, even when the removal of witnesses and prophets is necessary to maintain it. The eighth woe was for what they would do in the future—persecution of God's witnesses. This forecast was obvious, but its penalty is mysterious—the coming upon them of all righteous blood shed in the past. He turned from them, addressing the city at large and ending:

"Ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Immediately after this, the peroration of His great speech, Our Lord sat down in plain sight in the Temple. His statement, therefore, is not to be taken in the grossly literal sense. Not until after His ascension was Jerusalem deprived of Him. If taken literally, it means that He cannot return until the Jews, as a race, accept Him as Messiah. It has never been so taken in Christendom. We have applied to the last clause the same liberty of interpretation Our Lord applied to the first, and have held that, at His second coming, the Jews will acknowledge Him Messiah, whether the return or the acknowledgment come first.

The figure of the hen and chickens is perfect when used by Jehovah and grotesquely out of place when used by man; for it implies supreme love, supreme authority and continued existence through the whole history of Israel. It is, therefore, a tacit but unmistakable claim to Divinity. Israel might have accepted Christ as King and the fifth universal monarchy have been established then and there, with Messiah on the throne and Paradise come again. Predestinarians are accustomed to throw this off, since rejection was prophesied. The question of predestination crops up wherever we touch prophecy. The human race is absolutely free and, therefore, absolutely responsible. God observes our acts—observes as a spectator, without interfering. But, since time does not exist for Him, He observes future acts as well as past and present ones, and can report concerning future as well as past. If He tell what we did in the past we call the result History and feel no intellectual difficulty about free-will, because we also can report the past. If He tell what we did in the future, He being a non-interfering spectator, we call the result Prophecy. We cannot do the same thing ourselves; but God was a spectator in both and interferes with our free-will in neither.

But why was the generation of Scribes and Pharisees which Our Lord denounced sinful above other generations? Because they sinned against light. They are the only generation of religious leaders certainly known to have called Christ evil. Protestant has thundered against Papal corruption, since, and Pope against Protestant. The ancient heresies are so many one forgets their very names. But ancient heretic, mediaeval Greek and Roman and Protestant, modern unbeliever and modern mystic agree that Christ was good. His contemporary Scribes and Pharisees alone taught that He was the Devil. They had not seen the effect of Christ on human history. Yet they saw Our Lord face to face. They knew Him to be good. Therefore, among all sinners, they alone attained, as a class and generation unique sinfulness.

Shall that position be again attained and that fate again deserved? Suppose The Associated Press reports tomorrow the coming of One, apparently supernatural, claiming to be Christ and surrounded by ten thousand times ten thousand claiming to be His saints. Some would say, "Antichrist must come first. This is Antichrist." Others would say "Antichrist came and persecuted the Church for twelve hundred and sixty years. This is Christ." The line of cleavage would be along interpretation of prophecies now practically discredited. Protestants, we take it, would accept, as would Moslems and Jews. Roman Catholics would reject. Greeks and Anglicans would be divided. If the newcomer be not Antichrist, to rule for three years and a half, then the Church of Rome or its persecuting and dogma-making wing has been Antichrist for the mystic time times and a half time. Here is a source of religious confusion compared with which all that ever troubled Christendom is child's play. If the newcomer be really Christ, here is a generation of which the generation of Scribes and Pharisees who opposed Our Lord are but the first fruits.

Our Lord, speaking of this same attitude, once said, "Woe unto thee, Chorazin, woe unto thee, Bethsaida, For if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon they would a great while ago have repented." Gentiles, in place of Scribes and Pharisees, would have accepted Christ. Christ says men worshipping false gods would have repented. Men falsely worshipping the True God did not.

Chorazin, Bethsaida and Capernaum (which lay between them) were restrained from repenting by organized opposition of legitimate officials of the true Church. Men used the magnificent Church machinery to keep Israel from knowing the day of her visitation. Only one generation has had opportunity to do this, for there has been only one Messianic visitation. Should the Lord come again, would He be again opposed? God grant we misread human nature and the prophecies; but if we have not misread them He would be again opposed by legitimate officials of the true Church, who would call Him Antichrist, misusing the magnificent Church machinery to fight Him. The innocent blood shed since Our Lord's day has not come on any one generation—yet.

The Paschal Crescent Moon.

Oh! little golden crescent moon, hung low Upon the Western sky
Did once the dear Christ see you thus, and know
The days were slipping by?
Did thy new changed phase but serve to show
His time of pain was nigh?

Did thy two arms point upward as to-night
Up to the mercy-seat
Unto the realms of heavenly shining light
Where God should His Son greet
When time should make thy full round orb glow bright
And Christ's life here complete?

Oh! little moon which later was to shine
Upon the garden where
In noblest heights of sacrifice divine
The Saviour knelt in prayer!
To mark the paschal feast was task of thine
But oh—how did you dare?

It Is Finished.

Grace W. Harrison.

In our every-day world we see many beautiful beginnings. We see the delicate bud develop into the full and perfect rose. We see the tiny blade of wheat grow tall and develop the perfect grain. We see the baby in the cradle grow and develop a wonderful brain, and the little helpless hands perform works of skill.

And we feel within ourselves that we are reaching up to a higher and higher life. We know that the aspirations we feel were not given us in vain, that they are God-given, and so we read with hope and reverence the words of St. John: "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

There is a glorious hope for a future change for the better in every one who has a desire to see His face and be transformed into His image.

Hope, aspiration, is everywhere, and is written deep in our hearts. But there is one thing that is FINISHED, one thing that is complete. On the cross of Calvary it was declared complete by One who spake as never man spake, One who has never been explained, and never can be explained, so that finite man could understand Him, One before whom we stand in awe and perplexity, giving up all effort to explain and understand, saying only "Truly this is the Son of God." "It is finished" that is what He Himself said. Thank God one thing is finished now and forever to stand as the great completed work of Our Redeemer!

What matters it that we do not understand? The angels do not, so why should we? But though we do not understand, we can accept. A child can accept, for there are things that are hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes.

The One who has FINISHED the great work of redemption has offered it freely to us. Let Him that is athirst come. Nowhere else can we find the water of life and the bread of life.

"When He from His lofty throne
Stooped to do and die
Everything was fully done
'Tis Finished was His cry."

The Change of Opinion About Lent.

Rev. Thos. F. Opie.

Under the heading, "The Growing Observance of Lent," the March issue of the Homiletic Review, a non-denominational magazine for preachers, contains a significant article bearing on the season of Lent as it is now being observed more and more by non-liturgical churches. The historic churches have for hundreds of years observed this season, by special services, by fasting and prayer and by a quickening of the devotional life. It has been compared to the period in the Life of Christ, in which He was "led up by the Spirit into the wilderness"—where He "fasted forty days"—culminating in the queen of church festivals, the glorious season of Easter.

It is significant that the Reformational prejudice to this season on the part of the denominations is being gradually broken down and that the whole of Christendom is beginning to feel the need and the wholesome spiritual effects of the Lenten season.

In many communities all the churches are adopting the plan of having noon-day services during Lent, usually in some central meeting place, or theatre, with special prominent speakers. Also a great many communities are having joint evangelistic services in Lent, more especially during Holy Week, or the two weeks immediately prior to Easter—all the denominations holding services at the same time in their several churches. Where pastors and people can rise above small prejudices against Lent, the season is proving a great blessing to Christians of all names. What a pity that such prejudice should ever have stood in the way of the spiritual life of whole communities!

Says the Rev. F. L. Fagley, of New York, in the article above referred to (himself not a member of the liturgical churches):—"The Roman Catholic, the Episcopalian and the Lutheran program of Lent, while agreeing in the main, differ in detail. With these communions it may be said in general that Lent is a time of special retirement from the pleasures of the world, for more careful and frequent prayer and works of goodness and devotion, that men and women may be able to live more nearly the Christian life." Mr. Fagley then goes on to say further: "Among the non-liturgical churches Easter has usually been observed as a great event in the Church year—both Holy Week, Good Friday and Lent have been words which reminded Protestants too forcibly of Roman Catholic traditions, and for generations devout Christians have felt it part of their duty to withstand any appeal to consider the significance of these special days."

We know of at least one Church that prohibits the use of the word Easter in its Sunday-school literature—and as for observing Lent—the idea is anathema. But that feeling is gradually and inevitably breaking down, as indicated by Mr. Fagley and by certain signs of the times. "More and more, pastors and people are finding that there is a value in the Lenten season—that it can be observed in a Protestant way—and that one's feeling of freedom from ritual or tradition need be in no wise imperiled."

The writer goes on to enumerate ways in which individuals and congregations may observe the season and greatly benefit by a common, general regard for Lent:—Bible Reading, Meditation, Daily Prayer, Special Evangelistic Preaching, Definite Thought on What It Means to be a Christian, Pastor's Training Class (similar to confirmation class), Evangelistic Services, etc. "Where there is a community movement of this sort, pastors, either singly, or in groups, will have little trouble in securing congregations." Indeed, it may be said that many persons having no Lenten privileges in their own church, often repair to other churches for the refreshing spiritual atmosphere peculiar to the Lenten season. "If we are 'to know the power of His resurrection', we must also 'know the fellowship of His suffering'."

Every Child.

A child cried one night
Outside,
And I said, That is my child
But I found him to be another lad,
So I went back to my room and said,
There is nothing for me to do;
Now I can sleep.

The child cried again
And I went out and looked into his face
And said, Why this is my child!
And I brought him in
And gave him something to eat
And put him in a warm bed;
And I slept.

A child laughed
And I followed the sweet laughter
Out to a place called the Kingdom of God,
Where many children were.
The Lord of the Place asked me,
Which child did you help?
And I could not tell.

Refuge.

Bert Finck.

I believe that often pain and trouble are attempts of Satan to capture our souls; his hope is that we may lose our faith in God, and sinking into the arms of his high-priestess, Despair, be carried by her to his realms. There is only one way of protection from this fate: it is by clinging, the more we suffer, more closely to the Cross, and with the vision ever before us of Christ suffering upon it to save us, all hopes and aims of Satan will wither away.

Before His cross the lesson must be learned. Stand there until you are grateful through and through for such a love so marvellously shown. The suffering Saviour only knows, and through His wounds letting out His life into the starved lives of those who hold Him fast, that is the Gospel.—Phillips Brooks.

We See Thy Cross.

Mary B. Garvin.

Weary, forlorn, and tired of self,
We come to Thee, dear Lord, for help;
Knowing that Thou wilt comfort all
Who on Thy Name would humbly call.

Condemned by guilt our sin to own
Centrite we kneel, before Thy throne;
Assured that Thou wilt all forgive,
We see Thy cross—look up and live!

Some Palm Sunday Customs.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Palm Sunday is the last Sunday of the season of Lent and the beginning of Holy Week. In memory of Christ's entry into Jerusalem, when the people cut down branches from the trees and strewed them in Jesus' way, as He rode by, the Church teaches us to make this a solemn, blessed day. Palm trees are looked upon in some countries with great respect, because of this day. But in northern countries, where neither the palm nor the olive grow, following the custom of giving to the people branches of palm to take home after the service on Palm Sunday, any green boughs are used. The lesson is in the symbol mainly. For instance, in England the day used to be called Olive or Branch Sunday, Yew or Blossom Sunday, or the Sunday of the Willow Boughs. Long ago in Rome, the Emperor used to distribute palms and presents. In France and Germany the Cross in the center of the churchyard was surrounded by green boughs and flowers. In the southern countries of Europe flowers were tied with the olive boughs. Palms mean victory over death; olive signifies the grace that heals the soul.

Palms are associated with martyrs who won the victory over the flesh and the world. In some churches there is a procession after the giving of the palms when these are carried in triumph: the procession is in memory of Christ's entrance into Jerusalem, and a hymn of victory is sung. When the procession has passed outside, the door is closed: It's reopening signifies that the gates of Heaven were opened to us by Christ Who by dying on the Cross redeemed us.

Palm trees are sometimes a hundred feet high, tall and straight, with no branches, only enormous leaves which often exceed in length the height of a man. These giants of warm countries, these blessings to humanity, are among the most beautiful and wonderful things in the plant world. There are many kinds of palms, bearing many different fruits, and so many and varied are the uses that the praise of the palm is told in song and story. Dates and coconuts are the fruits of different species of palm. Children of northern states of the United States sometimes see the stunted palm from the greenhouse or the palm leaves, as yet unopened, that are distributed on Palm Sunday. But in the lands where palms are native they furnish food, shelter, clothing, medicine, sails for ships, couches, baskets and brushes.

"The palm is a gift divine
Wherein all uses of man combine;
Food and raiment and corn and wine."

So straight and lofty the palm grew, with its leaves spreading out like the rays of the sun, the natural light, that it became an emblem of the Divine Light. So in olden times in the holy place, the sanctuary, palm trees were engraved on walls and doors.

Conquerors carried palms after a victory to show their triumph. Christians, in bearing palms, mean to reverence God Who sends success and prosperity, and to carry on their thought to the Divine Light that conquered sin and death.

Which Was Colonel Brooks?

In a big, sunny barn chamber stood a basket filled with hay. In this soft nest a proud mother-cat was purring her four babies off to sleep.

One was Maltese, with sky-blue eyes. Two were black and white. But one was black all over—not a white mark to his foot nor even a white necktie under the dear little chin. He was the one I chose.

I named him Colonel Brooks. A pretty big name for a kitty baby, wasn't it?

Well, he was a darling from the very start. He loved and trusted everybody. You should have seen him step up to our big dog Rufus, without a sign of fear, coaxing him to be friendly with the sweetest of love-making.

And old Rufus, who up to that time had hated the very sight of a cat, fell in love with the little colonel on the spot.

Colonel Brooks had never slept by himself, so he would have been very homesick if Rufus had not shared his bed with him. Uncle Will made it his business to see that they went to bed early.

But one night, when Uncle Will was very late in coming home, he found a black kitty on the front doorstep, crying to get in. He supposed, of course, it was Colonel Brooks. So he picked him up, put him on the cellar stairs, and told him to go straight down to bed.

Then Uncle Will seated himself to read the evening paper. But no sooner was he settled in the easy-chair than a black kitty, for all the world like the colonel, jumped into his lap, purring like a small steam-engine.

"Is this you, Colonel Brooks?" cried Uncle Will. "Didn't I just put you down in the cellar? How did you get up here?"

Uncle Will hardly could believe his own eyes.

So he took the cat under his arm, and went down the cellar stairs to have this strange matter explained.

But, when Uncle Will reached the foot of the stairs, the queerest thing happened.

Another black cat came out to meet him!

And, what was the most puzzling of all, the cat on the cellar floor was just like the cat in Uncle Will's arm, and the cat in Uncle Will's arm was just like the cat on the cellar floor.

Not a white hair on either of them, and just the same size! Oh, dear me! How was Uncle Will ever to know which was his own dear kitty?

Just then a snore came from the box where Rufus lay asleep.

"Oho," cried Uncle Will, "I'll take both cats over to Rufus. He'll know which is Colonel Brooks inside of two minutes."

Inside of two minutes! I should say so! In just one tail-wag, Rufus knew what to do. He gave a growl that sounded like a small clap of thunder.

And, lo and behold! the kitty under Uncle Will's right arm, leaped to the top of the woodpile, hissing with anger and fright.

But the little black kitty under Uncle Will's other arm gave a spring straight into the heart of Rufus' warm bed, and began to rub noses with his big friend.

Then Uncle Will knew that this one was Colonel Brooks. But, if it hadn't been for that wise old Rufus, he might never have found out to this very day.

II.

It was a large umbrella, and a very little girl,

The naughty March wind told the rain, that fell like gleaming pearl;

"Now, watch, I'm going to steal a look in yonder youngster's face,

And if he wears a smile, why I'll moderate my pace.

I'll blow so soft and gently—but if it brella inside out."

Why I promise you I'll turn that old umbrella inside out.

The anxious raindrops slanted fast, the wind blew cold and raw,

It tipped the big umbrella back and this is what it saw,

A laughing happy little face, blue eyes, a golden curl,

In the middle of the forehead of that jolly little girl!

(The rain it stopped, the wind died down, the sunbeams all came out,

But, oh, what might have happened if that wind had seen a pout!)

A Sunshine Party.

"What would you like the very best for your birthday?" Mamma Brown asked. She was rolling out cookies in the kitchen Saturday morning, and Lulu was helping by sticking a nice plump raisin in the center of each cookie before the pans went into the oven. "You are quite a big girl now—seven next week—and I think you may choose what you would like, only remember that father's purse doesn't have a big roll of bills in it, little girlie."

Lulu looked very grave. To choose a birthday present all herself was very important, and she must think! There was a doll's bed—how she would like that, with little sheets, and pillowcases with ruffles, like those Jean Benson had who lived next door. What did mother think about that? Then she wished she had some red beads to wear on Sundays with her white dress, and—oh, ever so many things! It was hard to choose.

"I was wondering," Mother said as she brought out a pan of golden-brown cookies, "if you wouldn't rather have a party than anything else. That makes so many people happy, while a present only makes one person happy."

Lulu bit into the cookie that Mother handed her, and her eyes began to sparkle.

"Oh, that is lovely, Mommy!" she cried. "Let's see, I'll invite Elsie and Marion, and Tommy and—and—"

"How about Nan White?" asked Mother.

"But she's so little," said Lulu, "and she never has any pretty dresses to wear to a party."

"That's just why I want you to ask her. I don't believe she ever went to a real party. Mother knows a way to make her look pretty, so don't worry about that. We want this to be Jesus' kind of a party—inviting the folks who don't have good times, you know."

A week is a long time to wait, and yet there were so many things for Mother to do that it fairly flew; and Lulu had to carry around her invitations—"two of them were for the Jesus kind of people," she said, and dress her dolls all freshly and have her games in order and it was a busy week, for her, too.

But it was the very loveliest party—"a sunshine one," Mother said, because every one tried to make every one else happy, and there wasn't a frown or a pout all that afternoon. They played "Blind Man's Bluff," and "Button, Button," and "Spin the Platter," and ever so many games, and mother's sandwiches and cakes and ice-cream finished off a beautiful afternoon.

"I hope you'll have a party next year," said little Nan as she skipped away, and Lulu looked at mother and smiled.—Apples of Gold.

A Lesson in Obedience.

Tony and Toy were great friends, although Tony was a wonderful hound, able to "tree" coons when other dogs were helpless to find them, and Toy was a little black puppy, fit only for a pet, and without a thought of being either useful or obedient.

Every time Robert, his master, and Tony went hunting, Toy would manage in some way to follow. Once he chewed in two the rope that held him. Once he went through a screen door that was locked, and several times he escaped from a room when the door was opened for only a moment, and every time he had to be carried over logs and through brush, for when Toy got tired he whined so terribly that all game fled.

One night when Robert and his companions were ready to start on a grand hunt, Toy was taken to the stable and shut in a little room, where they were sure he would have to stay.

"There's not a thing there to hurt him," explained Robert, "and if whining is any comfort to him, let him whine."

For awhile Toy was quiet; then a howl from Tony on the opposite hill, and the boys' wild yells aroused rebellion in his heart. He would not be made a prisoner.

Suddenly he remembered a window in the little room. He discovered that the board that was hung by straps at the upper side of the opening was not fastened securely at the bottom, thus making it possible for him to squeeze through. Poking his black nose through the crack at the bottom, he pushed back the board and jumped out.

"Clap!" came the board, right on the little dog's tail, and held him fast, head downward, three feet from the ground. Oh, how he howled! Mother heard him; father heard him; and even Robert, out in the big woods, heard him, but they all thought he was howling only to break the monotony of imprisonment.

When Robert went to the stable to quiet him before trying to sleep, he discovered the sad predicament of his pet, and freed him.

After that when Robert went hunting, all he had to do to insure Toy's staying at home was to point to the stable. The puppy would lie down without a whimper, and not attempt to follow, and very soon he became known as the most obedient dog in the neighborhood.—Presbyterian Banner.

Why Shep Stayed At Home.

When Mrs. Wilkins came out her front door, she looked very tired; but she patted Shep on the head—for she was always kind to him. "Shep, I wish you could go to town for me. I've been working harder than usual today, and I'd like to lie down and rest for the remainder of the afternoon. But the children must start to school next week, and I just must buy some hats and shoes for them before the stores close today."

Shep barked as if to say that he knew perfectly well how tired his mistress was and that he would be very glad to go to town for her if he could only tell the merchants what he wanted. Mrs. Wilkins smiled her appreciation of Shep, and sat down on the lowest step of her porch to rest a moment before starting out.

When she arose to go, after her short rest, Shep yawned and arose, too. As Mrs. Wilkins moved off down the walk toward the street, however, Shep became very nervous and began to bark with all his might. Then he ran toward her, barking all the time.

"Hush, Shep, and be a good dog. And if you are a good dog," his mistress added, "I'll see to it that you get a nice bone with meat on it for supper." So off she went to town, thinking but little of Shep's frantic bark and feeling that perhaps the neighbors would have a right to complain about the noise he was making.

After she had gone, Shep became more quiet and went over to the lowest step, where Mrs. Wilkins had been sitting, to have a seat on the grass close by. There, with watchful eye he sat, as if glued to the spot. If a cat came along, he pricked up his ears attentively; if a chicken came close, he sniffed his nose appreciatively. But never once did he move from his seat on the grass, near the lowest step.

It must have been an hour before Shep finally moved. That was when Mrs. Wilkins at last appeared on the side-walk in front of the house. She seemed rather excited; but she did not appear more so than Shep, for he began again to bark at her, his black eyes full of interest, as if he knew something of great importance to her.

"Oh, Shep," Mrs. Wilkins began, "do you know that when I reached the store I couldn't find my pocket-book? I had fifty dollars in that pocket-book, too, and I can't imagine—" But just then she had come up close enough to the steps to see something that made her shout: "Why, Shep! To think that I left my pocket-book here on the step when I sat down to rest! Well, that's what comes of being very tired after a long morning's work, doesn't it? And did you stay here all the time that people were passing, to see to it that nobody got your mistress' money?"

Mrs. Wilkins gave Shep a pat and a hug; then, just before she took her pocket-book to go into the house, she concluded: "Shep, when the man brings out the children's things, there'll be a big bone along with them—a bone with meat on it—for you. I stopped at the butcher's, too. I'm very glad to have ordered it for you, Shep, because I really believe you deserve it!" As she left, Shep wagged his tail violently and gave several short barks of happiness.

The world in which we live is an orderly world, except when men create disorder. The seasons are ordered and regular. The works of nature are orderly. Rain and sunshine, seed-time and harvest; like begetting like and no mixing of species; continent and ocean each keeping its place and its home for those that dwell there; on every hand evidences of order that not only suggest but prove a plan at work—Rev. R. F. Galbreath.

There are in history many heroes conspicuous enough; but most of the real heroes of the Church of God are found in humble homes where men and women and children meet and discharge daily duties, adjust daily difficulties, do the humdrum work, lead the humdrum lives of diligent conscientious people.—Dr. J. H. Eccleston.

Will the Year 1924 Bring the End of the Present Age?

"How long shall it be to the end?"
(Dan. 12:6.)

2500 years ago this question was first asked. It was then answered by four periods, but their meaning was "sealed till the time of the end" when it was promised "the wise shall understand." The time has come! The time-lock has been opened by the discovery that all four periods culminate in a single year—1924!

All interested in prophetic study should secure a copy of the booklet "How Long to the End?" which explains in detail the Four Periods and the method of determining that the mystery attached to them is now disclosed or "finished" (Rev. 10:7).

Price, 35 cents, or 3 for $1.00. No stamps.

Obituaries

Ferrett: MISS MARY WRAY FERRETT died on March 25, 1924, at the home of her sister, Mrs. John C. Hunter, Vienna, Va., after many months of suffering. "He giveth His beloved rest."

REV. WILLIAM DUDLEY POWERS, D. D.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call home to his eternal reward, in the early morning hours of March 24, 1924, REV. WILLIAM DUDLEY POWERS, D. D., able and beloved teacher of the Men's Bible Class; and

Whereas, he was a man who, by his sterling character, scholarly attainments and ability to impart his great knowledge of the Holy Scriptures to others, endeared himself not only to the members of this class, but to a wide circle of devoted friends; and

Whereas, none labored more zealously than he for the welfare and progress of our Bible class, though oftentimes on occasions that must have been most trying upon him physically; therefore be it

Resolved, first, that in the death of Dr. Powers the Men's Bible Class of the Church of the Ascension has lost a most loyal and efficient teacher, and the entire class personnel a valued friend, the memory of whom time cannot soon efface.

Resolved, second, that we extend to the bereaved family and all those that mourn with them our sincerest sympathy and earnest prayers. May God's everlasting arm of love and compassion sustain them in this hour.

Resolved, third, that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the class, that a copy be sent to the bereaved family and that they be published in the News Leader and the Southern Churchman. MEN'S BIBLE CLASS OF THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION (HIGHLAND PARK), RICHMOND, VA.

Romancing.

"I saw a great black cat chasing a mouse. The mouse was as big as Fido 'nd the cat was as big as an auto, 'nd she had great big eyes just like the lights on the auto 'nd—"

"Harry!" exclaimed his mother in a shocked, reproving tone as she came out on the porch where her boy was entertaining two smaller children, "What are you saying? Come here to me. Why will you tell what isn't true? Haven't I told you how wicked it is? What shall I do with you?"

"When I was at Aunt Edith's," Bertha was saying to her little playmate, "I saw a doll that could walk and talk and eat just like anybody. I left a box of candy on the table near her and she ate it all up."

Bertha's mother, standing at the window, heard her and was troubled, but when the child came in answer to her call she only said, "Please go up stairs and get Mother's knitting."

Many a mother has been puzzled regarding the attitude she ought to take when the little son or daughter insists on telling original stories for facts. No one can solve this problem for her. No one can outline a definite course and be sure that it will prove to be the best always; individual cases differ so greatly. Nevertheless, perplexities of this sort are often much simplified by considering the underlying causes.

The little child has had comparatively few experiences, and for this reason each one is very vivid in his consciousness. He lives them over and over. This is not the result of any effort on his part, the mind acts spontaneously. Stories are enjoyed because they minister to this mental activity, and, to the younger children, most satisfying of all are those in which there is an atmosphere of freedom from material limitations. The environment pictured in the story becomes very real. The narrative seems like an experience and like an experience is lived over again and again. Is it strange if the story sometimes varies, the hero or heroine changes and this day-dream is woven into the autobiography that the child likes so well to tell?

The situation calls for imagination on the part of the one who is to deal with it. A little sympathetic understanding will admit one to the child's confidence. It is necessary to be there in order to be of service. That it really is difficult for some children to distinguish between what they imagine and that which actually occurs, is well substantiated. Fortunately there are men and women who have not forgotten the days when "Jack and the Bean Stalk" was real to them. Some can even remember how they themselves, in imagination, quite-outdid Jack's exploits.

Little by little this vagueness of distinction between what is really done and what is merely thought of disappears, and the former stands out with clean-cut outline. At this time a reaction may take place against the fairy story. This is to be regretted, especially if it be the outcome of a feeling, on the child's part, that he has been deceived. The plea for a true story is quite often the outcry of disillusionment. The child should be protected from such experiences. If told from the beginning that the fairy story is a make-believe it will lose nothing of its first charm, and his pleasure in it will be prolonged. And what is even better, this method will help him to classify his own stories. If the parent uses tact the child will quite enjoy applying the term "make-believe" to his romancing.—Florence J. Owens.

Pussy Willow.

Fuzzy Pussy-willow wakened
From her winter nap,
For the frolic Spring Breeze
On her door would tap.

"It is chilly weather,
Though the sun feels good.
I will wrap up warmly,
Wear my furry hood."

Mistress Pussy-willow
Opened wide her door.
Never had the sunshine
Seemed so bright before.

Never had the brooklet
Seemed so full of cheer.
"Good morning, Pussy-willow;
Welcome to you, dear!"

SIMON THE CYRENE.

ministered unto but to minister. Shall we not begin to regard the opportunities of our lives with different eyes? And if, after the lesson has been learned, God, as so often happens, takes the old disabilities away, shall we not always thankfully look back to those fruitful years of privation, when we stood face to face with Him? Will not a man be a greater and more helpful preacher, a wiser and tenderer physician, a profounder writer, for that glance into the solemn heart of things which we gain only through suffering?

"Who ne'er his bread in sorrow ate,
Who ne'er the lonely midnight hours
Weeping, upon his bed has sate,
He knows you not, ye heavenly powers."

Oscar Wilde tells us that his mother brought him these sacred lines of Goethe's, translated by Thomas Carlyle and written in a book by Carlyle's own hand, and she asked him to consider them. Wilde replied that he saw nothing in them at all, and that it was his intention to walk through life on the sunny side of the street. "To learn that lesson," said the crushed and broken man, later in life, "I had to go to prison, but it was worth going to prison to learn it."

Or consider the lot of a woman, obliged to abdicate her beautiful throne by reason of a permanent illness. She is forced to deny herself the society of friends. One by one she must relinquish her old sweet labors of love. In all the rich and varied organ-play of human life, only one key is left for her, that over which is written in black letters, Renunciation. Ah! but that is a key which requires a master hand, and which can form masters; a keynote of a depth and sweetness no other can attain. Our friend begins to be like Christ, and to regard the cross as her vocation, and in place of her old ministries a new and more wonderful ministry is given her. Have we never known a home sanctified and blest by the cheerful light shed from the chamber of such a patient sufferer? So it happens that this invalid is able to strengthen others more robust than herself, that she, though cast down, continues to be the stay and support of those who stand erect, that this sufferer is ever the best and tenderest of consolers. In no earthly experiences do we draw nearer Christ than in our sufferings. To see His life cut short when it had just begun, to plant His feet resolutely in the way of death, to make His supreme submission to the will of God, is not this the one perfect example of obedience and courage? Can any of us say: "Lord, Thou hast laid on me more than Thou didst bear Thyself?" He might have complained, but that would be to murmur, not to sacrifice Himself. He might have recanted and avoided the cross, but that would be to deny His divine vocation. That cross indeed was His throne. Those outstretched arms have embraced this world. "A thousand times greater, a thousand times more beloved in death than in life; to tear this scene from the memory of man would be to rend this earth to its foundation." (Renan.)

The world cannot be saved without the cross. No noble life has ever been led without sacrifice and suffering. While we are all clamoring for happiness, for pleasure, luxury, self-expression, the sublime and perfect sacrifice of Christ puts us to shame. We cannot enter into His sufferings while shrinking from every form of suffering ourselves. From this unknown man, from this Simon of Cyrene, we may learn the privilege of bearing the cross for Christ who hung upon the cross for us.

April 20, 1924—Easter Day.

Hymn: "The Day of Resurrection."

Bible Reading: St. Luke 24:1-12.

Prayer: O God, give us joyful and understanding hearts to gratefully receive the Easter message, that after serving Him faithfully here our spirits may rise at the great Resurrection, and with Him continually dwell; through Jesus Christ, Our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

Papers:

1. The Easter Story in your own words.
2. The Lessons of the Resurrection.
 - (a) Unfounded anxiety—Who will roll away the stone?

(b) The Power of Unconscious Influence.—"Then went in also that other disciple."

(c) The Gospel in the Gospel.—"Come and see." "Go and tell."

3. The Power of His Resurrection—

(a) The risen Christ.

(b) The risen Life.—"If ye then be risen with Christ."

Easter Carols.

Discussion: The Witness of the Resurrection—"Ye shall be my witnesses."

Recitation of Nicene Creed.

Sentence-Prayers.

Hymns: "Fling out the Banner" and "Come ye Faithful, Raise the Strain."

Benediction.

Never guest was quainter;
Pussy comes to town
In a hood of silver gray
And a coat of brown.

Happy little children
Cry with laugh and shout,
"Spring is coming, coming;
Pussy-willow's out!"
—Kate L. Brown.

Let's Suppose.

Let's suppose that I came to see you one morning and brought you a box of lovely taffy candy. Then, let's suppose that you didn't even say, "Thank you" to me but just went on and ate up the candy without a word.

Then, let's suppose that I came back the next day and brought you a beautiful book to read. Let's suppose that the book had lovely pictures and wonderful stories in it, and that you took it without a single word of thanks.

Then suppose I came back the next morning and brought you a splendid toy to play with, and that you took that, too, and didn't once say "Thank you." Don't you suppose that I would get tired of bringing you presents and that I wouldn't come back many more mornings?

Did you ever stop to think what a beautiful gift God sends to you every morning when He sends you a new day? Do you remember to tell your heavenly Father "Thank you" for this beautiful gift? Don't you suppose that it would please Him very much if you did remember to kneel by your bed every night and thank Him for His gift to you?—Exchange.

Daddy and Laddie.

Oh, the world is filled with daddies—
Not a place but has its share;
And they're loved by the little laddies,
Here and there and everywhere;
And each little laddie's daddy
Thinks him better than the rest,
And each daddy's little laddie
Loves his own dear daddy best.

Dear Southern Churchman Reader:

The Tenth Anniversary of The Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, held at St. Thomas' Protestant Episcopal Church in New York City, is reported in the Anniversary Number of the Society's organ.

The People, The Land, and The Book.

Besides this there are several timely and valuable articles by Mr. B. A. M. Schapiro, The Managing Director of the Society, under the titles, "The Doctrine of the Incarnation in the Old Testament," "The Meaning of the Word Almoh" (Virgin), "The Genealogy of Jesus," and "What the Rabbis Have to Say on the 53rd of Isaiah."

This is a double number containing 128 pages, and like the other publications of the Society, is free, upon mentioning Southern Churchman. Other publications just issued: "The Sure Word of Prophecy," and "The Messiah According to the Old and New Testaments."

FROM BISHOP GAILOR

My dear Mr. Schapiro:

I have read your interesting and convincing article on the doctrine of the Incarnation in the Old Testament, and have especially enjoyed your scholarly interpretation of the meaning of "Almoh."

Thank you very much for letting me see the proofs, which I enclose and I am Very sincerely yours,

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Christendom is Christ writ large."

The sum and substance of every prayer should be the will of God.

Nine people out of ten are better than we give them credit for being.

We who look for Jesus ought to be joyful. It is no credit to Our Lord when we look as though we were seeking His grave.

Evil may give wild, temporary, feverish joy; but peace and comfort it can never give, for they come directly from Heaven.

Angels and devils are always fighting for our souls; day after day, while we are on earth, the battle within us continues.

Christ demonstrated immortality by the great proof and seal of His Resurrection from the dead.—J. H. Snowden.

"Through the depths of sin and loss,
Drop the plummet of the Cross;
Never yet abyss was found
Deeper than the Cross can sound."

The love of Christ is the Church's drawing power. When that once burns in the breast of the Christian, it will give him no rest until he sees it kindled in the hearts of others.

Deny the Resurrection, and you rob Christianity of the great pillar upon which it rests. Believe it, and all else about the life of Christ becomes plain, and faith has a safe and sure anchorage.

Heavenly Father, to all Thy many gifts to us, add, we pray Thee, the honest desire, in Thy spirit, to pay to the utmost our debt to life, and so enable us ever to do the thing that pleases Thee!—Wilfred T. Grenfell.

"Come, see the place where the Lord lay"—this is the Easter doctrine, the Creed of the Resurrection, the faith of the Christian Church. "And go quickly and tell His disciples"—there you have the Easter duty, the resurrection obligation, the compelling missionary motive to sacrificial service.—Selected.

When the heart has been brought into that state when it can, with happy confiding trust, look up and say, "Father, not my will, but Thine be done," then will relief come. The thorn, indeed, may not be extracted, the cup may not be removed, but there will appear the strengthening angel from Heaven enabling us to bear it.—F. Whitfield.

Every line and every word of the six appearances of Christ that are described are precious jewels in the golden setting of the Resurrection Story. They seem thrown together without the least thought of making them a single and complete whole, and yet they give a more satisfying and harmonious picture of what transpired than if an attempt had been made to classify and arrange and reduce to fixed method, as historians are wont to do, the salient facts in that wonderful history.—Selected.

I do hear
From the revolving year
A voice which cries:
"All dies;
Lo, how all dies! O seer,
And all things too arise:
All dies, and all is born;
But each resurgent morn, behold, more near the Perfect Morn."
—Francis Thompson.

Dressed in her tender green,
I viewed the sweet Earth lying,
When smote my heart the cry,
"But living leads to dying."

Then came a trumpet call,
Through hill and dale replying,
"Through life lead on to Death,
We come to Life, through dying."
—E. D. Ward.

"No man taketh my life from Me." All Christ's teaching depended upon that vindication. He had made great claims. All depended upon His ability to verify His claims. For two days those claims were silenced. Then He appeared to claim His right to be the Son of God. The Resurrection justified Him. He was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the resurrection from the dead.—Dr. H. T. Kerr.

THE GOSPEL OF EASTER

We shall be thinking on Easter Day of the triumph of the Cross. He Who was despised and rejected of men is lifted up on Easter as the hope of the world's salvation. It was through Gethsemane and over the brow of the dark and tragic hill that Christ went His way to triumph. His victory is the eternal symbol of the victory of that which is unseen over the brutal weight of the near and obvious, the victory of the quietness of God over the tumult of the world's rejection.

It is hard for us to learn that lesson—hard to believe in the truth in which Christ lived and died and lived again. We are often dismayed by the contrary appearances of our world. We despair of accomplishing anything if the material odds seem against us. We trust in the might of money. We want the weight of the world's wisdom on our side. We think we must have what we call the practical judgment, and the popular approval, and all the obvious favouring chances on the side of any movement which we commit ourselves to, before we may be very confident of its success. As Studdert-Kennedy wrote in his "I Believe,"

"We try to protect God's dignity as though, like the dignity of kings, it depended ultimately on the possession of force wherewith to drive men to His Will, as if God were a despot . . . We exalt the mighty to their seats, and put down the humble and meek . . . We are willing to respect Love, provided it has Force behind it . . . Pure Love is still despised and rejected of men. It saves others and cannot save itself, and that to us is pure weakness. We are still ashamed of the Cross, and the reckless humility of God.

"Our idea of power is not God's idea of power revealed in Christ. . . because our purpose is not God's purpose . . . For God's purpose, which is the Creation of Man, the human family or unity, there is, and can be, only one Power, and that is Love . . . A unity of human beings is an imperfect unity just so far as it is based upon force and fear . . . Our armaments are symbols, not of our power, but of our weakness. The great powers are the great weaknesses of our world."

"The great powers are the great weaknesses of our world." In how many ways that may be true! Churches die sometimes because of the very means which are supposed to assure their unquestioned life. They pile up great endowments, but they do not win the living generation. They gain social prestige, but they do not serve the needs nor win the hearts of the multitude. They pride themselves upon the tradition of the past, vehemently maintain old formulas of thought and practice, and forget that in every new generation the Church, like its Master, divesting itself of any privilege, must stoop, as He did in the upper room, to serve. We suppose also that the nation can be great by manipulating its own advantage. We think that it can ultimately become rich and remain rich by tariff preferences and shrewd machinery of commerce. We forget that the only ultimate triumph belongs to those forces of consecration which through great sacrifice must attain their victory not over the bodies, but over the spirit of our race.

Easter Day brings us back to the sweet and vital certainty. It helps us to trust again in the unarmed power of goodness. It makes us know that in spite of any momentary appearance to the contrary, no pure act of goodness is ever lost. Let men stand in some measure of Christ's likeness for truth and right, and the contribution which they make to the ennobling of their generation will have its Easter Day of vindication. Let any great leader in the nation stand for the far ideals of responsible service, and though he and that for which he stands seem to go down into defeat, his cause also shall have the Easter of its resurrection. For no impulse whatsoever that is conceived according to the grace of God, is Calvary the last word; Easter is the immortal witness that the quiet power of goodness shall at last ascend its throne.

EASTER---AND AFTER

In our observance of the forty days of Lent we sometimes forget that other forty-day season of the Church which runs from Easter to Ascension. Beginning with Ash-Wednesday, we decide what sacrifice shall be made in our social life or personal habits from that day until Easter. Special daily services are arranged for in our churches, and we plan a course of social and physical abstinence and spiritual exhortation. We pass through the deep shadows of Holy Week with their poignant memories, and come to the joyous heights of Easter—and then what?!

Are we not in many instances apt to suffer a religious relapse that may drop us back below the level from which we started on Ash-Wednesday? If, however, we will recognize the importance of the forty days of the Resurrection ministry, the commemoration of which, the Church is about to begin, we shall find therein an uplifting power that is as strong as the observance of the Lenten season, if it is properly used.

In the place of the desert and the temptations we have the Resurrection appearances, and the messages of love and inspiration as the background for our meditations.

First comes the word of the angel to tell His disciples and Peter, showing that through the agony of the Cross, and the departure to the spiritual world our dear Lord had not forgotten the agony and mortification that was surely breaking the heart of the denying disciple. Then the message through Mary Magdalene "to my brethren" to "say unto them, I ascend unto My Father and your Father; and to My God and your God"; thereby lifting us to the plane of brotherhood with Himself and sonship to the Father.

These two are merely suggestive of the hidden beauties, and glorious prospects that Our Lord manifested each time that He appeared during these wonderful forty days, the anniversary of which we are about to enter.

THE MORAL BASIS OF GOVERNMENT

The conference which was held in Washington the first week in April for representatives of the colleges and universities in support of the Eighteenth Amendment, seems to have rallied a new element of strength to the forces which make not only for sobriety, but for the fundamental spirit of obedience to law in America. That there is imperative need for the strengthening of this spirit, every glance at the daily newspapers reveals. We are still suffering from that profound dislocation of the orderly processes of mind and spirit which the war produced. It was not possible to incite millions of people to organized hatred and combat for four years, without unleashing in the spirits of men old barbarous instincts which are not easily chained again. The forces of education and of social control have not kept pace with the destructive and savage passions always latent in human nature, but brought newly to the surface by the events of the last decade. Consequently in cities and towns which are supposed to be civilized there is a riot of brigandage and murder. The integrity of government is at stake. In the face of the crime in American cities and in the face of the deep revolutionary disturbances brewing in Europe, with the overturn in country after country of any semblance of popular legislation and the setting up of dictatorships, sometimes of the proletariat and sometimes of the militarists, the question actually presents itself as to whether democratic government has within itself strength and authority sufficient to endure.

It is time we faced the real issue. It is not a question as to whether men and women happen to approve of the prohibition of liquor or not. It is not a question as to whether they personally like and would vote for the law as embodied in the eighteenth amendment. It is the question of whether or not they believe in law itself and whether they deliberately wish to associate themselves, as many are at this moment actually doing, with the gunmen, the murderers, and other anarchists of the under world, to tear down the fabric of an ordered civilization. The man who connives with the bootlegger, who, by bribery, corruption, and violence if need be, will bring him in defiance of the law, the liquor which he wants, has as a citizen no standing ground of moral superiority from which he can speak a word of condemnation to the bank robbers, or the cocaine sellers, who, in grosser fashion, are simply following out his example of flouting any control of society which they happen to dislike.

Among the addresses delivered at the Conference of the College and University Students, there was one by Miss Esther McDonald, of Columbia University, which may help to make clear the fact that the prohibition regime, even with its very imperfect enforcement, has brought a genuine human benefit. There is a group of the socially privileged, which, though very noisy and confident in its own views, is numerically a very feeble minority, who imagine that because in their set they see very little of prohibition except defiance of it, therefore it has meant nothing in the life of the people at large. Miss McDonald spent last summer in a factory and this is the opinion she has gleaned as to the attitude of industrial women toward prohibition:

"As a factory girl this summer I was interested in gleaning the opinion of my fellow-workers concerning the Eighteenth Amendment. Some of the men-folks of my industrial girl friends seemed to resent prohibition, feeling that it made a further class distinction, because the wealthy man found it easy to purchase immunity from any observance of that particular part of the Constitution. But the women workers, almost without exception, were for it, because they found that to them it had given a degree of freedom they had never known before. They could now pretty much be free from that horrible anxiety that had always been associated in their minds with the corner saloon.

"Most of them are pretty sure now that their husbands or fathers will bring their pay envelopes home without any serious dent in them—something they have always had reason to doubt before. And so, for the industrial woman, I found the Eighteenth Amendment means freedom, and since they love freedom as much as their college or society sisters they are not apt to want to give it up.

"There are many facts that the modern woman takes into account in exercising her choice of conduct. She recognizes that all the facts show that those who drink even moderately do not have as fair a chance for a long and vigorous life as those who never use alcoholic beverages.

"She knows that it is decidedly undesirable for us to get to be a nation of law-breakers. She knows that other countries are watching us to see whether the greatest republic in the world can enforce its own organic law. She does not recognize the argument that 'the law is not being obeyed, therefore we must repeal it', for she is intelligent enough to know that many of the finest laws we have have involved a great deal of difficulty with the enforcing of them after they were first passed.

"In the amendment against slavery, the Interstate Commerce Act, the Pure Food and Drugs Act, and many others, in the obstacles encountered for many years in their enforcement, with their triumph now, she sees the power of law eventually to change people's habits. Mothers of children are not discouraged because every one does not obey the law immediately. They would not dream of repealing it just on that score. But they also know that the harder the insistence on obedience the sooner the desired reaction will come to take place habitually.

"Mothers may possibly be willing to do some things themselves which they should be most unwilling to have their daughters or sons do. A mother who breaks the Eighteenth Amendment loses a great deal of her right to demand from her children any obedience to commands or conformance to standards."

RISEN

When in the starry gloom
They sought the Lord Christ's time,
Two angels stood in sight,
All dressed in dazzling white,
Who unto the woman said,
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

O ye of this latter day,
Who journey the selfsame way
Through morning's twilight gloom
Back to the shadowy tomb;
To you, as to them, was it said,
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

The Lord is risen indeed,
He is here for your love, for your need—
Not in the grave, or the sky,
But here where men live and die
And true the word that was said,
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

Wherever are tears and sighs,
Wherever are children's eyes,
Where man calls man his brother,
And loves as himself another,
Christ lives! The angels said,
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

—Richard Watson Gilder.

EASTER RAIN.

By Margaret Prescott Montague.

I think the sap of every spray
Leaps to a hidden tune today,
Bursting in music green and gay;
For love is falling in the rain,
Drenching the world to life again,
Splashing through the April air
Resurrection everywhere.

Oh, Magic of the humble shower!
Cup-bearer to the smallest flower!
Stooping to pour the gift divine
In living streams of dewy wine
Where honeysuckles leap and twine!
Holding the cup to thirsty leaves
Of hawthorne bush and dogwood trees,
While little birds in every lane
Sing, "Love is falling in the rain!"

O, Mystery, to bend so low
That in a raindrop you might go!
O, Love, so intimate and small,
The breath, the bloom, the gift of all!
The Very Heart of every heart,
The end, the middle, and the start,
Above, below, within, without—
O, April blossoms, laugh and shout:
And soul, sing forth a high refrain,
Lifting a mad and happy strain,
For Love is falling in the rain!

HEART OF A FLOWER.

By Lilla Vass Shepherd.

Was the lily He had chosen
From among so many fair,
With the Master in the garden
Through a vigil none would share:
Did the cross implant a message
For its Easter bloom to bear?

Did the lily touch the border
Of His mantle of the morn,
To enfold a bit of heaven
As He entered into dawn:
Is its beauty a Reflection
Which the pure in heart have borne?

Did the lily mark His passing
From the touch Life had outgrown;
Are the dewdrops on its petals
Tears that Mary may have sown:
Does its fragrance keep the promise
Of Love's Presence with His own?

OUT OF THE CHRYSALIS.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

He breaks his prison doors and gains the light,
Winged for the world, a new-created thing,
Yet on the threshold trembles, faltering,
So fearful of the flight!
The safety of the little house behind!
The strange, wide aisles of air, the windy spaces!
The myriad flowers with their upturned faces
Whose beauty strikes him blind!

Will it be so at last, I muse, with me,
When sudden on my sheltered sight shall burst
Th' unwritten glory of that golden, first Day of Eternity?
Nay, souls are different. God will let it be
That, as a fearless child when night is done
Robes for the day, this mortal shall put on Its immortality!

NOW IS CHRIST RISEN.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

Now is Christ risen from the dead!
Now brightening from sea to sea,
The wistful land is garmented
In ancient beauty wondrously.
Here flaunts a vine, here shakes a horn,
Here rings a blossom's fragile bell,
Here buds a rod, 'twixt night and morn,
Like Aaron's miracle.
So deep the heart of earth is stirred,
Far down, its humblest hoarded seed
Thrills to the echo of the word
That Christ is risen indeed.

How should a violet lift its face,
Safe resurrected, perfect, fair,
And He Who fashioned all that grace
Lie dust beneath it there?
How should a trembling tendril stir,
A slender sword-thrust cleave the sod,
And He bide in a sepulcher—
Their Lord and God?
Nay, but an age ago unfurled
One dawn, from out a rock strong riven,
In an old garden of the world
The white, white Flower of Heaven!

O ye who mourn, new graves beside,
That same deliverance shall be
For them, our last great Eastertide,
That shook the slope of Calvary.
O ye who doubt nor understand,
Who see the guarded tomb alone,
For but a prayer an angel's hand
Will roll away the stone.
O ye who know, the dark is fled,
The day is on the hills again;
Since Christ hath risen from the dead
There is no death! Amen!

THROUGH DARK TO LIGHT.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

They have a saying in the Orient,
Age-old, the little bitter legacy
Perchance, of some sad spirit's discontent
That long since ceased to be.

"The more we hope the more we suffer"—so
It counsels wistful age and eager youth,
And to the last, the hearts that harken know
Its word is truth.

Aye, very truth! The more the buried grain
Longs in its darkness for the light of God,
The more it labors up in patient pain
To cleave the prison sod.

The more the chill year yearns to bring to birth
Blossom and warmth and tender, greening thing,
The more it travails sore with storms, till earth
Be fit for spring.

And every prayer on some wild Galilee
Tolls at its oars an hour before the day,
And every dream hath some Gethsemane,
Some stone to roll away.

For faith must kneel and plead till it be whole,
And Love must bide its resurrection sky:
That which thou sowest is not quickened, soul,
Except it die!

Strive and desire and watch and trust and pray, Grasp every sweet assurance grace will give.
"The more we hope the more we suffer"—yea,
But so the more we live!

THE GLADNESS OF THE RESURRECTION

A Meditation for Easter Day

LIKE all still, instinctive things, the hunger in us for faith in immortality is even deeper and more constant than we know. The emotions with which we face many of the facts of our familiar world are associated with it. Why is it that there comes such a thrill of the spirit with the springtime? Why is it that on Easter we fill the church with flowers, and rejoice in the glory and fragrance of the blossoming earth? It is not only because these things please our physical sensibilities—minister to our sense of color, or form, or fragrance. Rather, it is because their beauty strikes a deeper note. The resurrection of the earth is symbolic of that resurrection of the spirit's life for which we yearn, and the song of the returning birds is echoed by the singing of our immortal hopes. So, when in the autumn there comes to us from the drifting leaves and the barren boughs a sense of haunting melancholy, and the grey skies shut down upon us like a weight of sadness, it is because again these things stir in us associations deeper than the immediate facts. They speak of that death which the outward world expresses; but the poignancy of its suggestion comes because it stirs in us the question, "What if the human spirit in this same way should fade and die?" Then we know that what we need is just that for which we are reaching out at Easter—the sense of an abiding life in which these personalities of ours are sacred, and in which the flowers of the soul go on unfolding in a beauty that does not end.

But what grounds have we for believing that such a faith is justified?

I.

The obvious first answer might seem to be that we believe in it because we believe in the historical fact of the resurrection of Jesus. Yet it is not the historical evidence that is in truth the primal ground-work of our faith. There is something that lies back of the objective history—something deeper than the gospel story, deeper than the words which the Apostles spoke and the evangelists recorded. The deepest thing, and the first thing is that instinct which is in us, and was also in the first disciples, and because of which they were able to receive the evidence of their Lord's resurrection when it came,—the instinctive recognition of the worth of personality which strengthens our hopes, and confirms our evidence of the resurrection and the risen life.

When on that first Easter day there came to the disciples the tidings that the Lord had come back to His own, those tidings did not fall on dull and unexpectant hearts. It is true that their faith had been terribly shattered by the awful fact of the crucifixion, and by the death which seemed in such bitter contrast to the sort of hopes they had cherished of their Master's triumph. But when they heard that He was risen, something within their hearts woke to acknowledge the fact of it as that which all along they had felt must come true. Death had seemed so unlike Him; His rising to life again seemed the one thing which was appropriate to Him. As they had walked with Him day by day, they had seen the very meaning of immortality. It was inconceivable that such a personality as His should cease. They came to know what Peter said in his first great sermon on the resurrection—that it was impossible that He should be holden of death.

As we receive at Easter time the gospel story of the Master's resurrection, why is it that we believe it? Some say it is because it is written in the Bible. Yes; but it is because also the truth and reality of it are written in our hearts. Almost 1900 years ago these gospels that we read today were written by men whom we have never seen and whose experience is separated from ours by that far-stretching gulf of time. Yet that which they tell us is for us a certainty that rests on something mightier even than their objective testimony, and no multiplying centuries can make it less near and vivid and unshakable. For the resurrection of Jesus, of which they tell, is corroborated in us by our instinctive sense of the deathlessness of such a life as His. It was not the resurrection that was a miracle. The prevention of a resurrection would have been the only miracle. In a life like His there was a power which all who have felt it know to have been mightier than any imaginable death.

So also today our surest faith in the eternal life comes when we stand close to some great personality which in its measure showed, as Christ showed, that fulness of life which is its own evidence of immortality. One of our American universities had for its President some years ago a man whose name will always be listed among the great scholars and statesmen of his generation. In the prime of his years he was stricken by a mortal disease. The physicians told him that there was nothing further that they could do, and that he could live only six months. He said to them, "You must somehow manage to give me a year. I have work to do which it will take me a year to finish." They promised him that they would do their utmost to prolong his life to that extent. Then when he and the doctors had agreed thus together, he told his family and his nearest friends what the circumstances were. He said to them that in the coming months he wanted the life of the household to go on exactly as it had always gone. He wished that there should be no foreboding, no shadow and no grief. He wanted that year to be for him and for them the fullest and most rejoicing year that they had ever lived together. They were not to ask him how he felt; they were to try not to think of him even as being ill; but, rather, as coming to the climax of his life's effort and achievement. So through the year which the doctors had promised to win, if they could for him, he gave himself with a resolute will and unflinching cheerfulness to the task which he had set himself to complete. When the year was gone—the glad full year—he had finished, and he was satisfied. The iron will which had helped to keep him alive through those tremendous days turned now and looked with deliberate and childlike acceptance into the face of death. In a few days he had gone.

Who that came into contact with a life like that could believe for a moment in death triumphing over life? Who could conceive that that personality, in the splendor of its matured powers, with all its strength ripe for loftier exercise, was annihilated in a moment? Who could fail to know that such an one could not be holden of death—that the body of which he was unclothed but made way for the heavenly body, and that mortality was swallowed up in life? And who that in his own experience has looked into the depths of other lives, who that has watched some other strong and eager spirit ride out to joust with death, with lance still held aloft and crested helm unbowed—who that has seen the brave, the glad, the gallant pass through the gates that fence our mortal gaze, can doubt that on the other side they enter the lists of some heroic service? Who that has watched some soul which in long patience bore its weary pain, some invalid who glorified the room of suffering with the atmosphere of the very presence of the Divine, can waver in the glorious confidence that the flower of that life, so filled with the heavenly fragrance, is alive for evermore in the imperishable gardens of God?

II.

Already in what we have said we have suggested that which we must feel to be the nature of the coming life. It is not emptiness nor quiescence. It is the expansion of all that has been most real and worthful here. It is mortality swallowed up in life, in just such sense as the grey mistiness of the early dawn, with its indistinct outlines and its dim perspectives, is swallowed up in the radiant glory and color of the full ascended morning.

The very mark and seal of our Christianity is that we interpret all the questions of life and death and of eternity in the light of our thought of Jesus. Of Him we say, as the Apostle said—it was impossible that He should be holden of death. We cannot think of His radiant spirit as kept in unconsciousness nor in quiescence, nor inactivity. In that world, invisible to our mortal eyes, He, to be Himself, must be such as He was when He revealed Himself to men. Still His spirit goes on its great glad ways of energy and redeeming service.

And for those who truly have followed the spirit of their Lord, shall we not think of life beyond death just as we think of life there for Him? They have entered into that fellowship with the Lord which is free from the limitation of time and space and flesh. For them judgment is not some far-off event for which they dimly wait. It is the instinctive verdict which reality records upon their spirits as they pass into the presence of the Lord of Life. In so far as His life has been made real in them; they share in its triumphant gladness the life which He lives today.

But what of those whom we cannot think of as so manifestly Christ-like that we can consider them as belonging by very instinct in His presence? Well, upon that question, also, we throw the revealing light that comes from our remembrance of the spirit of the Lord. He that revealed Himself here on earth as loving and forgiving, He that came to be the friend of sinners, He that came to seek and to save that which was lost, must in that life which lies beyond carry the heart by which in its tenderness men knew Him there. And as we think of Him, we dare to believe that in the life beyond there still may be such growth and progress as He sought to stimulate in the souls on earth. In that atmosphere of His presence, lives which to human eyes had seemed only ugly and shrunken things, may grow, like seeds that have found the sunlight, into the fragrance and beauty which God had meant for them. For there it may be that many who here have seemed unclothed with spiritual nobleness, may yet be clothed upon with a larger and nobler life.

So, on Easter morning, let our hearts echo that invitation and response which in the communion service presently we shall hear:

"Lift up your hearts.
We lift them up unto the Lord."

We remember Him who on that first Easter morning came back to His disciples, and to those who were weary and discouraged and shadowed by their grave perplexities, that He might bring the assurance of His risen life. We remember that for Him, and in Him, mortality is swallowed up in life. Into His presence, therefore, increasingly, let us seek to bring our mind and heart and will, that He may confirm their deep desires. Unto Him we lift up our hopes and aspirations, for ourselves and those we love, and in Him we rest our confidence that they shall be fulfilled.

THE CROSS AND THE CROWN

IN that most beautiful of all the Easter stories—the walk to Emmaus—we have vividly pictured to us the perplexity and doubt which beset the disciples at the crucifixion. They had hoped for something so different. They had looked for something in their eyes so much better. Cleopas tells the story of what had happened, of the trial and the condemnation and the cruel death. All this had come to Him to whom they had looked for the redemption of Israel. Of course, now they could not expect any great triumph of that kind. A real King would not let himself be beaten in such fashion.

How human it is! So like what we are doing every day! Sometimes it is a cause, sometimes it is a person to which our faith has been pinned. A test comes and cause or leader goes down in defeat. The multitude deserts over night.

Even the loyal souls find it hard to be loyal. So it was with the disciples. Even the beginning of a better understanding of what had happened could not quite do away with the perplexity. Rumors have come to Cleopas and the others, stories of the appearance of the Christ or at least of an empty tomb which indicated that perhaps Calvary was not the end. Still they are perplexed.

So they talk with the stranger and when at last their story is over he turns to them with that beautiful pity, "O foolish men and slow to believe," and in a word has cleared the whole matter. Only look at the message of the great prophets, "Ought not the Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into His glory?" How can victory come without a battle? How can glory come without suffering? How can Israel be redeemed unless some one will pay the price? How can Easter dawn unless the sun has set on Calvary? No cross, no crown, our fathers would have said.

The incident is very human. We feel that those disciples walking down to Emmaus are just exactly like ourselves. We realize how much we want to have the crown without the cross. Men have always wanted it that way. The Jews as a nation were expecting it. They looked for a miraculous coming of God in power. They expected His Kingdom to be set up in Jerusalem. They would rule the earth. They would be crowned. But they never saw that the way to the throne must be through toil and self-sacrifice and the purging of the desires of the flesh.

Other nations have felt just as they did. Germany looked for the crown but sacrifice was not in her vocabulary. Nor, alas! is sacrifice in America's vocabulary today. She wants all that may come to her from a prosperous and peaceful world but the price is more than she is willing to pay. As for the nation so it is for the individual. We are always wanting to celebrate Easter before we have been on Calvary. We want to be rich over night and the promoters of oil stock flourish. We want to be healthy and we take refuge in a popular formula, "Every day and in every way," forgetting its real meaning and ignoring its implications. We want popular education and we cry out at taxes which after all are so small that an Englishman would laugh at us. We want to be well governed, and we won't take the trouble to vote, much less to offer ourselves to help in public causes. We want, at least some of us do, to be like Jesus Christ in our lives, to be guided by His Spirit, to stand in the world for His cause; but we want that Easter triumph without walking along the hard and sorrowful road to Calvary. How nice, we say, to see the Kingdom of God established among men! But, alas, that surely cannot mean that we must give up our privileged position in the world, or run any risks with our property or show any sympathy with the under dog. Always whether in our private morals or our public relations we are hoping that somehow we can win the Crown without the Cross. We want, after the fashion of whole cults of these days, to close our eyes on Palm Sunday night and open them to find that it is Easter. But it will not work. No cross, no crown! The Christ must suffer these things before He enters into His glory. We cannot win righteousness for our souls without the sacrifice of luxury and indolence and indifference, to say nothing of the victory over the grosser sins of the world, the flesh and the devil. Just as we cannot count on luck to get us wealth, but only on work, so we cannot count on luck to bring the wealth of the common welfare to the world without work and sacrifice.

The artist must lose himself in his work or else it cannot be immortal.

"Such a price the Gods exact for song,
To become what we sing."

The doctor, the lawyer, the teacher, the engineer, the clergyman, can win their Easters only by the hard road of Calvary. The nations can win peace and justice only by the sacrifice of things they hate to lose; for the triumph of Easter waits on Good Friday.

We need this message terribly in our materialistic, pleasure-loving, duty-scoring world. We need it the more because all our education, fine as it is, has been leading our young people along easy paths and trying to interest them emotionally rather than ethically. We need men and women, old and young, who can see great causes and be ready to die (or to live) for them: Cavour who will risk the displeasure and the hatred of those who would never change as well as of the Mazzinis and the Garibaldis who would change too fast, Washington to whom Valley Forge are but part of the joy of battle, Lincoln's patient of abuse, counting no Calvary too awful if unity may be kept and freedom won.

We need young men and women who will go out into the world burning with zeal for the triumph of Christ and gladly giving themselves to unpopular causes, risking enmity and misunderstanding, hating complacency and smugness and smooth roads, welcoming Calvaries for the joy of that which is to be won on Easter. Heroes we want today.

"Of cowardice alone he is afraid," sang one mother of her son during the Great War. It was of that stuff that the heroes of six years ago were made. We need heroes of that same stuff for the warfare of Christ today—men and women who welcome the fierce struggles of the Calvaries of the world in order that the joys and triumphs of Easter may be won. The new Collect for Monday in Holy Week is a Collect of the triumph as well as of the Passion.

"Almighty God Whose most Dear Son went not up to joy but first He suffered pain, and entered not into glory before He was crucified; mercifully grant that we walking in the way of the Cross, may find it none other than the way of life and peace."

Here Good Friday and Easter are linked rightly together. Here the Crown is the issue of the Cross.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE MAKING AND MEANING OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By James H. Snowden. Published by Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 311. Price $2.50.

By a man who has already produced a number of books on religious topics, this volume begins by giving the Jewish, Greek and Roman backgrounds of the New Testament, devoting some four chapters to each of these subjects. The author then proceeds to a consideration of the various books of the New Testament in their order as bound in the Bible. Part three is devoted to a Life of Christ, and he concludes with an account of the spread of Christianity coming down to "Paul in Rome." The book is well indexed, both as to subject and scriptural quotations, and will be found a helpful addition to the library of clergymen or Sunday-school teachers. The style is more technical than interesting, but its contents are well arranged, so that the writer's information on the various subjects discussed can be easily and quickly found.

R. C. M.

OUR CHURCH. On Through the Ages. By William Postell Witsell, D. D. Published by Edwin S. Gorham, New York. Pp. 160. Price $1.25.

The contents of this volume was originally included in a series of lectures delivered by the author at a Summer Conference at La Porte, Texas, and it was at the request of many who heard these lectures that he decided to have them bound and published. The writer's purpose is to give a sketch of the history of the Church of England, and its continuation in the United States, particularly emphasizing its apostolic continuity. He does not attempt to offer an exhaustive study, but presents chapters on the important eras of the Church life of English Christianity showing the gradual development of papal authority over the Church of England, and the consequent revulsion against this usurpation, and bringing out the course of tolerance pursued by the Church in preserving ancient customs and Apostolic usages. Bishop Gailor says of the contents of this book that it was, "Prepared by a busy, hard-worked and successful parish priest, and are published at the urgent request of the clergy and laity, who heard them. They give the salient points in our Church history in popular language. They do not pretend to represent the results of original research, but the argument is based upon the conclusions of well-known scholars and shows wide reading in the literature of the subject."

"The survey of so large a field of history in so brief a space may invite meticulous criticism of some details; but the story is true and interesting and well-told, and we trust it may have a wide circulation."

PROBLEMS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT TODAY. By R. H. Molden, M. A. Pp. 246. Oxford University Press, New York, American Branch.

There has been much real distress occasioned by this thing that is called "Higher Criticism," breaking loose from the dingy cells in which scholars live, and getting the less rarified atmospheres all jogged up. The difficulty is a real one with which all, who are vitally and consciously interested in making the religion of Jesus more adequately embodied in the world today, must feel deep concern. It seems, though, that the damage is not so much that the thing has got loose; but that it came down into the party, where the grown-ups were all interested in their own affairs, without even waiting to put its nightie on. It came to a lot of people who were not prepared to appreciate it and it came in a rather shockingly crude state. It has, naturally enough, seemed that everything that modern Biblical scholarship has to contribute is negative results. People have feared it, and rightly so if that were true. Now come many books, of which Mr. Molden's is an exceptionally good one, to show that that is not true—that the fear has been badly founded.

The effort of the present volume is not to prove this, that, and the other about the "Higher Criticism," however. It is on an entirely different plane than that—there is not a controversial word in it. It gives some of the positive and constructive results in a positive and constructive way, merely indicating the general statements of the problems that have in their present state of solution brought these results. The author voices his feeling of the need and hints the motive that has guided him in these words:

"The difficulty of reading the New Testament aright has always been considerable. But of late it has been considerably enhanced by what is known as the 'Higher Criticism.' For more than a century scholars in many countries have been subjecting the documents which compose the New Testament to the most rigorous scrutiny. No other writings in the world have ever been so carefully examined; and no Christian can hold that the time and energy which have been expended in this way have been excessive. If the New Testament is what the Church believes it to be; that is to say, if it presents us in the gospels with the only record we can ever possess of the Revelation of the Son of God, and if the other books which it contains reflect the spiritual experiences of some of those who knew and loved Him best, and throw a unique light upon the earliest and most creative period in the history of the Church to which we belong, it must be entitled to the most careful study which men can bestow upon it. Any addition to our knowledge about it must serve to increase its claim upon our conscience, and its value as a guide."

The book is very engagingly written, and, although there are foot notes for those who have the time to work through it, there is no technical matter in the text at all. It is of great advantage that this work is completely available for those who have no Greek, as it will be valuable for those of the clergy who have not been able to keep fresh on their languages, but more particularly so for Sunday-school teachers who have been wanting a modern and constructive approach to the Bible.

It is probable that some readers of mature scholarship will take exception to certain statements and conclusions that Mr. Molden has made. Yet it seems rash to say that he was ignorant of these points and the issues that might be raised upon them. It is more probable, on the contrary, that he has faced the danger of critical attack on non-essential points in order that he might accomplish a very difficult task. He has done this job well.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS. A Revised Version. By W. M. Furneaux, D. D. Published by George H. Doran, New York. Pp. 272. Price $2.00.

Out of a thorough scholarship the author here gives a new version of the Book of Psalms, presenting in English the metrical beauty of these Hebrew poems. Some of his translations compared with the authorized version throw an interesting light on the deeper meanings of the Psalms, and the book is chiefly valuable to be used in comparison with the authorized and other versions.

R. C. M.

TOLD BY AN IDIOT. By Rose Macaulay. Pp. 340. Boni and Liveright, New York. Price $2.00.

Rose Macaulay is already well known as the author of "Potterism" and "Dangerous Ages," but she is particularly in the minds of readers of the "religious press," because of her contributions to the "Guardian." Possessed of rare literary skill and deep insight, her writings are always stimulating. Many have thought that in the present volume she has contributed something of lasting worth to the literature of the English language, but there are things about the book that large groups of readers will not like—the fact is there are some things that will make many people quite mad, and none of these impressions keep it from being a book that ought to be read by many people who won't read it. We have not got over the idea that a book to be worth-while ought to preach at you about something or other, and this one does that, right enough, on a theme that the same author has used before, namely: "There is nothing new under the sun." But that is not a new theme, nor is it particularly important that this writer thinks it worth proclaiming so often. The thing that makes the book one that ought to be read is that it brings us into living contact with several very interesting minds and characters. They are the kinds of minds and characters that the clergy too often know nothing about, although they, at times, wander into the less obtrusive seats, or, maybe, find themselves born in the higher sittings. They are the perennial "new ones"; and that is a kind of person, perhaps, even more than it is a condition of age.

There are "old ones" there, too, and some "new ones" that grow old under your very eyes. Things do happen in this very remarkable book, you are not told that they happen, you see them going on. The background is the social history of Modern England—from 1879 on—cleverly sketched, and with a rare and well-informed fund of detail. The newspapers of the times have been gone over to give it to you, and if your eyes opened on this world soon enough there are things that you remember and they were just that way—the things that are talked about and the food one ate and the clothes that were worn and the old outrages of the "new ones." The story? There is less story—at least one is not conscious of it; one has been with some real people while they have grown up and listening to them tell about. Fortunately it is not needed the experiences of the times. One has gained a lot of rather thrilling experience, too, by watching them and sary to agree with all of them, nor is it possible—they are figures of the drama.

But not the least interesting of the people one meets here is Rose Macaulay herself—at least she seems to shine through at times. If you have looked for her it is probably she who will leave with you your impression of the book, and you may not like it. Rather cynical, perhaps, though more disillusioned than that, because she still cares. From the point of view of an English woman it may be that the tale that we have told in weaving the drama of their present world does not bear on its face signs of a too intelligent planning. "Told by An Idiot" she calls it, but that is Shakespeare's language and not hers. It is only when she comes to the period of the great war and the "horrid peace" that her language becomes as trenchant as that of her quotation, and yet the recent experiences have left their mark on the whole world.

The Great Commission

RE-BUILDING THE DUBOSE MEMORIAL SCHOOL.

By William E. Leidt.

It is not too much to say that with the total destruction by fire of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School at Monteagle, Tennessee, the whole Church lost one of its most important educational institutions. The whole plant was absolutely wiped out.

It may not be amiss at this time to recount briefly something of the history of this school and its founder. Archdeacon Claiborne, who, in the South, is generally known as "the Apostle of the Mountains," having first founded a great string of mission chapels to care for people's spiritual life, then established a magnificent hospital to care for their physical life, and two splendid schools to develop their mental life, finally turned to the question of what was going to happen to these people in the future, after the present generation of workers had died. Knowing that the average clergyman gravitates inevitably to the city, Archdeacon Claiborne became convinced that there should be founded an institution which should take promising material, whether young or old, from the country, train it for the ministry, and send it back again to the rural districts, now so pitifully neglected by the Church. By heroic work he raised $20,000. With this he purchased a fine piece of ground together with a number of abandoned school buildings near Monteagle. These were repaired, and to this haven, for the last five years, has streamed in ever increasing numbers a splendid set of men who, whether because of mature years, or because their training had not fitted them for a regular seminary, were unable to enter an ordinary theological school. Already some of these men have been trained and sent out into many parts of the country and are doing a splendid work in the neglected areas.

Now it has all been temporarily brought to an end. The buildings were fully insured and the insurance has been promptly paid by the insurance company. To erect a modern fire-proof building, however, will require, even with the utmost economy, at least $100,000. To date, $67,000 of this sum already has been raised, and, in full confidence, that the members of the Church will subscribe the balance, the work of re-building is at once going forward.

Various parts of the building offer splendid opportunities as memorial gifts. Already the oratory, library, and several students' bed-rooms and studies have been given and designated as memorials. Fifteen hundred dollars will build and furnish a bed-room and study. Fifty of these are planned for in the new building. Five thousand dollars will build the common room. This is one of the most important factors in the school's plans, because here in the hours of recreation the men will meet together on terms of equality and learn much from each other.

Assistance from every quarter is sorely needed. Let us remember the old saying, "He gives twice who gives quickly."

Contributions should be sent to the Rev. W. S. Claiborne, Monteagle, Tennessee.

TO BUILD CHURCH ON INTERESTING SPOT.

A Christian Church is to be built in Tokyo on land where the present Emperor of Japan was born. It is a corner plot in Ahasaka ward, which contains more foreign residents, especially Americans and English, than any other ward in Tokyo. Immediately opposite are the Aoyama Palace grounds in which the Prince Regent lives.

In the latter half of the nineteenth century a commodious residence was built on the site and given to the lady who subsequently became the mother of the Emperor. Here the exalted ruler of Nippon first saw the light of day. Part of his childhood was passed there, but ultimately the house was torn down. Recently a Japanese real estate company secured an option on the property from its owner, Marquis Nakayama, with a view to erecting a seven-story apartment house as a pioneer venture in Tokyo for that type of structure.

Before these plans were consummated, the authorities of the Imperial Household learned of the proposal, and a veto was interposed. Standing directly opposite the Aoyama Palace grounds, it was pointed out, so elevated a structure could not be permitted, since people living in the upper stories of the building could look into the palace grounds, and, almost certainly, see some of the members of the Imperial family!

With the plans of the real estate company thus set aside the property was thrown back on the market, and the Department of Missions has acquired it as the site of the church and parish house to take the place of Holy Trinity Cathedral. Like the former, this new church will provide for both a Japanese and an English-speaking congregation. In the negotiations for the purchase of the site, the Marquis Nakayama graciously reduced the price of the land by approximately $5,000, which he made his contribution to the Church's Japan Reconstruction Fund.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLES' WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block

SUMMER SCHOOL GUIDE POSTS.

THE Department of Missions published a bulletin called "Guide Posts" some months ago, giving a list of various opportunities for service in the Mission Fields, stated definitely, both as to service to be rendered and the geographical location. Perhaps for the first time, some in the Church realized the diversified character of the Church work in the Mission Fields, and that one may even be called as a Missionary to teach physical culture and athletics in the Church Schools of foreign lands.

Every encouragement has been given the young people to attend the various Summer Conferences planned for this year. The subject of life enlistment will certainly be introduced, and various lines of Christian activity for part or whole time effort will be stressed. Nothing could be more futile than for the Church to be unprepared to consolidate the gains made by these Conferences, spiritually. Too often in the past, we have given our people a vision of service, and upon their response, have frankly been unable to direct them to any definite satisfying work. There is a pathetic cry for leaders in all lay activities, but no real effort seems to have been made to state this need in definite terms.

The Personnel Department of the Army offers an interesting suggestion to the Young People's Groups at our Summer Conferences. It would be helpful if each member of the League might fill out a questionnaire as to his personal qualifications, training, and availability for service, with some act of commitment which might record his willingness and desire to be of use in part time or whole time work in his own parish or diocese. If these cards were referred to Parochial or Diocesan headquarters, there might easily be developed an increasing number of Leaguers who could be specially trained along the lines of their individual interest and desire to serve.

Students from all over the United States met at Washington for a Conference on Law Observance last week. Leaders from over one hundred leading institutions attended. The subject of Prohibition had the largest place. At another time we shall be glad to give a summary of the Conference results, but it is interesting to know the occasion of the call. It is thus stated by the Committee:

"The following considerations have led to the calling of this important gathering:

"First, in recognition of the fact that as a part of the apparent tendency everywhere to disregard lawful and orderly methods of life this same spirit has manifested itself to a degree among the students of the institutions of higher education. The Committee does not believe these violations are of such proportions that they are to be regarded as an indictment of the vast majority of those attending the colleges and universities, but they represent a tendency which it is believed ought to be promptly corrected.

"Second, in recognition of the further fact that these students represent an ever-increasing element of power and influence in the citizenry of the nation, not only as an earnest of the future, but even more in the immediate present, and that the full impact of their service in behalf of respect for, and enforcement of law can be best realized in a Conference where they may consider these peculiar phases of the subject which involve the educational centers.

"Third, the belief that students can make a profound contribution in reestablishing confidence in the larger questions of honesty and integrity in national public life. While the Conference will give special attention to the issues of lawlessness as indicated in the violation of the Eighteenth Amendment and its enforcing acts, the deeper and far more important topic of a real, thorough-going awakening of the nation to the necessity of fundamental righteousness and loyalty to orderly methods of government will be fully considered and discussed.

"Students are vitally interested in subjects of this character. Therefore the Conference is called for the immediate benefit of the student communities, but also that these students may thus be able to formulate a program which will bring the full force of their influence to bear upon the life of the nation in a period of great anxiety.

"Fourth, that the organized interest in law enforcement, which has already manifested itself among students in several parts of the country, may be conserved and made available as a National Message."

WHY WE FAIL.

There is cause for everything! Nothing ever "just happens." If a man is promoted to a better job there is a cause. If a man loses his job there is also a cause.

There are many causes that lead to failure. Here is a list of the most common causes:

Finding fault with the other fellow, but never seeing your own.

Doing as little as possible and trying to get as much as possible for it.

Spending too much time showing up the other fellow's weak point and too little time correcting your own.

Slandering those we do not like.

Procrastination—putting off until tomorrow something that we should have done day before yesterday.

Deceit—talking friendly to the other fellow's face and stabbing him in the back as soon as he turns around.

False belief that we are smart enough to reap a harvest of pay before sowing a crop of honest service.

Disloyalty to those who have trusted us.

Egotism—the belief that we know it all and no one can teach us anything.

Last, but not least, lack of the necessary training and education to enable us to stand at the head in our line of work.

Look this list over and check yourself up by it. If none of these causes for failure apply to you, then you are to be congratulated, because you are a success!

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

KEEP UP THE PROPAGANDA.

It is refreshing to know that there are still Churchmen who take seriously the resolution adopted by the House of Bishops at the General Convention of 1920 urging some steps for the prevention of war by international agreement.

The following communication has been sent to the Social Service Department of the National Council with the request that it be given as wide publicity as possible:

To the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council, Greeting:

We whose names are appended, being members of the Diocese of Connecticut, and having on our hearts the urgent need of the world at this hour, do petition you that as a central agency of the Church charged with the responsibility for human welfare you appeal to the Dioceses of the Church to take action in their approaching Conventions reinforcing this resolution passed unanimously by the House of Bishops on November 15, 1920:

"That this House of Bishops is profoundly impressed with the serious and sinister condition of the nations in their relations to each other.

"That the Church cannot permit war to remain the only method for the ultimate settlement of disputes between nations.

"We are, therefore, of the conviction that it is the immediate and imperative duty of the United States Government, either to join the existing League of Nations, or to proceed immediately to organize some other effective Association or Council of Nations, for the purpose of settling amicably international disputes and thus save us from the great danger of another world war.

"Resolved, That the Chairman and Secretary of this House be instructed to send a copy of this declaration to the President, the Secretary of State, the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the United States Senate, and also convey it to the public press."

William Osborn Baker, William J. Brewster, William A. Beardsley, J. Eldred Brown, Aaron C. Coburn, William R. Corson, Samuel R. Colladay, Gerald A. Cunningham, Frank F. German, William T. Hooper, Fleming James, Floyd S. Kenyon, Philip M. Kerridge, W. P. Ladd, John N. Lewis, J. Chauncey Linsley, George T. Linsley, L. P. Waldo Marvin, Elmore M. McKee, Ernest deF. Miel, Rensen B. Ogilby, Charles A. Pease, John F. Plumb, W. F. Severn, Stephen Fish Sherman, Jr., Samuel Sutcliffe, W. George Thompson, Francis B. Whitcome.

The Church is surely an organization on which rests the responsibility for keeping Peace propaganda continually before the public. The only sure prevention of war is to create such a sentiment against war that it will restrain the public sentiment for settling international disputes by a resort to arms.

Disarmament has an economic value, but it will not of itself produce the positive influence that is necessary to stop a war. The League of Nations can do much towards maintaining peace, but without an enormous international police force it will be powerless to restrain a great nation that is set upon using force.

The gradual creation, however, of a public sentiment that will look upon war in the same light in which dueling is now thought of by the people of the United States can gradually make war impossible. Whether or not this can be done before another clash of arms is imminent, depends upon the vigor and persistency with which the clergy and other publicists keep this matter in the public eye.

Such resolutions as the above all have their weight and every Diocese that acts on such a suggestion will help to outlaw war, and make permanent peace an accomplished fact and not merely an ideal theory.

NARCOTICS, A CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCHES.

By the Rev. A. F. Newcomb.

Every form of evil constitutes a challenge to the Church. The Church cannot be indifferent to any condition which affects the welfare of humanity. The appalling narcotic peril is without question the most challenging social enemy which the Church is facing today.

In order to bring this challenge before us most impressively it may help us to center the thought upon certain words which in reference to narcotics have very deep significance.

The challenge is seen in the disastrous effects of habit-forming drugs. Alcohol is sufficiently menacing to the manhood of the world to arouse the most intense interest and to enlist devoted service. But morphine, cocaine and heroin stand in a class by themselves. These drugs impair and then destroy not only the physical powers, but what is far worse, the finer mental and moral faculties. The narcotic addict very soon shows anti-social tendencies. Lying, stealing and murder are practiced with facility when occasion seems to require.

Keen and experienced observers are not slow to say that ninety per cent of the major crimes and most brutal murders are chargeable to these deadly drugs; and heroin is the leader in the field of crime.

Moral degeneracy is of course accompanied by the decay of the spiritual nature. The faculties of spiritual discernment, choice, sympathy and action, all suffer increasingly until in advanced stages of addiction the man made in God's moral image becomes a parody on his former self. All along the pathway of narcotic addiction are tragedies—physical, economic, social, moral, spiritual.

This menace is growing with fabulous rapidity. It seizes upon the person who trifles with it. The strongest mind will succumb to the habit in thirty days, while in the adolescent period ten or twelve days at the outside are sufficient to put upon the young life the destructive grip of drug addiction.

Socially, addiction is increasing with astounding rapidity. Every heroin addict has a mania for leading others into the habit. All over the country are highly organized "narcotic rings" which are exploiting our people for the fabulous gains which they make. Some evils move slowly, seeming to creep upon the people so that it may be almost impossible to detect any increase. But drug addiction is a galloping disease. It has come upon us with lightning velocity, so that before the public has become aware of its seriousness it is threatening the very life of our nation, and even of the race. It challenges, by facts which cannot long be disregarded, the organization which of all others the Master has set for the safety and uplift of humanity.

The Church sees the challenge in the well-nigh unfailing certainty with which the end can be predicted. So far as hope of recovery is concerned, narcotic addiction is placed in a class with cancer and leprosy. It entails deterioration, destruction, death.

The feature of the challenge which stirs true men and women to their depths is the fact that the youth of our nation are being enthralled by a habit infinitely worse than Egyptian bondage. The average age of heroin addicts is twenty-two years, a fact which appalls us by the revelation thus made that recruits in the use of this powerful drug are made in the 'teen age. Boys and girls in our schools are being solicited. Not the old toppers of pre-prohibition days are conspicuous in the ranks of drug addicts, but boys and girls, young men and young women, are being ruined by drugs.

Above all the challenge will arouse the Churches most thoroughly when the fact is really grasped that they have the unfailing cure. That remedy is a deep religious experience. "He whom the Son makes free is free indeed." This is a service for those for whom Christ died.

The essential remedy for society lies in the education of the public, and particularly the young, and their personal adoption of the high ideals of character and service by which they will be fortified against narcotic attack.

This high service rendered by the Church, immediately and earnestly, will not only prove fundamental as far as the public is concerned, but will contribute to the Church a prestige of the first degree. Narcotic addiction constitutes the most deadly and far-reaching evil in modern life. The Churches of America face the challenge to render a heroic service to save America and the world. They will respond nobly when they really see the peril.

The International Narcotic Education Association of which Captain Richmond P. Hobson is president, appeals to all high-minded citizens through its program of education, by which, within the near future the families of the land will have received literature dealing with the narcotic peril, and before this school year closes the twenty-three million young people now in our schools and colleges will have heard from their teachers the warning against this great menace.

Church Intelligence

The Russian General Convention.

The Russian Orthodox Church in America held a regularly called General Convention in Detroit the first week in April. Our Church acted the part of host, led by Bishop Page, Dr. Speer, Director of the Diocesan Foreign-Born Americans Divisions, and Dr. Woodroffe, rector of St. John's. About $1,200 was contributed towards the traveling expenses of the Russian delegates by our Churchmen in different parts of the country, in those places where there are Russian parishes. This was deeply appreciated by the Russians.

Over one hundred and sixty delegates, Bishops, priests and laymen, attended, representative of a majority of the Russian parishes. In addition there were a number of proxies assigned. Metropolitan Platon attended only the later sessions, in order to give full freedom for the debate of questions affecting him personally, and then only on the unanimous and urgent request of the convention. The Very Rev. T. Koponogge, of Cleveland, presided, and the Very Rev. Alexander Veniaminoff, of Bridgeport, and Mr. Gladie, of New York, were elected vice-chairmen.

The opening, Divine Liturgy and a Te Deum were celebrated at All Saints' Russian Cathedral, and a vespers at our St. John's, and also the final Te Deum at our Cathedral. The Thursday vespers were attended by a great gathering of many nationalities, besides the Russian delegates and our own people. The sessions were held in St. John's Parish House, which was ideal, with its large auditorium and committee rooms.

Dr. Spoer writes: "On Friday morning Metropolitan Platon celebrated the Te Deum in the Cathedral, and preached, setting forth the relation in which the Orthodox Church stands to the Episcopal Church. He spoke with deep gratitude of the genuine brotherly help which the Episcopal Church had continually rendered in an absolutely disinterested way to the Russian Orthodox Church in her time of greatest sorrow. He made a statement which was intended to, and I hope will, stop the mouths of those who have tried to sow discord between the two Churches. He said:

"I do not wish to become an Episcopalian, nor do I wish any Episcopalian to become a member of the Orthodox Church. . . I shall always pray that God may protect and bless the Orthodox Church and her members and also that He may protect and bless the Episcopal Church and her members."

"He then expressed his earnest hope that the little unimportant differences which still exist between the two Churches may give place to a fuller understanding and a fuller cooperation, and that this may be soon—indeed, very soon.

"This speech made a most favorable impression on the hearers, his own clergy as well as our people, who are beginning to get a clear understanding of the great work which our Church is doing, as well as what the Orthodox Church really is.

"The convention has been a boon in many respects for our people. The courteous conduct of the better class of the Russian priests has made quite an impression upon our 'breezy' fellow-countrymen, and has broken down some of the prejudices against the 'foreigner.'"

I have heard several people remark about this.

"Bishop Page is very favorably impressed by what he has seen and heard, and we have already made some plans for getting Bishop Theophilus (Bishop of Chicago, American-born) here at some future day to preach in the Cathedral, and one or two others of the outstanding priests."

The following is quoted from the statement issued by the Russian Archdiocesan Council:

"The Convention resolved that, in view of troubled conditions in Russia, which began to bear disastrously upon the American Branch of the Russian Orthodox Church, this branch of the Church shall henceforth exist as a self-governing body until a lawful All Russian Church Convention be convoked in Russia under conditions securing the entire freedom of its discussions and decisions. That she should be governed by a Ruling Bishop, together with a Synod of Bishops, and a Council of elected clergymen and laymen, and controlled by periodical General Conventions. A special committee of three priests and three laymen was elected to cooperate with Metropolitan Platon in drafting a constitution.

"In view of rumors that the Patriarch Tikhon has issued an order removing Metropolitan Platon from his office as Head and Ruling Bishop of the American Church, the Convention resolved that under Canons and Russian Church law such an order would be obviously unlawful, and if it actually had taken place it probably had been forced upon the Patriarch. The Convention unanimously decided that the Metropolitan Platon could not be removed in any such illegal way, and having the full confidence of his American flock, that he must remain on his see as the Head and Ruling Bishop of this self-governing Russian Church in America.

"The Convention resolved that the 'Living Church' is but a dissenting unorthodox sect, having no standing in the Russian or Universal Orthodox Church, and that John Kedrovsky cannot claim either the Bishop's office, or even membership in this Church.

"Some rumors were spread by the Russian Orthodox Church's enemies (this alludes to an extraordinary statement which appeared in the press, emanating from Kedrovsky's lawyer) maintaining that the actual purpose of the Convention was to secede from the Orthodox Church and become independent under the auspices of, and even merge with, the Episcopal Church.

"Such rumors are without any foundation whatever, and obviously malignant. The Episcopal Church is a faithful and staunch friend of the Russian Church in America, which has always stood by her and disinterestedly helped her in her actual distress. But certainly no merger with nor allegiance to any other Church can be even contemplated by the Orthodox Church, nor desired by the Episcopal Church."

"Let's Do Better."

The statement of receipts from dioceses to April 1, applying on the 1924 quota is disappointing. Allowing a full month for the collection of the money, only one diocese and three missionary districts have paid the amount due on their budget share of the quota. Reports of the canvass for this year were encouraging, but total receipts to April 1 are less than for the same period last year.

In contrast with the total a few dioceses show notable increases, namely: Massachusetts, Western Massachusetts, Western New York, Atlanta, East Carolina, Louisiana, Tennessee, Texas and Oklahoma.

The budget covers operating expenses and these must be met. To meet them we have been forced to borrow $305,000 since the first of the year. The money paid for interest on these loans, due to delayed remittances, would otherwise go into the work of the Kingdom.

Let's do better.

Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

Convocation of the American Churches in Europe.

The Convocation of the American Churches in Europe has been called to meet on April 23 in Holy Trinity Pro-Cathedral, Paris. The Bishop in charge, the Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., will preside, and a full attendance of clerical and lay delegates is expected. Deputies to the General Convention will be elected. Among the invited guests who will be present are the Bishop of Gibraltar, representing the English Church; the Rev. Wm. C. Emhardt, representing the National Council, and representatives of the Holy Orthodox Church. Bishop McCormick has been visiting the European Churches and also the churches in the Near East, including Egypt and Palestine. He expects to return to the United States early in May.

Elected President of the American Bible Society.

The American Bible Society has great pleasure in announcing to all of its friends that at the Stated Meeting of the Board of Managers held at the Bible House, New York, on April 3, 1924, Mr. E. Francis Hyde was elected President of the Society.

Mr. Hyde has been since 1894 a Manager and since 1919 a Vice-President. He is at the present time Chairman of the Finance Committee and is in many other ways closely connected with the administration of the Society's affairs.

Mr. Hyde is and has been for many years a leader in the financial, musical, social and religious life of New York City.

Mr. Hyde is Treasurer of the New York Sabbath Committee, Treasurer of Princeton Theological Seminary and a member and elder of the Marble Collegiate Church (Dutch Reformed) of New York City.

He will bring to the Presidency a wide and varied experience and a deep personal interest in and knowledge of the Society's world-wide program.

To the Chaplains of Our Church.

The Executive Committee of the Army and Navy Commission are very anxious to get the Chaplains of our own Church serving both in the Army and the Navy together in a real fellowship conference. It has been decided to hold this conference on Governors Island, New York City, on the sixth, seventh, and, probably eighth, of May. It is our earnest hope that you will make every endeavor to be present. Please make your plans to report to Chaplain Swan at Governors Island, on the evening of Monday, the fifth of May. This will then give us two and possibly three full days for conference.

We have no program for the conference, but hope that each man attending will feel perfectly free to bring up for discussion anything out of his experience that may prove helpful to all the Chaplains. It is the desire of the Commission that each man serving as a Chaplain of the Church will feel the power of the Church and the Church's life more intimately related to his work than has heretofore been the case.

We are calling this conference not simply to meet one another, but for the larger purpose of relating the Church to her representatives in the Army and the Navy in the hope of finding a way whereby the whole Church may better interpret her message and express her life through her representatives.

In the sincere hope that you will find it possible to attend and with the request that you not only notify me, but also Chaplain Swan at Governors Island at the earliest possible date that you will be there and with the hope of making this meeting a great success, I am,

With kindest personal regards,

Faithfully yours,

H. Percy Silver,

For the Executive Committee.

The Work of the American Guild of Health.

The American Guild of Health, of which the Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman is president, with headquarters at 1108 Ulmer Building, Cleveland, O., has entered upon the third month of its second year.

Since the first of the year "Teaching Missions" have been held in various parts of the Mid-West, notably at Christ Church, Cleveland, the Rev. E. G. Mapes, rector; Central Christian Church, Detroit, Mich., the Rev. E. DeWitt Jones, D. D., pastor; All Saints' Church, Pontiac, Mich., the Rev. B. G. Burt, rector; Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., the Rev. George P. T. Sargent, rector, and for the combined Euclid Avenue Christian Church, Euclid Avenue Congregational Church and Baptist Church of the Master, Cleveland.

"The School of Applied Religion" is another step in the development of this work. The first session was held the weeks of March 3-15 at the Hotel Cleveland, Cleveland. The President of the Guild led the class through a miniature mission in the mornings; the formality of a regular mission was gone, the students interrupting whenever a doubt or question came to their minds. The afternoons were given over mainly to the scientific side of the work. Mr. Charles Milton Newcomb, analytical psychologist, had arranged a practical course on "The New Psychology."

The limit of enrollment had been set originally at thirty, but the requests for admission were so insistent that the number of students reached fifty when the school was opened. There had been various reasons given in the beginning why the different students were there. Before the close all were of one mind, that the teaching of the American Guild of Health should be extended throughout the churches.

The demand for a repetition of the school in Cleveland has been great and plans were being announced to hold another session in that city the weeks of June 23-July 5. Mr. Sherman will also hold a session of the school in Louisville, Ky., at Calvary Church, during the weeks of May 19-31.

The Rev. T. E. Rowe, the director of the Guild of Health in Canada, came the last week of the session of the school. The students were given added inspiration during Mr. Rowe's three days with the school, as he addressed the class each day and spent some time in personal conferences.

Mr. Rowe prolonged his visit in the States, accompanying Mr. Sherman to Calvary Church, Louisville, Ky., where Mr. Sherman conducted a "Teaching Mission" on the subject of Religion and Health during the week of March 23.

Mr. Rowe returned to his work in British Columbia after having established friendly and cordial relations with the American Guild of Health. The two officers expect much future good to come from this visit.

"Bishop Tuttle Commemorative Sunday."

All of the Episcopal Church parishes of Missouri will observe Sunday, April 27, as "Bishop Tuttle Commemorative Sunday," and addresses will be made by the clergy on the life and work of Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, who was for almost forty years Bishop of Missouri and for over twenty years the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church. It is hoped that churches in other parts of the country will also observe this day.

This particular Sunday has been chosen, as it is between the dates of the first anniversary of the death of Bishop Tuttle, April 17, 1923, and the anniversary of his consecration as Bishop, May 1, 1867. He was consecrated Bishop at the age of thirty and was the first Missionary Bishop of our Church of Montana, having also jurisdiction in Idaho and Utah. The story of his great work in that part of the country is one of the epics of pioneer civilization of the West. A memorial to Bishop Tuttle is to be erected in St. Louis which will take the form of a building for general diocesan and community service work. It will also be offered to the National Council of the Church for meetings and conferences when so desired.

A Correction.

Schedule of Brotherhood of St. Andrew Training Camps for older boys of the Church, have been widely published by the Church papers. In a recent notice appearing generally, it was stated that Camp Carleton, located at Angola, New York, would be operated from July 14 to 26. The correct dates for this Camp are from June 23 to July 5, and the staff will be the following: Camp Director, Mr. John H. Frizzell, Brotherhood Field Secretary; Assistant Director, Mr. William Roesser; Instructor in Christian Social Service, Mr. G. Warfield Hobbs, Editor of "The Spirit of Missions"; Instructor in Missions, the Rev. Arthur L. Proseus, rector Trinity Church, Fredonia, N. Y.; Instructor in Religious Education, Mr. H. C. Kelleran, formerly a business man, now preparing for Holy Orders in the General Theological Seminary; Chaplain, the Rev. Thomas J. Bigham, rector Church of the Advent, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The schedule and curriculum of Brotherhood Camps this year have been developed and improved. Parishes should make sure that one or more boys attend camp. Their influence for good will be felt all through the succeeding years. Advance registrations should be sent promptly, as the camps are filling rapidly. Ordinarily it is advisable for boys to attend their nearest camp, but if it is desired to attend a more distant camp, arrangements may be made through the national office of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in Philadelphia.

In addition to Camp Carleton the following camps will be operated this year: Camp Finney, in North Carolina, June 23 to July 5; Camp Tuttle, Missouri, June 23 to July 5; Camp Kirk, California, July 5 to 18; Camp Houghteling, Michigan, June 23 to July 5; Camp Gardiner, Massachusetts, July 14 to July 26; Camp Bonsall, Pennsylvania, July 14 to 26; Camp John Wood, New Jersey, July 14 to 26; and under Diocesan Brotherhood Management, Camp Morrison, Iowa, July 1 to 11.

Promoting Sentiment Through the Eye.

A set of sixty lantern slides and lecture manuscript describing the organization and activities of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice, just completed by Jonathan A. Rawson, Jr., has been made available for general use by the League of Nations Non-Partisan Association. The lecture is confined closely to a record of the work of the League and the Court, with no attempt to enter into the controversial aspects of the Court or League issues as they have developed in American politics. Particular attention is given to the part taken by American organizations and individuals in the League activities. A thorough study of the League's work in the first four years and a careful search for pictorial material have brought forth a visual demonstration which should serve to secure a much clearer understanding of the aims and methods of the League and the Court than has hitherto been possible on this side of the Atlantic.

Application for the use of the slides and manuscript should be addressed to Jonathan A. Rawson, Jr., 18 East Thirty-seventh Street, New York City. The royalty is five dollars for each use, the user to assume postage charges and guarantee the immediate return of the slides. Only a limited number of the slide sets are now available, and no public announcements of the lecture should be made until a definite reservation is guaranteed.

Some Important Questions Put to Dr. Wood That We Can All Help to Answer.

Dr. John Wood, of the Department of Missions, speaking of his brief visit to China, when he went to the Orient last winter, at the time of the consecration of the Japanese Bishops, said recently, "One of the most interesting experiences of a trip to the East is sitting down with a group of missionaries and talking informally about the work they are doing. That is the best way to learn what a keen individual the missionary really is, whether man or woman."

"On the one hand, the missionary secretary has a chance to ask all sorts of questions about how our work is progressing, why certain methods are used, what the difficulties are, what the outlook is. The way the missionaries shoot back their replies makes it perfectly plain that they are wide awake, have planned their work and are working their plans."

"Turn about is only fair, so missionaries have a chance to ask questions of the secretary. It is to be feared that he does not always show up so well when they ask such embarrassing questions as 'Why is there a deficit in the funds at home?' 'Why do not more people volunteer for missionary service?' 'Why is needed equipment not forthcoming?'"

"Such an experience as that fell to my lot one afternoon in Sochow during the hectic fortnight I was able to spend in China. In the course of our conversation somebody mentioned water. That resulted in a regular flood of information with regard to water conditions in two of our compounds in Soochow. As a result of continued drought, wells have run dry. Then recourse was had to the neighboring canal. I shudder even to mention that. One has only to carry away a memory of this discolored polluted water to realize that it is fit for nothing except to float the many sampans in this Chinese Venice. The next day, when I looked at the particular canal from which water was being secured, it was more clear than ever that to allow the dozen missionaries and the one hundred and thirty pupils in two of our schools to be dependent in any way on such a water supply was simply inviting disease and death to do their best.

"An artesian well is needed. This is practicable, because such wells have been driven successfully in other parts of the city. A well with piping and storage tank would cost approximately $2,000.

"What ought to be done about the matter? Can we afford to let our missionary friends go without a clean water supply?"

Activities of Church Service Leagues.

Our Spanish Church School children, in Porto Rico, Cuba, etc., are to have a Church School Service League Prayer Card, with prayers in Spanish for their use. This is to be issued shortly by the Department of Religious Education, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. Those who would have use for it may have a copy on request, asking for No. 4505-A.

Teachers and leaders of Church School Service Leagues will be interested in a four-page leaflet, "Types of C. S. S. L.," to be issued about May 1 by the Department of Religious Education, describing types of League work. This is free on request from 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. (No. 4526.)

Death of Mission Worker.

The death of Miss Leila Bull in Osaka on March 20 has removed from the Church's staff one of its most honored veterans.

Miss Bull's seventy-eighth birthday was celebrated on March 15 by the Japanese Christians in Osaka, by giving a "Kanshakai," a thank meeting, in one of the hotels.

"Over a hundred people, all but four of them Japanese," writes one of Miss Bull's fellow missionaries, "gathered to take part in one of the most impressive meetings I have ever attended—a real thanksgiving—in commemoration of Miss Bull's thirty-five years service as a missionary and in appreciation of her work in the city of Osaka." Former pupils and co-workers came from all over Japan, and even from Korea, to pay their tributes. Prayers were offered, hymns sung, addresses made and gifts presented, after which a simple dinner was served. Miss Bull was very happy, and, except for a slight cold, which she had been nursing earlier in the week, she seemed quite well. A week later, almost to the very hour, she was buried in the Christian cemetery in Osaka.

During the afternoon of the nineteenth she was quietly talking to some Japanese friends in her sitting room, when she suddenly complained of feeling a little badly and went upstairs to lie down. Shortly after she became ill and Dr. Southworth and Miss Whent were sent for. She was conscious up to within fifteen minutes before her death.

The Japanese were devoted to Miss

Bull. All day Thursday and Friday they poured in to offer their services, and the day of the funeral Christ Church was as full as it was the day of Bishop Naide's consecration. He and many others paid beautiful tribute to her. She will be sorely missed.

Successful Lenten Services.

Lent is better observed in Tennessee this year than has been the case for a long time. Daily services in the large centers have had a remarkable attendance. The down-town theatre services, featuring special preachers every noon at the Orpheum in Nashville, has been a success. The audience has been representative, and the sermons have been appropriate. Bishop Penick preached last week, and Bishop Gallor Holy Week. Dr. Black, Dean McCready, Dr. Godolphin, all three roused their audience to the pitch of shouting. The hearty interest was remarkable.

The preaching mission at St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, by Dr. Schaad, has been a decided success.

The Rev. J. Francis McCloud, for the past six years rector of St. James', Macon, Ga., has accepted a call to Christ Church, Nashville, to become assistant. He is a native of Pennsylvania, but was educated at Sewanee, and was ordained in Nashville, where he served for several years as assistant to former rector, now Bishop H. J. Mikell. He married Miss Margaret Mitchell, of Nashville, and both have many warm friends to welcome them.

He will have charge of St. Andrew's Mission, and special outside work, in addition to his routine assistantship. He takes charge the second Sunday in May.

An Inspiring Gathering.

A most inspiring gathering of all the missionary societies of the town of Summerville, South Carolina, was held on Friday afternoon, March 7, at St. Paul's Church, on the invitation of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Rev. F. W. Ambler, rector, was the leader in the service. The music was very sweet, and a beautiful solo, by a gifted young member of the Presbyterian Church added to its beauty.

Different parts were taken by the Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Lutherans, and our two branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, hymns were sung between prayers or reading from the Bible. The offerings were taken up by two young girls.

A happy feeling of fellowship was expressed, and the wish that there might be but one Church—though none felt willing to give up their own way of worship. The rector gave the benediction.

Church School Organized.

On the line of the Santa Fe connecting Phoenix with Los Angeles, in the midst of the desert and girt about the glorious mountain ranges, is a little place called Salome. There are only a few houses. The place is on one of the motor highways, and tourists keep it alive. There had never been any regular religious work there until a few months ago. A Churchwoman had expressed her desire for services and a Church School, and Archdeacon Jenkins of Arizona was able to meet her request. On his first visit he found the only available place was an old adobe store, in temporary use as a school until the new school was built. It was unattractive, but the Archdeacon, quite undaunted, used the teacher's desk for an altar, with a white table cloth, a cross of clean laths, fresh twigs of creosote bush, and an American flag for a dossal. The Holy Communion was administered to six communicants, with a number of reverent children at the back of the room. In the afternoon all the children available were collected, and a Church School organized, with nine pupils and three teachers, the latter being one Romanist, one Episcopalian, and the wife of a Primitive Baptist.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

An Active Parish.

There has been much unusual activity going on in St. Paul's Parish, the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector, Waco, during the past six weeks. Of course, there have been the daily services during Lent, and they have been well attended. The Young People's Lenten Evenings have averaged around about ninety. This means that every Friday evening in Lent, except Good Friday, the boys and girls of the parish, fourteen and upwards, meet for instruction in the life and work of the Church, particularly in the work of Missions. And after they have had a program around the supper table in the parish house, they adjourn to the church for a devotional service and an address on the Christian life. These meetings this year have been the most satisfactory that we have ever had.

From the thirtieth of March through the sixth of April a Mission was held by our two laymen, Messrs. E. C. Mercer and H. H. Hadley. These men have a real message to give. Their own experiences constitute a real and unassailable form of evidence of the power of the living Christ to restore a broken life, and to bring back to the high places of a man, the heart that has been degraded by defection from the truth. With prophetic power they call to their fellow laymen to face the dangers that confront people today, and to rise to a sense of their Christian responsibility to meet these dangers with courage and with triumph. They have but one recommendation to make, and that is the consecration of the heart and the will to the leadership of Jesus Christ. It is a story often told, but these two men have a way of telling it that causes it to appeal with peculiar power to those who hear them.

Some of our other Lenten activities have been—a weekly service in the county jail, a weekly service conducted in the neighborhood of St. Paul's House, both being in charge of Mr. John Roak; and also in St. Paul's House one night in each week the laymen of the parish have been conducting services that have been well attended by the mill population, and, seemingly, much appreciated.

The Sunday School has shown steady progress within the past six weeks. The attendance has increased about twenty per cent, and it is still growing. The confirmation class is now being instructed. Bishop Kinsolving expecting to visit St. Paul's on the first Sunday in May.

Among other activities has been a Bible study class on Monday by the Woman's Auxiliary, and under the auspices of the Altar Guild every Friday a study class in "Our Church One Through the Ages," a new book written by the rector of St. Paul's, has been conducted by Mrs. R. G. Patton. And every Wednesday afternoon St. Paul's Guild has been studying the same book under the leadership of Mrs. Forest Goodman.

St. Paul's Parish has the unusual record at present of having three young men as postulants looking forward to the ministry, and one applicant who is preparing herself for deaconess' Orders.

Plans have already been drawn for the enlargement of St. Paul's House, which is the social settlement and missionary center in our community of this parish. The work there is progressing along all lines in a most encouraging manner.

The parish choir has recently been enlarged by the addition of boys. This has made it necessary to enlarge also the chancel of the church for the accommodation of the additional members of the choir.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

To the Clergy and Congregations of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

Brethren: The National Council, which has the care of the missionary work of our Church, has sent out an appeal to all of our congregations for help in securing three millions of dollars for reconstruction of the Church in Japan, which suffered so grievously from the earthquake. Every congregation in the Church will be asked to make a special offering for this fund on Sunday, May 25. I ask your prayers and sympathy for this work, and I earnestly commend the appeal, and trust that in every congregation in the Diocese the offering will be made on the appointed day to help those who are our Brethren in Christ.

Faithfully and affectionately,
Beverley D. Tucker,
Bishop of Southern Virginia.

"Old Brick Church."

The Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., rector of Old St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, and President of the Old Brick Church Association, made a visit to Smithfield for the purpose of meeting the Executive Committee of the Association.

At a meeting held at the home of the Misses Todd in Smithfield many matters in connection with the Association were discussed and which are vital to its interest. These will be brought out at the annual meeting to be held at the Old Brick Church early in June.

The Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, of Richmond, Va., was selected to make the address and the date has been fixed for the fifth of June. The accustomed provision will be made for the entertainment of guests at the meeting and every provision for their comfort.

Needed repairs have been made to the walls of the Church and graves that were in need of it were restored to good condition. This was done according to a resolution passed at the last annual meeting held in 1923.

All of the friends of the Old Brick Church of Isle of Wight County will be interested in the coming. Pilgrimage to the old shrine, where we feel that they will be assured of a spiritual feast as they gather around the table within these ancient walls.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Japan Reconstruction Fund.

In connection with the effort on the part of the National Council to provide a fund of three million dollars for reconstruction in Japan, it has been decided that the canvass in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia will be conducted through the diocesan office and under the direction of the Diocesan Treasurer.

While no definite assessment or apportionment has been laid upon this Diocese, it is felt that Southwestern Virginia will not fail to carry its proper share of this burden as it has on others. This is simply a case of necessity in the matter of meeting an emergency that could not possibly have been foreseen and the members of the Church in this Diocese as well as others will undoubtedly take a common sense view of the situation and do their utmost toward rebuilding in the shortest possible time the churches, hospitals, etc., that were destroyed by the earthquake and the resulting fire in Japan.

Memorials at Bristol.

In memory of the late Mrs. Selina U. Fulkerson, who died in 1918, the Woman's Auxiliary of Emmanuel, Bristol, recently presented to the church two gold altar vases, bearing appropriate inscription. Mrs. Fulkerson was born in Clarksville, Tenn., and became the wife of the late Abram Fulkerson, Colonel of the Sixty-third Tennessee Regiment, C. S. A. The family moved to Bristol at the close of the Civil War, and Mrs. Fulkerson, a devoted Church woman, was one of the founders of the Episcopal congregation in Bristol. Her son, Captain S. V. Fulkerson, is the present Senior Warden of Emmanuel Church.

Conference of Treasurers.

On the afternoon of May 19, the day preceding the opening of the Annual Council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, in Grace Church, Lynchburg, it is planned to hold a conference of parish and missions treasurers of the Diocese. At this time the treasurers will meet and discuss their mutual problems, methods and plans, with a view to promoting the greatest possible efficiency in the conduct of the parish finances and especially their relation to the Diocese and the General Church.

Southwestern Virginia has achieved and held a remarkable place among the Dioceses in the American Church in the matter of its contributions to general missions and this conference of treasurers will undoubtedly be of the greatest value, both to the individuals and to the Diocese at large in increasing enthusiasm among the treasurers and promoting systematic methods in their work.

A Correction.

There was a serious misstatement of fact in our issue of April 5, in regard to the Religious Pageant held at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie on March 23. It was said by our correspondent that the rector "omitted Evening Prayer." Evening Prayer was said, as announced at the morning service, at 3:15, before the pageant (which began at four o'clock), to a congregation of about one hundred and fifty.

The Observance of Lent in New York.

Each year Lent is observed by more religious bodies, and this year in New York Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and even Baptists employed the words "Palm Sunday," "Holy Week" and "Good Friday." Many issued Lenten calendars, and some maintained daily services throughout the season. More noon-day services were conducted, until New York's 1924 Lenten total was eighteen. In the Madison Square and theatre districts Lutherans rented halls, and filled them. Trinity and other churches began the season with all pews filled, and ended it with crowds turned away. Some churches carry on with famous preachers, while others, like Grace and the Incarnation parishes, utilized their own clergy staffs. A few use prominent lay people.

It is the conviction of many persons that the controversies over doctrines have stirred up interest such as has rarely obtained. Discussion has been had by Methodists within the week about the starting of daily newspapers in three principal cities, New York one of them, devoted to religious and educational news. The talk at once brought out statements that New York newspapers now print far more Church news than ever, print it in better shape, and at least two of them plan larger things looking to more and better publicity for Church and educational causes.

In Roosevelt House in Holy Week laymen of national prominence spoke on various forms of Christian work—work that begins where sermons end. Definite mention was made of work to be done, and offer was made of training without charge, the condition being that men trained should work. About one thousand business and professional men offer in all. On one day Christian leaders conferred about forms of training for volunteers, and the placing of instruction upon a permanent and sound educational basis.

A Call To Service.

In St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck, the Rev. Frank Dean Clifford, rector, something quite new in the Diocese of New York, if not in the whole Church, was done on the fifth Sunday in Lent. Efforts were made to have at the morning service on that Sunday the representative members of the parish. The service was the regular Holy Communion, but there were sermon and address, not just sermon. The rector confined his sermon to the spiritual part, his own, but directed the spiritual toward volunteer service.

The superintendent of the Sunday School, who is a member of the vestry and foremost volunteer worker of the parish, gave the address immediately following the sermon. In it he refrained from argument that men ought to work, saying sermons present the fact constantly. Then he expressly omitted mention of work by women, saying the first and greatest need is that men take hold. He mentioned specific tasks, and in each case called for volunteer workers.

Now it is announced that volunteers are to be offered training at such times as suits their convenience. There are not to be classes, and the rector is not to take on more burdens. Each man whether offering or not is to be conferred with, and helped to enter upon Christian service where he is, what he prefers to do, and in any form. In the plan St. Thomas' Church is cooperating with other churches, with the educators in the schools, and with the present volunteer organizations.

Celebrate Eighty Years of Service.

The Seamen's Church Institute held a meeting in St. Thomas' Church to celebrate eighty years of service by it to men of the merchant service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Stires, and addresses made by officers of the Institute. Because of the growth of the work an appeal is made for $1,000,000 with which to enlarge it. Years ago a building to accommodate two hundred and fifty men was thought to be ample. One now takes care of five hundred to seven hundred and fifty, and the purpose now is to create one taking care of 1,500. Land has been purchased for the extension. Almost ninety per cent of the men cared for are Americans, and go to sea on ships flying the American flag. A wonderful service was rendered by the Institute during the World War.

Memorial Font Unveiled.

In St. George's Church on Palm Sunday there was unveiled a font in memory of Elise Ward Hering. Mrs. Hering was herself a sculptress and closely associated with Augustus St. Gaudens. The font in question is a copy of a model in clay, which Mrs. Hering executed in Paris while studying there. It is erected by her husband and other friends. Upon the death of St. Gaudens Mrs. Hering was commissioned to finish some important work which the famous man left.

Successful Mission.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, of Port Washington, L. I., held a brief three days' mission at St. John's Church, Washington, the Rev. James T. Carney, rector, beginning April 2.

Notwithstanding the heaviest snowfall of the entire winter, and the resultant unideal condition of the roads, the attendance at the services was gratifying, and the interest of all who attended the mission was noticeable for its intensity.

Mr. Bentley has marked ability as a missionary, and made a very strong and favorable impression on those who heard him preach.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

A Preaching Mission was conducted by the Rev. J. A. Schaad in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Ga., during the first week in March. The rector of the parish, the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, died on the eve of the opening of the mission, and the missionary was a great comfort to the bereaved parishioners.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church (the Rev. J. D. Miller, rector), Savannah, reports a successful four weeks' Sunday evening attendance campaign, the increase on the last Sunday being 500 per cent. The following Sunday the attendance showed an increase of 300 per cent over the opening of the campaign. Mr. Edward A. Shields, Provincial Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, spoke to the congregation on the evening of March 30, and after service met with the men and arranged for a probationary chapter of the Brotherhood. The treasurer's report of this parish for the first quarter showed the pledges for parish support paid up 90 per cent, but those for the Church's Mission not as good. The vestry is urging all members to pay up all pledges before the Diocesan Convention in May.

St. John's Church, Moultrie, has had a second gift of $1,000, and with only a small amount required to finish the building, it is expected that it will be completed in a short while. The Bishop of the Diocese will make an appeal for the balance at the Diocesan Convention acting on a resolution of the Executive Council.

A Bible class of men and women, which meets during the Church school period, has recently been organized in St. Paul's Church (the Rev. S. B. McGlohon, rector), Savannah, and is conducted by Mr. R. Y. Marlow, Superintendent of the Church School.

Meeting of the Clericus.

The Clericus met in the rector's study at St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, Tuesday, April 8, and listened with interest to an essay on the Devotional Life of the Clergy, read by the Rev. Dr. Graham, rector of Calvary Church. Many excellent things were suggested, which, if lived, would add much to the peace and happiness of all pastors.

The hour for the noon-day Lenten service having arrived the members went into the church, where they heard an excellent sermon by the Rev. Murray W. Dewart of Christ Church, Baltimore. After this twenty minutes' service, the clergy repaired to Holt's Cafe, where, as the guests of Mr. John S. Grohe, Treasurer of the Diocese, they enjoyed a luncheon, at which the Rev. Mr. Dewart and the Rev. Dr. Sonne, Presbyterian "Churchman," were guests.

The Peninsula Summer School will be held at Ocean City, Maryland, June 24-29, 1924. Special rates for board have been secured at "The Hastings."

An Interesting Meeting of Laymen.

An organization of vestrymen and members of Chapel and Mission Committees was effected Thursday night, April 10, at a meeting of laymen in Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia.

The new body of laymen, to be known as "The Associated Vestries of the Diocese of Pennsylvania," will have for its chief object the banding of the interests of the laymen of the church.

Recent Bequests.

A gift of $3,000 to the Children's Seashore House, Atlantic City, for endowment of three free beds, is one of the many public bequests made by Annie D. Arrison, Germantown, whose will was probated last week. A bequest of $500 each were made as follows: Protestant Episcopal City Missions, to be expended for the benefit of children; Children's Aid Society of Pennsylvania; Children's Homeopathic Hospital; St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va.; St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C.; Whosoever Gospel Mission, Germantown, and Children's Playground Association of Philadelphia.

The testatrix also bequeathed $200 each to the Sunday Breakfast Association, Christmas Fund of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and the Boys' Club of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia.

Confirmation Service at Prison.

The rite of confirmation was administered to a number of women prisoners in the convict department of Moyamensing Prison on Friday afternoon, April 11, by Bishop Cook, of Delaware, who is assisting Bishop Garland in taking confirmation appointments. For several months the women had been under preparation for confirmation. Five of the class are serving long terms. The class was presented to Bishop Cook by the Rev. Alfred M. Smith, of the Episcopal City Mission staff.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Alleyne Carleton Howell, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church, Sewickley, has been selected to have charge of the Japanese Reconstruction Fund, in the Diocese of Pittsburgh. He has established his headquarters at the Diocesan Offices, Trinity House, and is already actively engaged in the prosecution of the project.

The Third Ingathering of the United Thank Offering of 1924, will be held on May 8 at St. James' Memorial Church, Pittsburgh. The Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., will celebrate the Holy Communion, and Dean Tucker, of London, Ontario, will make the address. Luncheon will be served by the ladies of the parochial branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. In the afternoon there will be a pageant presented by the Department of Pageantry.

Large Attendance at Lenten Services: There has been an unusually large attendance this season at the noon-day Lenten services, given under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh. The church has been filled to capacity almost every day. During the first three days of Holy Week the addresses were made by the Bishop of Pittsburgh. These services have been broadcasted by radio, and have been heard by thousands outside the city.

Preaching Mission at Holy Trinity, Gainesville.

Holy Trinity Parish, Gainesville, the Rev. R. B. Templeton, rector, has enjoyed the very great pleasure and privilege of a two weeks' Preaching Mission by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D. Dr. Clark is a man of unusual combinations, deeply spiritual; his sermons are of the evangelistic type, and yet wholly different from most sermons dealing directly with decisions in spiritual matters. They are lucid and illuminating, yet with a profound analytical conception and interpretation that reveals a breadth of scholarship interesting, instructive and entertaining at the same time. For illustrations, he draws from his wide range of experience, his scholarship in history, science and literature.

Dr. Clark has made himself felt in this university city, both among the students and professors.

Memorials Dedicated.

Several memorials have recently been presented and dedicated in the Church of the Ascension, Middletown, the Rev. Thom Williamson, Jr., rector.

These memorials consist of four brass altar candlesticks and a chancel Prayer Book. The Prayer Book was presented to the parish by Mrs. Gay Bevis in memory of Charles Wesley Rain. Of the four candlesticks, one was presented by Mrs. C. L. Langenberg, in memory of her mother, Augusta M. Carpenter; one by Mrs. F. W. Huber and her sister, Mrs. Norman C. Schlichter, of Annville, Pa., in memory of their mother, Nell McCormack Wolfe; one by Mr. H. W. Rinearson, in memory of his father, W. C. Rinearson; and one by Mr. Fred Tobitt, in memory of his father, John E. Tobitt.

With the gift of these four candlesticks the altar of the Church of the Ascension now has six candlesticks, two flower vases and the cross. This enables the altar to have lights on it at all services, and the beautiful effect of these lights is much appreciated, even by those who had not been accustomed to seeing altar lights.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

A Remarkable Record.

A souvenir bulletin, commemorating the opening of the new $85,000 parish house recently erected by St. James' Parish, Wilmington, contains information which constitutes a remarkable record of achievement. This parish, under the leadership of the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., has won a place of national leadership. No parish in the whole Church is better organized for effective work, or more responsive to the demands made upon it. The financial report of the vestry for the year ended December 31, 1923, showed receipts of $89,763.27, more than $70,000 of which was contributed in pledges and gifts without any drive whatever. Of this amount $16,611 was spent for diocesan and General Church objects. $47,096.34 of the total amount was applied to the erection of the new parish house, which is one of the handsomest in the country.

Successful Lenten Services.

The attendance upon Lenten services in East Carolina has been better this year than ever before, according to reports from the clergy. In the majority of the parishes and missions there have been daily services. One feature of the services this year has been the large part assigned to the young people. Junior choirs have been organized in a number of churches, and have sung at all of the services.

As an illustration of what can be accomplished in a small church and small town through faithful and efficient leadership, there was a class of eighteen persons in a recent confirmation class at St. James', Bellhaven. The class would have been larger, but several candidates were prevented from attending the service because of the epidemic of measles. The church reported only seventy-five communicants last year. The rector, the Rev. J. N. Bynum, recently begun his sixth year of service.

A district group meeting of Church women held in Emmanuel Church, Farmville, N. C., on March 24, was a great success. Two interesting papers were read by Mesdames W. C. Askew, of Farmville, and W. H. Ricks, of Greenville, and there was a round table discussion of the plans and problems of the church organizations in the group. The Rev. J. W. Heyes, rector of Emmanuel Church, conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. J. D. Cox, of Winterville, is president of the group.

Mr. E. A. Shields, field director of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, visited several parishes in East Carolina recently. He made addresses at St. Paul's, Wilmington, and Christ Church, New Bern, where there are active chapters. Conferences were held looking to the establishment of several new chapters.

The Convocation of Colored Church Workers in the Diocese is scheduled to meet with St. Andrew's Church, Goldsboro, N. C., May 3-6, according to an announcement recently sent out by the dean, the Rev. E. S. Willett, rector of St. Mark's, Wilmington. St. Andrew's, under the leadership of the Rev. J. E. Holder, has recently undergone extensive improvements, preparatory to the meeting of Convocation.

Several new parish papers have recently been established in East Carolina, the latest being "The Parish Visitor," issued by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of Christ Church, New Bern. The Rev. D. G. MacKinnon, rector of Christ Church, is editor. The paper presents an unusually attractive appearance.

Cathedral School For Girls Receives $30,000.

Bishop Mann was the delighted recipient recently of a check for $30,000, this unexpected gift being the generous response of a Churchwoman at Palm Beach, Mrs. Charles D. Vail, after hearing the Bishop state that the Cathedral School for Girls, in Orlando, needed an additional building as a music hall. That this would probably cost $30,000, toward which a fund of about $10,000 had been partly contributed and partly pledged. Mrs. Vail desired to give this building as a memorial, her generosity and interest being most deeply appreciated. The fund of $10,000 toward starting such building had been raised to mark the tenth year of Bishop Mann's charge of this field.

Conference of Colored Workers.

The first diocesan conference of Colored workers met recently with Bishop Mann at St. Peter's Church, Key West. The four Colored priests of this Diocese attended, with lay delegates from Tampa, Miami, Cocanut Grove and Key West, the opening service crowded by the large attendance of the local congregation. Excellent addresses were made by the clergy and helpful discussion held on topics concerning the conditions, the needs and the opportunities of work among the Colored people. This conference was found so satisfactory that its members have planned to meet annually, the next meeting to be in Tampa early in 1925.

New Church at West Palm Beach.

Members of Holy Trinity Parish, West Palm Beach, have long looked forward to the completion of their beautiful new church and are rejoicing over its use now for services. This church is of Spanish mission architecture, has a seating capacity of six hundred and fifty and cost $100,000. A beautiful altar is being made in Italy, this a memorial gift from one of the parishioners. A healing mission was conducted here by Dr. Gaynor Banks during the week following February 24, the services having large attendance, with helpful results.

A Progressive Parish.

Under the zealous leadership of Rev. F. A. Shore a rapid progress has been made in St. Luke's parish, Fort Myers. From a small mission it has become a progressive parish, its members rejoicing over a large new parish house and a rectory while working toward erecting a suitable church. The two buildings they have erected cost over $40,000 and are fully paid for; also are well furnished, the parish house providing temporarily for services.

Mission Services Resumed.

Many years ago the first church of any kind to be erected in Pinellas County was for St. Bartholomew's Mission at St. Petersburg. This was put where it was thought the town, then scarce started, would center. But instead, the little church was left two miles from the town center, and a better location was supplied for the present parish church of St. Peter's. For some fifteen years the early church has been without services, though kept in repair by the vestry of St. Peter's parish, till now, with the rapid growth of St. Petersburg, another congregation has gathered near St. Bartholomew's and regular services have been resumed under charge of the Rev. H. J. Leake.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. T. P. Thurston, D. D., Bishop.

Christ Church, El Reno, has a very fine branch of the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses. There are about thirty members in the branch. A most inspiring service was held under the leadership of the clergyman in charge of Christ Church, the Rev. John A. Gardner, on the evening of the fourth Sunday in Lent.

Plans are being made for the holding of a Churchmen's Dinner, Wednesday, May 21, at the Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City. Bishop Thurston and the Rev. S. Arthur Huston, rector, St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas, are to be the speakers. The dinner is being given under the auspices of the Cathedral Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Associated Men's Bible Classes of the District. It promises to be most successful.

Oklahoma has just lost another clergyman, in the resignation of Archdeacon Jamison, of the Western part of the State.

Collect for Easter Even.

Grant, O Lord, that as we are baptized into the death of Thy Blessed Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ, so by continually mortifying our corrupt affections we may be buried with Him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for His merits, Who died, and was buried, and rose again for us, Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Easter Day.

Almighty God, Who through Thine only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, hast overcome death and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; we humbly beseech Thee that, as by Thy special grace preventing us, Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect, through Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for St. Mark's Day.

O Almighty God, Who hast instructed Thy Holy Church with the heavenly doctrine of Thy Evangelist Saint Mark; Give us grace that, being not like children carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may be established in the truth of Thy Holy Gospel; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

In Joseph's Garden.

M. G. B.

In Joseph's garden, sweet with dew and flowers,
Mary of Magdalen knelt, and, weeping prayed
To One Who asked the meaning of her tears.
"Where have ye laid Him—I would bear Him hence."
So low the answer came it scarce was heard,
Even in the holy stillness of that quiet place;
But thrillingly its message reached her heart
And turned her sorrow into deepest joy
For lo! "He saith unto her, 'Mary!'"
Behold, He stands, victorious over death,
And generations wait to hear the word He brings.
What mysteries half sensed by groping minds,
Shall now unfolded be; what visions bright
Of life past life; what gleams transcendent caught
From realms beyond all power of man's imagining
May He reveal! Clear to His steadfast gaze Stand open all God's worlds—and all man's woes,

And lo; "He saith unto her, 'Mary!'"

Oh, Risen Christ! What love but Thine had known
To speak that word. What healing deeper than all thought
It brings to broken hopes and wounded hearts,
This, Thine own pledge, that love outliveth death!
Dear memories of earth throng through the tones
That speak that name, renewal of each tie that bound
Her heart to His. Take comfort, weary ones,
Death hath no power to break the bands of love,
For lo! He saith unto her, "Mary!"

The Historic Fact of the Resurrection.

On Easter morning the prophecies which seemed so impossible were nevertheless fulfilled. When the angel declared "He is risen" he declared a fact that could not be questioned. The evidence of the Resurrection was before the eyes of these women. The body which they sought was not there. The place where they had laid it with such tender care was empty. But the evidence was not yet complete, and as they presently turned away from the tomb with fear and wonder in their hearts the Master Himself met them and said, "All hail!" There could be no further doubt or question in their minds. The Saviour Whom they had seen crucified and Whose body had been laid in the tomb had risen. They could not understand it. It was contrary to all reason and all experience, but it was a fact that they could no longer doubt, and with a strange joy in their hearts they hastened away to find the disciples and make known to them the soul-stirring news.

The women were convinced of the reality of the resurrection by the evidence presented to them. Later on the disciples were likewise convinced by what they heard and saw. Today there are those who appear to doubt the reality of Our Lord's resurrection because it is altogether a supernatural occurrence, but the evidence for the historicity of the resurrection of Jesus Christ is stronger today than it was on that first Easter Day so long ago.

Every Christian Church in the world today is a silent witness to the historic fact of Christ's resurrection. For if Jesus had not risen from the tomb and appeared unto His disciples there would have been no Christian Church. If the body of Jesus had remained in the grave, He would soon have been forgotten and it is doubtful whether His name would have been known a hundred years later. The disciples had naturally abandoned all hope when their Lord expired upon the cross. Their only desire was to get back as quickly as possible to their old homes and their former manner of life and to forget as quickly as they could the supreme disappointment of their lives. Nothing short of the resurrection of their Lord could have begotten them again unto a lively hope and sent them forth to carry to the uttermost parts of the world the Gospel of the Crucified Christ. The Christian religion rests upon the fact of Christ's resurrection, and the mere fact that it exists in the world today, is an evidence of the historic fact that Jesus Christ rose from the tomb.

The fact that you and I are here this morning is likewise an evidence of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Jewish sabbath began at sunset on Friday and lasted until the same hour of the day following. For nearly nineteen hundred years hundreds of thousands of people assemble for the worship of Almighty God on the first day of the week rather than on the seventh. Why the change? Why is it that the vast majority of Americans regard Sunday as their Sabbath rather than Saturday? Because this is the Lord's Day consecrated for all time to come by the fact that on this day the Lord rose from the grave. The fact that we are here in this church on the first day of the week is a silent testimony to the historic fact of Christ's resurrection.

Saint Paul in that wonderful fifteenth chapter of his first Epistle to the Corinthians gives a list of the witnesses who with their own eyes had seen the risen Christ. Eleven appearances of the Saviour are recorded during the forty days that intervened between His resurrection and His ascension. At one time He was seen of above five hundred persons at once, and at the time that Saint Paul wrote this epistle he declares that many of these eye-witnesses were still living and that their testimony might be obtained.

In addition to all the testimony from the past there is the ever present testimony of the Holy Spirit Who makes known to believing hearts the fact that the great Head of the Church is not a dead Christ, but is alive forevermore.

There is no reason then why any one should look upon the resurrection of Jesus as a mere doctrine of the Church. It is not a doctrine, but a fact. Some one has very well said that if a man were to say that he does not believe that such a character as Julius Caesar ever lived and that the story of his assassination in the Roman Senate is a mere myth, we would not say of this man that he was lacking in faith, but that he was without common sense and ordinary intelligence. So when we meet a man who doubts the Resurrection of Jesus Christ we do not feel disposed to attribute it to a lack of faith but to a lack of knowledge and common sense. So far as I myself am aware, there is no fact in all the range of history more incontestably established than the historic fact that on the first Easter Day Jesus Christ Our Saviour rose from the tomb.—Dr. G. A. Getty, in Lutheran.

A Highland Communion.

A Highland Communion Sabbath is much more of a great "occasion" than a Lowland one. For one thing the services are double, so while Dr. Lindsay officiated in the Church in English, Mr. Mackenzie took the Gaelic service in the meeting house.

The day held a holy hush—it seemed as if even Nature knew it was God's own day. From far and near the folks gathered. It is rather a pretty custom which requires that every woman shall have on her best and newest garments to do honor to the day, and that every man who possesses a black suit and a tall hat shall don the same on the Communion Sabbath. White shirts, too, are the order of the day, at once the pride and despair of their wearers (who have been known to go home with their stiff collars in their pockets to the scandal of their women-folk, and their own vast comfort).

The little band of elders, all clad in their decent best blacks, sat beneath the pulpit, the solemn and sacred elements spread on a linen-covered table before them. A strange custom prevails of leaving the tables empty until the time comes to "serve" them. Then, with slow and reverent tread, the members come forward to "remember their Lord."

The Doctor preached, as only he could do, on the words, "What think ye, that He will not come to the feast?" Very clearly he proved that He had come to this feast, that His presence filled the house on this His holy day. After a rapturous hour, he invited all those who loved their Lord to take their places at His table.

Whilst the members were coming forward, Angus, the precentor, chanted line after line of the 116th Psalm. "I love the Lord, because my voice," Angus sang in strange tuneful voice. "I love the Lord because my voice," the congregation echoed. So on line after line the sweet song was sung. The Tables by this time were almost full. The Doctor had come down from the pulpit, and was standing among the elders.

"Yet there is room," he said, as the last note of the psalm died away. "We shall sing other four lines beginning at the words, 'I'll of salvation take the cup'." Again the strange chant rang through the church. Angus had reached the words, "On God's name will I call," when a couple sitting near the door rose, and with downcast faces and beating hearts took the places they had left empty for six long years.

"I'll pay my vows now to the Lord," chanted Angus, and two new voices, rather tremulously, sang the words after him.

Something had moved the Doctor. He stood, a notable figure, with his splendid reverence and dignity, and with a strangely uplifted expression on his face. A solemn hush filled the church. Women trembled, they knew not why, and men gripped their jaws lest they shame themselves. Then the Doctor's voice began to read, "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, how that the Lord Jesus the same night in which He was betrayed took bread," and so on through what is surely one of the most solemn and soul-searching chapters in the Bible. "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I go hence," were the words of his "Table address."

In the prayer which followed the Unseen seemed very real, very near. Old Granny Bruce, the deafest woman in the parish, said afterwards, "I did not hear a word he said; but I knew the Lord did, for He was nearer him than I was, and I was in the front seat."

The sacred elements were now uncovered, and with reverent hand the Doctor handed them to the waiting elders. "This is My body broken for you. This cup is the New Testament of My blood—this do, in remembrance of Me."

Slowly and carefully, down either aisle, the elders filed, bearing in their hands the vessels of the Lord. After all had been served, the Doctor, still standing among the elders, said a few words to help and sustain the members when the world and Monday morning should claim them again.

Like a great shout of triumph, and to the stirring notes of "Effingham," the last psalm was sung. "Oh, thou, my soul, bless God the Lord." David Macintyre, moved and inspired, lifted his eyes from his book to meet the understanding eyes of the Doctor, fixed upon him. Then he sang in his rich bass voice, and every one knows the rapture of the bass of Effingham:

"Who doth redeem my life, that thou
To death may'st not go down."
—From "The Doctor."

The Overcoming of Death.

Stevenson tells of a lad who was shipwrecked on an island in the West of Scotland. He was not very far from the mainland, which lay mocking him with its little homesteads and its look of smiling comfort, while he wandered on the islet—a prisoner—with the deep closing him in. One day when near the very depth of despair he hailed a passing boat expecting to be taken off. In reply the fishermen only smiled and shouted some message which he found it difficult to catch, but at last the truth flashed into his mind. He ran to where the shore came nearest to the mainland, and found that the sea which had looked so deep was now sunk at low tide to a mere trickle of water across which he waded with ease. In a moment the sea's ugly threat of separation was abolished. The terror was only make-believe. What looked an impassable sea was really a ford. In the same way death is a small thing when you have seen Christ's vision of life. It is only a gateway to a larger world—a passage where our feet

Fall on the seeming void
And find the rock beneath.

We were made for a higher sphere than this deathgirt island we call earth. Christ awakens the dormant instinct for the infinite. How does Christ make us sure of immortality? It is a spiritual secret. The assurance of immortality is a product of experience of the love of God which comes through trusting Christ; and trusting that love means committing our life to its promises and its challenges and its rebukes. What happens then? Our souls break into life as a tree into leaf in every bough with the coming of the spring sunlight. And the life which is eternal is born in our souls. Is there one who has lost it? Begin again with the life of trust in Christ, launching out on the ocean of life in that mighty fellowship. As you sail through the mists into the far horizons you will begin to descry the land that is very far off. Bit by bit the spiritual world will become your world, taking you up into itself, till at last death will be only the "Golden Gate" which opens upon everything—upon life and love and God.—James Reid, M. A.

An Edict By Caesar.

The world of us ordinary folks is deeply in debt to the explorers and archaeologists, who dig into ancient ruins and explore historic sites. Their work is wearisome, discouraging, and often done in an atmosphere of hostile suspicion.

The Roman edict under which Christ was tried has been discovered in Tunisia. A despatch from Paris says it has been discovered in Southern Tunisia. The document reads: "To all Colonial governors of the Roman Empire in Palestine and near and further Asia: Prophets and religious revolutionists have arisen among the people. These are not to be interfered with under Roman law except when their teachings are of such nature as to cause disturbance among the people, but in such cases they are to be effectively suppressed. It is particularly desirable that prophets be not allowed to interfere with the collection of taxes or any other political affair." The edict is signed by Augustus Caesar.—Exchange.

Rodin's Philosophy.

Rodin, the sculptor, thought clearly and rationally on other subjects as well as on art. On one occasion—so we learn from his secretary, Mr. Anthony M. Ludovici in the Cornhill Magazine—a certain visitor remarked that where self-sacrifice achieved no lasting good it should be discouraged.

As an example of what she meant she described a certain family, the mother of which was old and bed-ridden and had as her permanent attendant her youngest daughter, a fine-looking young woman of marriageable age. Now, argued Rodin's visitor, surely it was to be deplored that there was no legislation or public tradition that could prevent a young and useful life from wearing itself away in such unproductive and depressing toil, however sublimely unselfish the toil might be, for by the time the mother died her devoted daughter would find herself left useless and alone, broken and debilitated by her life of sacrifice.

Rodin listened attentively, as was his wont and, when asked for his views on the question, replied: "Certainly I agree with you, mademoiselle, that the loss to the world of such a young and beautiful life is lamentable. I think as you do that it is not a pleasant sight to watch a youthful and desirable creature wearing herself away in a gloomy sick room. But have you thought of the alternative? Is it not a thousand times better that one person, like the young woman you speak of, should be broken and debilitated by a life of self-sacrifice than that the principle for which she strove—the principle of filial piety—should vanish from this cruel world and leave suffering humanity much poorer than it is at present?"

The Easter Guest.

Mrs. Adam P. Wilson.

The Easter lilies raised their stately heads
Amid the banks of flowers, rich and rare;
Within the earthly temple of Our Lord,
As many wealthy came to worship there.
Each head was bowed in prayer and reverent awe
As the deep tones of the great organ rolled.
There was the shimmer of bright satin and silk.
The glittering of jewels and of gold.
Then as each face toward the Altar turned
A sight most strange indeed met every eye:
A very shabby little maiden stood
Besides the flowers, and with a gesture shy
Was placing there a single blossom white;
Then softly touched her reverent lips thereto
And gliding swiftly, noiselessly away
Sought refuge safe within a darkened pew.
The watchers gave a quick sigh of relief
And settled down to their accustomed calm.
But the fair, holy face of the little maid
Seemed hovering over each page of hymn or psalm;
No room there was for scorn of the slight act
Nor whisper of "intrusion"—nay each breast
Was stirred with love, as if indeed, perchance,
The Risen Christ Himself had been their Guest.

For the Young Folks

Easter Hymn.

O sons and daughters, let us sing!
The King of Heaven, the glorious King,
O'er death today rose triumphing.
Alleluia!

That Easter morn, at break of day,
The faithful women went their way
To seek the tomb where Jesus lay.
Alleluia!

An angel clad in white they see,
Who sat, and spake unto the three,
"Your Lord doth go to Galilee."
Alleluia!

That night the apostles met in fear;
Amidst them came their Lord most dear,
And said, "My peace be on all here."
Alleluia!

When Thomas first the tidings heard,
How they had seen the risen Lord,
He doubted the disciples' word.
Alleluia!

"My pierced hands, O Thomas, see;
My hands, my feet, I show to thee;
Not faithless, but believing me."
Alleluia!

No longer Thomas then denied,
He saw the feet, the hands, the side;
"Thou art my Lord and God," he cried.
Alleluia!

How blest are they who have not seen,
And yet whose faith has constant been,
For they eternal life shall win.
Alleluia!

On this most holy day of days,
To God your hearts and voices raise,
In laud, and jubilee, and praise.
Alleluia!

A Queer Easter Lily.

It was the Saturday before Easter, and Dorothy was curled up in the corner of the low window seat in the library, overlooking the park.

Such a cozy room as it was, with its books and marbles, its deep, leather-covered easy chairs and its wide, comfortable couch heaped high with crimson cushions. The flickering light of a wood fire danced on the brass andirons, played at hide-and-seek in Dorothy's tangled curls, and kissed into a faint glow a tall Easter lily in the opposite corner of the window seat.

Easter came very early that year, and there were patches of snow here and there on the lawn, while the trees in the park were still brown and bare. It was growing dark outside, and lights were beginning to twinkle in the houses on the opposite side of the avenue, but Dorothy did not see them, so intent was she on her own thoughts.

The room was very still, so still that she started violently when Tags, the Skye terrier, snuggled his cold nose into her hand with a low whine, as much as to say, "I'm lonesome; why don't you talk to me?"

"I don't care. I was thinking of what Miss Sinclair said last Sunday 'bout making somebody else happy tomorrow, somebody that wouldn't have any Easter unless we helped to give it to them. Guess if she'd planted an Easter lily bulb, an' waited weeks and weeks for it to come up, an' hadn't forgotten to water it one single morning, an' carried it around from one window to another so 'twould get every bit of sunshine and be sure to blossom for Easter—guess she wouldn't want to give it away, would she, Tags?"

Tags gave a quick, short bark of denial, but the beautiful lily bowed its head, and seemed to sigh softly.

As Dorothy caught its fragrant breath she spoke again, slowly, and half reluctantly:

"But then, Annie's sick, and Mrs. Simpkins don't have much money 'cept to buy food and things; and she was real good and sat up 'most all night to finish my new dress for Ruth's party. I s'pose Annie'd just love to have an Easter lily all her own. But, oh! I can't give you away, you beauties," jumping up to kiss the three white blossoms nodding in the firelight. "I can't! I can't!"

Just then the latch-key sounded in the outer door, and papa's voice was heard, calling, cheerily:

"What! All alone in the dark, sweetheart?"

And in they came, papa and mamma, bringing with them a rush of cold, frosty air. Dorothy ran to meet them, and for a time the lily was forgotten.

She did not think of it again till papa happened to say during dinner:

"By the way, Margaret, I saw Mrs. Simpkins down town today, and she said Annie is fretting her heart out because she can't go to church tomorrow and hear the music and see the flowers. I meant to stop at the florist's and buy her something, but meeting you on the car put it quite out of my head. You haven't a stray plant around the house anywhere, have you, that I could take over after dinner?"

"Why, no, George, I'm afraid I haven't. My lilies are not in bloom yet, and I cut all the other flowers and sent them to old Mrs. Gates this afternoon. I'm so sorry! I wish I could send the poor child something."

"Well, never mind," said papa. "Perhaps some one else will send her a lily." And then he went on to tell a funny story he had heard down town that day.

Dorothy laughed with the others, but she was very quiet all through the rest of the evening—so quiet that mamma looked at her rather anxiously once or twice, for Dorothy was not strong, and had been working harder than usual at school lately. However, she said nothing till Dorothy was tucked up in her little white bed for the night, and then it all came out.

Dorothy put her arms around her mother's neck and told her what Miss Sinclair had said the Sunday before; how she had planned to take her lily, very early the next morning, to the church, and ask the ladies in charge to put it in the chancel; how she didn't think she could give it up; "but," concluded Dorothy, sagely, "I s'pect that dear lily would a great deal rather go to Annie's little room and keep telling her 'Christ has risen', than go to the church where there'll be lots of other lilies all saying the same thing. But I shall be dreadful lonesome without it tomorrow, mamma, truly I shall."

Mamma smiled, as she kissed the sober face.

"Perhaps you will, darling, but I think your Easter will be a great deal happier if you give Annie the lily. Papa shall take it over tonight, so that she may see it the first thing in the morning. And now, good night, little girl, and pleasant dreams!"

When Dorothy awoke the next morning the first thing she saw was a lovely picture of "Easter Morning" on the wall opposite her bed, and on the table beside her was a bunch of purple violets.

It was a very bright little face that peeped into mamma's room a few minutes later, and a very happy little girl that cuddled down beside her to hear the story of that first glad Easter morning; but she couldn't help sighing a wee bit as she went down stairs to breakfast at the thought of the missing lily.

Going past the library door, she looked in, and there, in the very corner where the lily had stood, was another flower pot, and in the flower pot, on a green cambric cushion, was—what do you think?—the dearest little white pussy cat, with a pink ribbon around its neck, on which was a card which said: "From Annie to Dorothy. A Happy Easter."

And that's why Dorothy calls her kitten "Easter Lily."—"Lily" for short.—Mabelle P. Clapp.

Easter Blossoms. Eugenie du Maurier.

Each little bud and blossom comes peeping forth at dawn

To give Our Lord a welcome on Resurrection Morn.

Dear little human blossoms, awake without delay,

And twine yourselves in garlands around His tomb today!

Yes, some must weave a lily wreath, His thorn-torn brow to press:

For to Him there is no glory half so sweet as your caress.

And some must be the iris, and some the roses sweet;

And others lowly violets to kiss His wounded feet.

But whether fair and stately, or very small and shy,

You will be a guard of honor as Jesus passes by.

Make your souls like snowy petals, and your hearts like royal gold;

Each little self a chalice His love and grace to hold.

Oh! when the Easter carols in triumphant chorus ring,

'Tis sweet to be a blossom in the pathway of the King!

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

Mrs. E. Stirling Gunn.

It was a beautiful Easter morning, not many years ago, and the streets were full of people in bright clothes going to the churches to hear the joyful story of the Resurrection.

Mrs. Long and Elizabeth stepped from the porch of their home, dressed like the other happy people in flower-trimmed hats and pretty dresses, with carols in their hearts and faces aglow with the joy of Easter morning.

On the door-step stood little Janet in her morning dress, pleading to be allowed to go, too.

"Muvver!" she cried as they started down the path, "why can't Daddy and me go too—does God want us to stay at home?"

"Certainly God wants you at church, darling," answered the Mother, "but Father prefers to stay at home, and the church will be too crowded for my little girl. Run along now to Mammy, and be good till I get back. Then you shall be dressed and taken for your Easter walk."

With a troubled look the little girl called after her Mother, "Please, Muvver, give our love to the dear Lord. He was 'specting us today."

Mr. Long, busy with his morning paper in the sitting-room, heard this queer message, and the paper fell to the floor, while he sat thinking of it. The church might be too crowded to take a four-year-old, but what reason had he for staying away? Then as little Janet came in and climbed over his knee, he patted her head tenderly, saying:

"Don't worry, Janet, the dear Lord will see your Daddy in his place today!"

Before the beautiful service in St. Mark's had proceeded very far, Mrs. Long looked up in surprise to see her husband enter the family pew. And every Sunday after that he was in his place, with four-year-old Janet standing happily at his side, none the less devout in trying to follow the chants and prayers that her Prayer Book was upside down!

An Easter Thought.

The stars grow pale and disappear,

The sky shows pink with sunrise ray
Oh, day the best of all the year!

It is the dawn of Easter day.

Our doubts grow faint, faith rises strong,

Our hearts now own His rule and sway;
Break forth in Easter praise and song,
To celebrate our Easter day!

Easter Bunnies.

"I'd give you anything if I could only have a rabbit," said Bobby to sister Betty. "Don't you s'pose I could earn money enough to buy one?"

"No, Bobby, you know that every cent we can earn must go to help mother pay the rent," and Betty looked very sober.

The children were walking through the woods. Although it was nearly Easter, there were patches of snow on the ground that had not melted.

"Look!" Betty gasped, "under that evergreen tree!"

Bobby stared. "I don't see anything but two patches of snow. Oh! Oh! It's rabbits! They look just like snow, curled up asleep that way." Bobby's eyes sparkled with delight as he and Betty peeped under the evergreen branches at the sleeping rabbits.

"I always thought wild bunnies were brown," Bobby whispered.

"They turn brown in summer, and when winter comes they change to white again, so they will not show so plainly against the snow and get caught by their enemies; I read about them once in a book," Betty explained.

"I'll run home and get them some food," said Bobby, darting away.

Breathlessly he returned with some cabbage leaves, which he placed near the sleeping rabbits.

The children hid behind the branches to see what would happen. Almost instantly the rabbits sat up and sniffed the air, wiggling their little noses. It did not take them long to finish the leaves on the ground, so Bobby held out his hand toward them with another leaf. They disappeared like a flash into their burrow, when they saw Bobby, but the cabbage leaf was too tempting an offer to refuse, so they cautiously approached, and, to Bobby's great delight nibbled it from his fingers.

"Let's take them home," suggested

Betty. "We could make a pen for them."

"No," Bobby answered slowly; "I know they'd be very unhappy shut in. We'll let them live in their own burrow, but we can tame them very easily and have them for ours, just the same," he finished, brightly.

"Let's not tell any children about them, except lame Jack," Betty said. "We can bring him here Easter morning, and I'll share my bunny with him," she added generously.

When Easter came, Betty and Bobby brought lame Jack to the rabbit's hole. Peeking under the drooping evergreen boughs to see the rabbits, they had a delightful surprise themselves.

"Three bunnies!" squealed Betty, in delight. "One for Jack, too."

Jack's rabbit was nearly as tame as the other two, and let the children pat his soft back and ears.

"They are so tame, I know we can play with them all summer," Bobby said. "Won't it be fun to see them turn brown as summer comes. Bought bunnies could not do that. These change color, so they won't show so plainly against the green leaves," Bobby added, proud to tell Jack his recently acquired knowledge.

"I did not know that bunnies were so smart as to change their colors!" exclaimed Jack, wonderingly.

"They don't do it themselves," Betty said, "it must be God that does it for them, so they won't be noticed so easily by their enemies."

Each day the children hurried excitedly to the rabbits' burrow, eagerly watching for the first sign of brown summer coats. Such delightful times they had playing with the bunnies! And sure enough, as the weather grew mild and the snow melted, the brown fur began, as Betty had said it would.—The Child's Hour.

When Benny Was Lost.

By Mrs. W. Thorburn Clark.

Benny was lost and didn't know it; and that is the funny part of the story. Grandma thought he was lost, mamma was sure he was lost, Nora, the cook, was afraid he was lost, and Susie Yates, Mollie Duke, Tommie Davis, Billie French, Annie Brown and a lot of other boys and girls who helped to look for him, all thought he was lost. And this is how it happened.

Benny's little baby sister was ill, and the doctor said she must be kept very, very quiet. Grandma said, "Benny, if you will play at the sand pile so little sister can have her afternoon nap, when I call you to take your bath I will give you a penny and you can go with Nora to the corner grocery and get some candy."

Benny loved his little sister, and made up his mind to be very quiet, so he took his tin pail and shovel and Pinky, his little shaggy dog, and went out to play at the sand pile.

He made a big sand man, then he made big mountains and dug tunnels underneath them; also he hollowed out rivers and lakes and made frog houses on his bare feet. He played a long, long time, until he was very warm and very tired and covered with sand from the top of his little white curly head to his little bare toes, and still grandma did not call him. Once or twice he actually nodded while he was listening for her to call.

He felt sure that grandma had forgotten him, and couldn't wait for her another minute, so he picked up Pinky and left the sand pile.

Pretty soon grandma went to the back door and called softly, "Come, Benny, take your bath." But Benny didn't come, and then she went out to the sand pile and saw the tin pail and the shovel, but no little boy. She looked under the porch, in the woodshed and behind the coal bin, but could not find him.

Then she went to the front door and asked Susie Yates, who was passing, if she had seen Benny on the street. Susie had not seen him, but would go around the corner and look for him. On the way she met Mollie Duke, and the two ran several blocks, and, seeing Billie French and Tommie Davis on bicycles, sent them off in another direction as fast as their wheels could carry them, to help in the hunt. Soon others came along and joined the searching party, and in less time than it takes to write about it, boys and girls were running here and there, around corners, into stores and shops, asking breathlessly, "Have you seen little Benny Gray? He is lost, and we can't find him anywhere."

Mama and Nora had looked through the rooms. Nora was wringing her hands and mama was crying, for she just knew somebody had kidnapped her little boy. Just then baby sister awoke and began to cry, and grandma hurried to the cabinet for the medicine which the doctor had left; and just as she pushed open the bath room door there lay a very sandy little boy, hugging in his arms a very sandy little dog—fast asleep.

The little dog may have been asleep, too, but his shiny black eyes were wide open, for Pinky was not a "sure-enough," but just a stuffed dog.

"Grandma," cried Benny, when he opened his eyes, "I waited and waited for you to call me, and you didn't, so I crept up the back stairs as soft as a little mouse, and waited for you right by the bath tub. Are you ready to give me my bath and my penny?"

And grandma hugged him tight and said she would give him two pennies.—The Child's Gem.

Good Tenants.

We built a little bird house;

'Twas tidy and so strong!

And then we made a little sign:

"The rent is just a song."

Two bluebirds looked it over;

It seemed the finest chance!

They moved right in, and to our joy

They paid us in advance!

HENRY BAYLY MELVIN.

In the recent death of HENRY BAYLY MELVIN, Halifax-County has lost its most widely-known citizen. Coming to the county from the Eastern Shore soon after the War Between the States, Dr. Melvin continuously made Halifax his home.
During all those years he was a prominent and leading figure in the political, social and economic life of the people, until the infirmities of age forced his withdrawal from active participation in public affairs.

Dr. Melvin was a man of strong convictions and of unbending, uncompromising principles. While peculiarly intense and ardent in his mental attitudes, he was yet one of the gentlest and kindesthearted of men. As a Southerner and Virginian he was profoundly loyal and patriotic to the traditions of the South and his native State. It was this phase of his character that first attracted my attention and won my admiration years ago during my youthful days. Somehow he seemed to me to be a perfect type of those chivalric, death-devoted souls who wore the gray. Called to the surgery department of the Confederacy, he devoted his faithful services and high talents in that sphere to the relief of the sick and suffering, and smoothing as far as he could the pathway of the dying to their final rest. But had he been called to active field service with the line of battle troops he would have taken eminent place along with the leaders of that terrible conflict, for he possessed a soul of a fibre as strong and loyal and courageous as any of that brilliant galaxy who have made the Confederate soldier immortal.
In a cavalry charge with Stuart, Ashby or Fitz Lee, or with the guns of Pelham's Artillery, or scouting with Forrest, Mosby or Farley, he would have been in the forefront with cool, untrifled men, a fit companion for those kingly spirits.
This reference is made not to recall bitter memories of those awful days, but because, as I have intimated above, he impressed me with the belief that an inherent quality of nerve, courage and fortitude formed the basis of his full and splendid nature.

It was, however, in his person as physician that he won the unstinted and whole-hearted esteem of the people of Halifax. I doubt if any man ever lived in the county who possessed in a more general and exalted degree the undivided affection of his people. Everybody loved him—old and young, white and colored.
They could not be otherwise, for his life was a continuous blessing to them in ministrations for which in large part he made no claims. Night and day, winter and summer, through sunshine and storm, his familiar form was ever going to homes where his help was needed and which was never refused. Animated by no selfish ambition, by no desire for personal gain, his valuable services were freely given, without ostentation, simply induced by his kind heart and generous impulses.
Towards women Dr. Melvin was the personification of knightly courtesy and chivalrous urbanity and thoughtfulness.
Towards children his manner was distinguished by warm cordiality and a rare gentleness which won an immediate return from their fresh young hearts.

And yet, again, who can forget the cheering influence of his calm, strong face in the sick room, his real personal sympathy for those to whom he ministered, the sacrifices that he made of his time, his means and his health to those involved in the ceaseless and remorseless circle of suffering and want?

Virginia's manhood stands written high upon the roll of virtue, merit and honor, and its splendid brilliance is derived from just such men as Henry Bayly Melvin.

Well do I recall my last meeting with him—his genial face, his kindly greeting, his words of undeserved but gracious compliment about something I had written.
With reverence for the virtues of his most useful life, his memory will be kept green in the hearts of those who knew him.

Peace to his ashes, and may the shadow of the Almighty rest perpetually upon him.

RESOLUTIONS.

Charles Davenport.

At a regular meeting of the vestry of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., held in the rector's study on the evening of Monday, April 7, 1924, the following minute of the death of MR. CHARLES DAVEN-PORT was unanimously adopted, and the registrar was instructed to spread the minute upon the record of the vestry, to send a copy to Mr. Davenport's family, and to publish the same in the Southern Churchman.

In the death of Mr. Charles Davenport, which occurred in Richmond on the 14th day of March, 1924, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, St. Paul's Church has lost one who was one of its most devoted members and who was for many years an efficient and faithful vestryman and treasurer of the church.

Mr. Davenport was a son of the late Isaac Davenport, Jr., and Eliza Nye Allen, his wife, and came of a family that had long been prominent in the social and business life of Richmond, his father having been one of those whose counsel was invaluable in the rebuilding of the city after the "War Between the States" and a man whose name is to this day quoted as the synonym for integrity and helpfulness to others.

Thus, Charles Davenport began his earthly life richly endowed with those traits of character that are the rightful heritage of the nobly born. Himself a child during the youthful period of St.
Paul's, he grew up with this church and, as a boy, was one of those who looked on during the days when heroic events were happening at the very gates of Richmond, and when, in this sanctuary of his people, worshipped men and women whose names were to become a part of the annals of the State. These people and these events he remembered with all the bright enthusiasm of youth, and at times related delightfully the occurrences that rare memory brought to mind—among others the tragic incidents of the day that marked "the fall" of Richmond.

Having had the intellectual advantages of foreign travel and of a home in which the best of literature was provided, Mr.
Davenport in his mature years was a type of the gentleman that is all too rare. He most happily combined his traits of mind and character with a modesty of bearing that, but drew him the more closely to those who had the privilege of being numbered among his more intimate friends.

In his own home, together with his devoted wife, who was Miss Ellen McCaw, of a family of distinction in Richmond, and one long conspicuous in the work of St. Paul's Church, Mr. Davenport dispensed a charming hospitality, and herein his cordiality and conversation gave full expression to the traits that made him greatly beloved by the members of his family and so warmly esteemed by his friends. His passing leaves a vacancy both in his home and in his church that cannot be filled.

In the contemplation of his life well lived, and now in the fullness of years ended, we can but commend his wife and daughters to the sure consolations of the religious faith that has sustained their loved one.

With us grateful memory lingers and bids us, "Be sure they sleep not whom God needs."

RESOLUTIONS.

Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's
Parish adopted the following resolutions upon the death of their beloved father in God, the RT. REV. EDWIN GARDNER
WEED, who passed into life eternal January 18, 1924.

Whereas, our beloved Bishop, after many years of service in the Master's vineyard, years of labor and love in the spreading of Christ's kingdom on earth, and who has now passed into His presence, where there is fullness of joy.

Resolved that in the death of Bishop
Weed the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Parish will miss his loving presence, but will ever cherish his great interest and love in this special branch of the church's work, proving at all times an inspiration to them.

Resolved, that we extend to the members of his family our tenderest love and sympathy.

Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and that a copy also be sent to the bereaved family.

MEMORIAL

Of the Vestry of Grace Church of Richmond to the Late Colonel Eugene C. Massie.

Profoundly sensible of the loss which the vestry of Grace Church has sustained in the death of COLONEL EUGENE C. MASSIE, who died at his home in the city of Richmond in the evening of the fourth day of April, 1924, the members of same desire to record a brief tribute to his memory.

Colonel Massie became a member of this vestry many, many years ago, and continued to hold that position until peace approached and touched him and whispered its soothing message.

Gentle in manner, kindly in thought and deed, beloved by the community in which he lived, Colonel Massie was ever conscious of his duties to his God. His service on this vestry was characterized by that Christian faith which was always his joy in sorrow, his peace amid tumult.

The privilege of associating with him was to learn that humility and love constitute the essence of true religion.

In all the relations of life, as devoted husband and indulgent father, as lawyer and public-spirited citizen, as companion and friend, as a Christian and devout member of the church, the reputation he leaves behind is without blemish.

His earthly career is ended. He has answered, "I am ready," and so into the supernal calm enters the soul of this worthy man.

To him now belongs that "peace which passeth all understanding," and in this vestry there lingers a sense of deep gratitude for the privilege of association with him, for his constructive work as a ward and vestryman of Grace Church, for the life which translated itself into service for the Master, for the conviction that Eugene C. Massie still maintains spiritual touch and contact with those who survive him.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Thomas Costello Johnson, of the Diocese of Long Island, has accepted appointment as curate at old St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, succeeding the Rev. H. B. Satcher.

The Rev. Henry Clay Mitchel last month began his rectorship of St. Mary's, Wayne, coming to Pennsylvania from the Diocese of New Jersey, where he had been rector of Christ Church, South Amboy, since 1918. Mr. Mitchell was ordained deacon in 1912 by Bishop Lines and was advanced to the priesthood in 1913 by Bishop Vincent.

The Rev. J. A. Winterstein, who accepted a call to the rectorship of Holy Trinity, Westchester, Pa., took charge last month. Mr. Winterstein came from the Diocese of Rhode Island.

Bishop Thomas of Wyoming has been touring the Diocese of Los Angeles in the interest of the General Church Program, at the request of the National Council. He addressed gatherings in all the four Convocations of the Diocese and was greeted with splendid attendance.

The Rev. Arthur B. Vossler, who was ordained to the priesthood last December by Bishop Garland, has assumed the rectorship of St. Michael's Church, Birdsboro, Pa., in the Diocese of Bethlehem. Mr. Vossler had been assisting the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Arndt at Christ Church, Germantown, for two years, and is a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

The Rev. E. F. Jillson, of the Diocese of Lexington, has recently been tendered a call to become rector of Holy Trinity Church, Hertford, N. C. Mr. Jillson, who has recently spent some months in Florida, visited this parish on the first Sunday in April.

The address of the Rev. Luther Pardee is 408 Briar Place, Chicago, Ill.

ORDINATIONS.

At St. Peter's Church, Albany, N. Y., on March 15, 1924, the Rt. Rev. Richard H. Nelson, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Alfred John Miller, priest in charge of St. Mark's Church, Philmont. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Charles C. Harriman, and Bishop Nelson preached the sermon. Mr. Miller will continue in charge of the church at Philmont and several associated missions, in all of which places he has been doing a constructive work.

On Wednesday, April 9, in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, the Rt. Rev. W. A. Leonard, Bishop of Ohio, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. David John Griffiths. Preacher, the Rev. Wm. V. Edwards; presenter, the Rev. Canon L. E. Daniels. These, with the Rev. Messrs. F. S. White, J. M. Withycombe and Donald Wonders, took part in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Mr. Griffiths is on the staff of the City Mission of Cleveland.

On the fifth Sunday after the Epiphany, February 10, 1924, at St. Luke's Church, Des Moines, Joseph Snowden was ordered deacon by the Rt. Rev. Harry S. Longley, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese. Mr. Snowden was formerly a Congregational minister. The candidate was presented by the Rev. G. C. Williams, rector of the parish, who also said the Litany. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Edward H. Rudd, D. D.

Mr. Snowden is in charge of the mission work at Garden Grove, Albion, Mystic, and Centerville, Iowa.

On Friday, April 11, 1924, in St. John's Church, Wilmington, N. C., Mr. Sidney E. Matthews was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. John B. Gible, and the candidate presented by the Rev. J. Reginald Mallett.

Mr. Matthews, who has been a student at Du Bose Memorial Training School, Monteagle, Tenn., for the past two years, has been placed in charge of St. George's Parish, Lake Landing, Calvary Mission, Swan Quarter, and All Saints Mission, Fairfield.

Mr. Arthur Cleveland Dodge, a candidate for Orders of the Diocese of Los Angeles, was ordered deacon on Tuesday, March 25, at the Church of St. Augustine-by-the-Sea, Santa Monica, Cal.

DEATHS.

The Rev. John S. Lightbourn died in Georgetown, South Carolina, on Thursday, April 3. The funeral was held in the Church of Prince George, Winyah, of which he had been rector for the past eight years, at four o'clock on Friday, April 4. The services were conducted by the Rev. William A. Guerry, assisted by the Rev. W. S. Poyner, of Florence; the Rev. J. E. H. Galbraith, of Summerton, and the Rev. C. W. Boyd, of Georgetown. Mr. Lightbourn is survived by his wife, two sisters, Miss Lina Lightbourn of Watertown, N. Y., and Miss Estelle Lightbourn, of Brooklyn, and one brother, Hammond Lightbourn, of Bermuda.

The Rev. Walter Woodworth Wells died on March 4, 1924, at Gering, Nebraska. He was born at Villa Nova, Chatauqua County, N. Y., April 17, 1854. For nineteen years he was a faithful and devoted missionary priest in the Missionary District of Western Nebraska. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Worthington in Holy Trinity Church, Schuyler, Neb., and priest in St. Clement's Pro-Cathedral, St. Paul, Minn., by Bishop Edsall, December 17, 1902.

The funeral service was said by Bishop Beecher and Bishop Shaylor at Holy Trinity Church, Schuyler, Neb., on March 8. The interment was in the cemetery at Schuyler.

He is survived by his widow, by two daughters, Mrs. Samuel Green, of Ewing, Neb., and Miss Sarah Wells, of Omaha, Neb., and by one son, Chester Cameron Wells, of Omaha, Neb.

On Saturday, March 29, 1924, occurred the death of the Rev. Samuel Upjohn, D. D., rector-emeritus of St. Luke's Church, Germantown. The burial service was held at St. Luke's Church, on Tuesday, conducted by Bishop Garland.

Dr. Upjohn resigned from St. Luke's last December 2, forty years to the day from the time he took charge there. He built St. Margaret's Home, established St. Luke's Endowment Fund and created an ecclesiastical center at Germantown Avenue and Coulter Street. He celebrated his eighty-second birthday March 23.

A Lent in earnest will contribute mightily to the solving of some of our individual and corporate problems. We cannot move ahead in our present bewildered and confused state. We must have our vision clarified, our zeal quickened, our faith intensified in fine, our religion must become real to us. All these things we may effect if we will make this Lent a season of real and not fancied self-sacrifices; a season of prayer; of waiting upon Him in Whom we live, and move and have our being. —Bishop Freeman.

When you and I reach the glory land we shall be going on to learn the depth of meaning in being saved. A happy people, for they were wonderfully loved; a happy people because they were perfectly saved. —Charles Inglis.
